You say, "We now come down to New Testament times, and we see the law of Ten Commandments, of which the Sabbath is a part, stands to convince and convert Paul of sin: after Christ had ascended to heaven." This is a bold assumption. "Yes," says the Savior, "make void the commandments of God by your traditions." Talk about the Ten Commandments converting Paul! That is nonsense. "How evident thou?" Paul was raised a "Pharisee after the strictest sect," and was "zealous of the law," and was of course a strict Sabbatarian before the appearance of the "Just One"—a keeper of the law: and therefore, according to your own statement, was not a sinner" for you say, that sin is the transgression of the law of the Ten Commandments. How then did the Ten Commandments convert Paul? Let him speak. He says, "I was alive without the law once." Now I ask in all candor, Was this the law of Ten Commandments that he was without once? If so, then it was not binding on him then! Here then was an instance where the law was not binding on all men! Here you virtually evaporate to the fort. "Stack arms!" But Paul continues and says, "But when the Commandment came, sin revived and I died." Was this the fourth Commandment? Sabbatarians unblushingly would answer yes. Then we reply: how could it be the the fourth Commandment, when he, as a Pharisee, was zealous of, and keeping the law, of "which the Sabbath forms a part?" We ask again what law was this of which Paul speaks? It is evident that is not, the, so-called, Decalogue. Why? For, first, he had been born and bred under that law, for he belonged, and composed a part of that nation, to whom that law was given; therefore, was never "without it." And, second, he had been and was then, (before he believed the gospel,) a zealous defender of that law, as he testifies. Therefore, it could not be said of that law, that "the Commandment came" to him. And, third, we answer the question direct, that that law was the law of Christ, and that the Commandment that came was from the Lord Jesus Christ: "Saul, Saul why persecutest thou me?" "Arise and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do." Was keeping the Ten Commandments among the all things appointed for him to do? You, and every other Sabbatarian, know that it was not. See Acts ix. 17, 18. This was the Commandment that came to Paul and killed him, as a Jew; for he says, "I fell to the earth" (as one dead) "but rise and stand upon thy feet," says Jesus of Nazareth, "for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose; to make thee a minister"—of the Ten Commandments? Oh, no. But "a minister, and a witness both of these things which thou has seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people (the Jews,) and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee."

And Ananias, being instructed in a dream, says; "Brother Saul.....the God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will." It is very singular that Paul, bred and born an Israelite, of the tribe of Benjamin, did not know the will of God, when Sabbatarians know it so well! Say they, "It is moral law, moral law! Decalogue, Ten Commandments, the Holy Sabbath!" etc. But Ananias continues and says, "shouldest know his will and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth," (saying keep the moral law, especially the Holy Sabbath?) No, nothing of the kind. But, Thou shalt be his witness unto all (both Jew and Gentile) men." The law was not to all men; i. e., both Jew and Gentile; but only to Israel. But the gospel is for all men, i. e., both Jew and Gentile. No wonder then that Paul died when such a Commandment came. But Ananias continues: Shalt be a witness unto both Jew and Gentile "of what thou hast seen and heard—arise now and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." But Sabbatarians say: "Keep the Sabbath and die to sin." Says Paul, "If I build again that which I once destroyed; I make myself a transgressor." Now we ask, a transgressor of what? You answer, "a transgressor of the law of Ten Commandments." But did Paul once destroy the Ten Commandments? Was that the Commandment that came to Paul? to destroy the Ten Commandmental? No wonder it killed him, or rather "converted him" as you put it. Which horn will you take?

JEHOVAH THE LIVING GOD.

The most sublime and influential of all truths is before us, the foundation of all substance, of all morality, and of all religion. The stars which have no visible pillars are held by the hand of God, the everlasting rocks and great mountain ranges have no strength of their own, but all stand fast in God. It is in him that we live, and move, and have our being. If his sustaining power were taken away, not only would nature perish, but man, the lord thereof, would meet destruction in the same ruin. The heathen philosophers, though they had gleams of the Supreme One, all stuck fast in matter, believing in its eternity—independent of the gods. A Christian child is wiser than an ancient sage, for he receives by faith that "in the beginning God created the heaven and the earth," originating the matter and impressing the form by his formative and plastic hand. The Jews, by special supernatural training, knew this when it was hidden from such thinkers as Plato, and from all the nations so radiant in mental power and wide resources. One Jew said to the people—"Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things, that bringeth out their host by number: He calleth them all by names by the greatness of his might, for that he is strong in power; not one faileth." (Isaiah xl. 26). When once the idea of God reaches the human mind, all things within and without bear combined testimony and evidence. The great philosopher, Kant, in a memorable passage said, that two things impressed him profoundly—the starry heavens without, and the moral law within. All thoughtful men can confirm the truth and force of the remark. As the glorious mechanism of nature involves plan and design, calling for an intelligent person—a stupendous mind—so the consciences looks back to a righteous person whose nature is the deep foundation of all the moral law. We say the nature, because the will of God which is accepted by believers as the rule of action, is only forcible and powerful because it is the exposition and declaration of his essential nature. The nature of a being perfect in holiness, is the deep and sure foundation of all moral distinctions. All life and law, all matter and motion and forces, all beauty and order proceed from him who lifteth up his hand to the heavens, saying—I live for ever. Moses knew that he might be driven from the gates of Egypt as a shameless impostor, unless he carried some reasonable account concerning the Being who sent him, as he was to ask for the freedom of the men who were doing all the rough work of the monarchy. "Who shall I say sent me?" "Say that I am' sent thee;" He is, and in the absolute sense, he only is. Spirits and men like shadows may come and go, but he is from eternity to eternity; the undesired, self-existant, and everlasting One. This brings us to the celebrated passage of Paul in his charge to Timothy, which cannot be quoted in a fragmentary manner without spoiling it. "I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ: which in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and holy Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords. Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen nor can see; to whom be honor and power everlasting. Amen." (1 Tim. vi. 13-16). Immortality, then, is one of the attributes of God, He alone hath it, absolute and underived. All other beings are finite and dependent, and if ever they share in his immortality, it must be by his sovereign and gracious gift. Whether he gives it in their constitution, or makes it depend upon moral and spiritual elevation, we can only learn from the record of his will. One thing is certain—that which has a beginning may have an end—that which begins to be may cease to be—unless God wills otherwise. There is not a more foolish argument in existence, than the common one in theological schools—immaterial, ergo immortal. We deny the ergo, for whatever God made, God can destroy, whether it be matter or spirit. We are not to fear him or them who can only kill the body, but we are to fear him who can destroy both body and soul in hell. The passage flashes like a two-edged sword, cutting down naked materialism on one side, and immortal soulism on the other. The will of God on this, on all cognate matters, must be gathered from his record with reverence. He that hath a dream let him tell his dream, but what is the chaff to the wheat. "Is not My word like a fire and a hammer to break the rock in pieces?" No harm in the human to have a dream, or to tell it; but it is chaff after all. The word of the Lord is the revealing fire discovering and consuming, and the hammer which descends with tremendous force upon buildings of evil and refuges of lies.—From "The Approaching End of all Evil," by C. Greenwell, Adelaide, S. A.

Miscellaneous.

The word "zareba" imported from Egypt since the opening of the campaign against El Mahdi, means a barricade hastily constructed with army wagons, baggage, brush, etc. Probably our American earthworks meet the idea as nearly as anything.

The revised edition of the Old Testament will be issued to the public on May 1. American book publishers have offered as high $5,000 for single advance prints. The orders for the Revised Old Testament already exceed those secured before publication for the revised edition of the New Testament.

The Jewish community in the city of Vienna is profoundly agitated over the abduction and conversion of a beautiful Jewish maiden named Rachel Stielitz. Two years ago the girl disappeared. A vigilant search for her was instituted by the police and the maiden's family, but no trace of her could be found. The other day, after her parents had been for some time mourning her as dead, they were thunderstruck by the receipt of a letter stating that their daughter was in a certain Catholic convent and was about to take the veil. The letter was signed by Rachel herself, who begged to be released from a life which she described as one of captivity. The authorities have been consulted, and have determined to interfere for the recovery of the girl.

THE MAHDI ON THE ENGLISH.

"Never fear the English," the Mahdi said last year. "Do not waste a shot upon those the sun of the desert will destroy: they will perish before the wrath of God without our aid." After we have perished this is his programme as revealed in his latest manifesto: "I am resolved to carry the sword, first from Khartoum to Berber. Thence I shall proceed to Dongola, Cairo and Alexandria, restoring Moslem rule and government in all these cities. From Egypt I shall march to the Land of the Prophet to drive out the Turks, whose government is no better than that of the infidels, and I shall restore the land of Arabia, with its two sacred cities, to Islam." And in the face of such a programme our wise men are chattering about financial agreements, and our scribes are glibly talking about withdrawing troops from the Soudan to fight the Czar. Quos Deus vult perdere, etc.—Pall Mall Gazette.

POPULATION OF THE SOUDAN.

It is estimated that there are 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 of inhabitants in the Egyptian Soudan, which has an area of 2,500,000 square miles, and comprises a vast amount of fertile land along the Nile and its tributaries. Three millions of these people are Arabs and their kindred, while the remaining 9,000,000 are of the negro race. All the Arabs are Moslems, and many of the negro tribes have adopted the religion of Mecca, and are faithful followers of the Prophet. The Pagan negroes have united with the Arabs in the effort to drive out the Egyptians, and, though their religions are unlike, they have a common interest in ridding themselves of oppression. Most of the Arab tribes are on the eastern side of the Nile, while most of the negroes are on the western. Between the Nile and the Red Sea are the tribes whence come the men of Osman Digna's army, now in front of the Suakim, while along the valley and to the west are the people who flock to the Mahdi's standard. Out of a population of 12,000,000 of people, animated by religious zeal, and smarting under the cruelties of their recent masters, it is easily possible for the Mahdi to raise an army of 200,000 men. The wonder is not that Khartoum fell so soon, but that it was able to hold out so long. The theory is certainly very plausible that the Mahdi could have captured it long ago if he wished, but he refrained from doing so until the British army had come too far into the Soudan to be able to retreat.

JEWISH CHRISTIANS.

Mr. Finny at Mossurra, Egypt, conducts a Sunday-school of Jews, Copts, Tyrian and Mohammedans, twenty-six girls and thirty-one boys, with ten full-grown men. It is only two years old, but its members have already made great progress in committing Scripture to memory and in learning to sing. One of the teachers holds a prayer-meeting for the elder girls on Wednesday afternoons, which is very well attended, as is also a Bible-class for young men, open to all, however, on Thursday evenings. The attendance of Jewish children at the Sunday-schools in southeastern Europe seems to be greatly on the increase. In many localities it is evident that this interesting people feel that nothing but Christianity can save and elevate their race. So strong has this feeling become at Lemburg in Galicia that the Jewish inhabitants, without in any degree renouncing their nationality or their Old Testament religion, have accepted Christ as their Messiah and petitioned to be allowed to build a Jewish Christian church.—N. Y. Observer.

Last Struggle of Mohammedanism.

Referring to affairs in the Soudan, and the reported advance of the Mahdi with forty thousand men, the London Rock remarks: "The end of the Mohammedan rebellion is not likely to come just yet. If the records of prophetic announcements are to be taken into consideration, it would seem that this movement is the last expiring effort of the followers of the false prophet who has for centuries exorcised such sway over the eastern population. If prophecy be interpreted according to the views of Bishop Newton and men of his school, it would appear that Popery and Mohammedanism are to lose their temporal power before the time of the end. This revolution looks very like the final break-up of Mohammedan power. Our rulers had evidently a very insufficient knowledge of the programme of the future in Egypt, judging from the rash promises as to the almost immediate withdrawal of our troops from that country after the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. There seems every probability that England is destined to play a very conspicuous part in this African campaign. It is very doubtful if she will ever leave Egypt without the occupation of our troops. In fact, England will probably be compelled to establish a protectorate over that country."

Conference Notice.

The first quarterly session of the A. C. Conference of north western Pa., will be held with the church at Geneva, Pa., commencing Friday, April 17, and continue over Sunday. The church cordially invite all who believe that the return of "the Nobleman" is near at hand to be present and be benefitted by the meetings.

THE OLD EARTH.

Old Mother Earth is wan and pale,
Her face is o'ershaded sore;
Her locks are blanched, her heart is cold,
Her garments stiff with gore;
With furrowed brow and dim red eyes,
With trembling steps and slow,
She marks the course that first she trod,
Six thousand years ago.

The Earth is old, the Earth is cold,
She shivers and complains;
How many winters here and chill
Have racked her limbs with pains!
Dread tempests, lightning, flood and flame
Have scarred her visage o'er,
That scarce we deem she chose to fair
Six thousand years ago!

Yet calmly was the youthful Earth,
And light skipped along
To music from a starry choir,
Whose sweet celestial song
Through Nature's temple echoed still,
And rolled in melodies flow,
Where'er the spheres replied with her,
Six thousand years ago!

And many happy children there
Upon her breast revelled,
For you the earth made such repast fair.
The heavens were bright and kind;
The azure copse where he
In love poems breathed here
Oh happy was the youthful Earth,
Six thousand years ago!

But those children of the Earth
Who sang in her lap,
And Murder stalked her boundaries sobre
And hide the young Earth's wombs.
And ages, long ages, still
Have flowed with sorrowing woe
The sons of her whose life was for,
Six thousand years ago!

Oh Earth! dreary Earth! thy tender heart
Beneath thy cheek seems
Then locked up for the dead's dark
That hide their scattered bones;
For them, by day and night, thy tears
Unceasingly have flow;
Death chilled the fountain seat of life
Six thousand years ago!

Old Earth! Old Earth! above thy head
The heavens are dark and chill,
The sun looks coldly on thee now,
The stars shine pale and still;
No more the heavenly symphonies
Through listening ether flow,
Which swelled upon creation's ear,
Six thousand years ago!

Weep not in bitter grief, O Earth!
Weep not in hopelessness!
From out the heavens a still, small voice
Whispers returning peace.
Thy tears are precious in the sight
Of One who marks their flow,
Who purposed mercy formed,
Six thousand years ago!

Thy days of grief are numbered all,
Their term will soon be told:
The joy of youth, the smile of God,
Shall bless thee as of old;
Shall shed a power, holier light,
Upon thy peaceful brow,
Than beamed upon thy morning hour
Six thousand years ago!

Thy chosen ones shall live again,
A countless, fearless throng,
To wake creation's voice anew,
And swell the choral song.
Oh, Earth! go wipe thy falling tears,
Forget thy heavy woe:
Hope died not with thy first-born sons,
Six thousand years ago!

THE LOST ARTS.

The following is an epitome of Mr. Oliver Wendell Philips's most interesting lecture upon the above subject, to which I have appended certain thoughts it has suggested:

"We seem to imagine that, whether knowledge will die with us or not, it certainly began with us. We have a pitying estimate of, a tender pity, for the narrowness, ignorance, and darkness of the bygone ages. We seem to ourselves, not only to monopolize, but to have begun the era of light.

"The most objectionable feature of character is self-conceit—an undue appreciation of ourselves, an exaggerated estimate of our achievements, our inventions, our contributions to popular comfort. I might venture to claim for the glimpse I shall give of early civilization, that they are a medicine for curing us of boasting.

"Take the subject of glass. This, Pliny says, was discovered by accident. Some sailors, landing on the eastern coast of Spain, took their cooking utensils and supported them on the sand by the stones they found in the neighborhood. They kindled their fire, cooked their fish, finished their meal, removed their apparatus and lo, glass was found to have resulted from the nitre and sea-sand vitrified by the heat. A dozen times have I been criticised by a number of wise men, who have said that this was a very idle tale; that there never was sufficient heat in a few bundles of sticks to produce vitrifaction.

"But happening two years ago to meet on the prairies of Missouri, Professor Shepherd, I mentioned this criticism to him. 'Well,' said he, 'a little practical life would have freed men from that doubt. We stopped last year in Mexico to cook some venison. We put the cooking apparatus on stones we found there, and then made our fire with wood we got there, resembling ebony; and when we removed the apparatus, there was pure silver gotten out of the embers by the intense heat of that almost iron wood. That heat was greater than any necessary to vitrify the materials of glass.' Why disbelieve Pliny's sailors? why not suppose they [illegible] some exceedingly hot wood? May it not be so possible as in this case?

"So, with growing distrust of a large share of this modern scientific criticism of ancient records, I think we have been betraying our own ignorance, and that frequently. When the statement does not look on the face of it exactly accurate, a little investigation below the surface will shew that it rests on real truth. Take for instance the proverb often quoted in my college days: we used to think how little logic the unlearned people had, and when we wanted to illustrate this it was what was call'd a non sequitur—the effect did not come from the cause it was made to follow. Our example was always the old English proverb, 'Sing Tenterden's steeple is the cause of Goodwin Sands;' of which we used to say, How ignorant must they have been who coined such an unreasonable lie.' But when we were deeper in the history of this, we found that the proverb was not meant for logic, but for sarcasm. One of the bishops intended to have to build a breakwater against the advancing sea, but the good bishop, instead of building the breakwater built a steeple. Considered as a sarcasm, there is the closest and most veiled logic in 'Tenterden's Steeple is the cause of Goodwin Sands.' A large share of our criticism of old legends and old statements will, I think, rest in this same be found in the end to be the ignorance that overleaps its own saddle and falls on the other side.

"Claiming credit for novelties, nevertheless, in every matter that relates to invention, to use or beauty or form, we are borrowers. The Duchess of Burgundy took a necklace from a mummy, wore it at a ball given in the Tuileries, and everybody said 'it was the newest thing there!' You may glance around the furniture of the palaces in Europe, and when you have fixed the shapes and forms in your mind, I will take you into the museums of Naples, which gathers all remains of the domestic life of the Romans, and you shall not find a single one of those modern forms of art and beauty and use that was not anticipated. We have added hardly one single line or scrap of beauty to the antique.

"Take the stories of Shakespeare. Some are historical. The rest—two-thirds of them—he did not stop to invent, he found them. These he plundered from the Italian novelists, who had taken them from the East. Cinderella and her slipper is older than all history, like half-a-dozen other baby legends. The annals of the old world do not go back far enough to tell us whence they first came. Everything that amuses the child in the open air is Asiatic. Rawlinson will shew you that it came from banks of the Ganges, or the suburbs of Damascus. Bulwer borrowed the the incidents of his Roman stories from legends of 1,000 years before. The novels of Walter Scott—3,000 years before his day—were the popular tales of Eastern Asia. Indeed, Dunloch—who has grouped the history of the novels of all Europe into one essay—says, that in the nations of modern Europe there have been only 250 or 300 distinct stories. He says at least 200 of these may be traced, before Christianity, to the other side of the Black Sea. Even the most commonly quoted Irish bulls are [illegible] every one of them.

"To return to the subject of glass. You see that we have seen [illegible] served [illegible] which could be called by the name of glass; and I thought the position had been proved.

"But in Pompeii, which was covered with ashes by Vesuvius 1800 years ago, they broke into a room full of glass: ground-glass, window-glass, cut glass of every variety. It was undoubtedly a glass-maker's factory. So the lie and the refutation came face to face. It has been found that the chemistry of the most ancient period had reached a point we have never even approached, and which we in vain struggle to reach to-day. Indeed, the whole management of the effect of light on glass is still a matter of profound study. I offer two stories from history, the one in justification of this statement: the other bearing upon the subject of malleable glass.

"The first is from the letters of the Catholic priests who broke into China. These were published in France 200 years ago. It appears they were shown a glass transparent and colorless, which was filled with a liquor made by the Chinese: a liquor clear, like water. This liquor was poured into the glass, and then, looking through, it seemed to be filled with fishes. They repeated the experiment, with the same result. The Chinese confessed, of this glass, and of others like it, that they did not make them—they were among the plunder of some former conquest.

"[illegible] to the subject of glass, that we have seen [illegible] served [illegible] which could be called by the name of glass; and I thought the position had been proved.

"Tiberius—the time of St. Paul—and tells of a Roman who had been banished and who returned to Rome bringing with him a wonderful cup. This cup he dashed upon the marble pavement, and it was crushed, not broken, by the fall. It was dented somewhat, and with a hammer he easily brought it into shape again. It was brilliant, transparent, but not brittle.

"The Romans got their chemistry from the Arabians. They brought it from Asia eight centuries ago; and [illegible] that age claim, that they got from the Arabians malleable glass. In their books there is a kind of glass [illegible] which, if supported by one coat, would, by its own weight dwindle down in twenty hours to a fine line, and you could curve it around your finger.

"Von Beust, the Chancellor of Austria, has ordered scarcely throughout Hungary in regard to a recently discovered process by which glass can be [illegible] exactly like wool, and manufactured into cloth.

"At Rome, they will show you a bit of glass, transparent, a solid thing, which they lift up so as to make evident that there is nothing concealed: but in the center of this glass is a drop of colored glass, perhaps as large as a pea, mottled like a duck—finely mottled with the shifting-colored hues of the neck, in which even a miniature pencil could not do more perfectly. It is manifest that this drop of liquid glass must have been poured, because there is no joint. This must have been done by a greater heat than the annealing process, for that process shows breaks.

"Cicero said he had seen the entire 'Iliad'—a poem as large as the New Testament—written on skin, so that it could be rolled up in the compass of a nutshell, which involves that the writing must have been imperceptible by the ordinary eye.

"I have a paper as long as half my hand on which was photographed the whole contents of a London newspaper. It was put under a dove's wing, and sent into Paris, where they enlarged it and read the news. The copy of the "Iliad," to which Cicero refers, must have been made by some such process.

"In the Roman Colosseum—which could seat 100,000 persons—the Emperor's box was on the highest tier. Pliny says that Nero had a ring with a gem in it through which he looked, and watched the sword-play of the gladiators more carefully than with the naked eye. So Nero had an opera-glass.

"Mauritius, the Sicilian, stood on the promontory of his island, and, with the aid of something which served him as a powerful magnifying glass, could sweep over the entire sea to the coast of Africa. Evidently Mauritius—who was a pirate—had a marine telescope.

"In Dr. Abbot's museum you may see the ring of Cheops. The signet of the ring is about the size of a quarter of a dollar, and the engraving upon it is, without the aid of glasses, invisible. No man was ever shown into the cabinets of gems in Italy without being furnished with a microscope to look through; it would be idle to attempt inspection without one, for the unassisted eye could not appreciate the delicate lines and expressions of the faces. If you go to Parma, they will show you a gem once worn on the finger of Michael Angelo, the engraving upon which is 2,000 years old. This engraving is of the figures of seven women; and you must have the aid of a glass in order to distinguish the forms at all. I have a friend who has a ring, about three quarters of an inch in diameter, whereupon is engraved the naked figure of Hercules. By the aid of glasses you can distinguish the interlacing muscles, and count every separate hair on the eyebrows. Layard says he would be unable to read the engravings on Nineveh without strong spectacles—they are so extremely small. Rawlinson brought home a stone, about 20 inches by 10, containing an entire treatise on mathematics; but perfectly illegible without the aid of glasses. The man, therefore, who engraved this stone must have had pretty strong spectacles. So the microscope, instead of dating from our time, finds its brothers in the books of Moses. Our microscopes are infant brothers.

"Now take colors. Color is, we say, an ornament to gratify the eye; but with the Egyptians it was made a method of recording history. Parts of their history were written, but when they wanted to elaborate history they painted it. We find upon the stucco of their walls, kings holding court, armies marching out, craftsmen in the shipyard, ships floating in the dock—in fact, we trace all their rites and customs painted in undying colors. The French who went to Egypt with Napoleon, said that all the colors were [illegible] except one, the greenish-white. The Egyptians had no difficulty with that color, which moderns cannot make enduring—the Tyrian purple—though, as to purple, you can never rely upon the name of a color after 1,000 years. The Tyrian purple is almost a red.

"The buried city of Pompeii was a city of stucco; all the houses were stucco outside, and all stained with Tyrian purple, the royal color of antiquity. This is a city of all red. It has been buried 1,700 years; yet if you take a shovel now and clear away the ashes, this color flames up upon you richer, a great deal, than anything we can now produce.

"You can go down into the narrow vault which Nero built as a retreat from the great heat, and you will find the walls painted all over with fanciful designs in arabesque. These have been buried beneath the earth for 1,800 years; but when the peasants light them up with their torches, the colors flash out as fresh as in the days of St. Paul.

"Come down from Titian—whose colors are unimpaired—to Sir Joshua Reynolds; and, although Reynold's colors are not yet 100 years old, they are fading. He did not know how to mix well.

"All this mastery of color by the ancients is as yet unequalled. The Frenchman says: 'I am the best dyer in Europe, none can equal me, and nobody can surpass Lyons.' Yet in Cashmere they will show him 300 distinct colors, which he not only cannot make, but cannot even distinguish.

"From colors turn to metals. The Bible in its earlier chapters, shows that man first manufactured from metals in Asia; and, strange to say, still do Asiatics work more wonders with metals than we can. One of the surprises Europeans received, when the English plundered the summer-palace of the Emperor of China was, that the curiously-wrought metal vessels of every kind far exceeded all the boasted skill of the workmen of Europe.

"The London Medical and Surgical Journal advises surgeons not to venture to carry lancets to Calcutta without having them, in the first instance, gilded; because English steel could not bear the atmosphere of India. Yet the Damascus blades of the Crusades were not gilded, and they are as perfect, now as they were eight centuries ago. There was one at the London Exhibition, the point of which could be made to touch the hilt, and which could be put into a scabbard like a corksorew and bent every way without breaking.

"The wonder of this is, that perfect steel is a marvel of science. But if a London chronometer-maker wants the best steel, he does not send to Sheffield—the centre of all science—but to the Punjaub where there is no science at all.

"The first needle ever made in England was made in the time of Henry VIII., and made by a negro; and when he died, the art died with him.

"Some of the first travellers in Africa stated that they found a tribe in the interior who gave them better razors than they had.

"All this is exceedingly astounding, considering that with us the best steel is the greatest triumph of metallurgy—the glory of chemistry.

"Even the poets have celebrated the perfection of the Oriental steel; which is recognised as the finest by, among others, Moore, Byron, Scott, and Southey. George Thompson told me he saw a man in Calcutta throw a handful of floss silk into the air, and a Hindoo sever it into pieces with his sabre. We can produce nothing that would do the like of this.

"A word about mechanics. The Egyptians employed the mechanical forces, and moved by their means large masses from the earth. We know they had three, or five, of the seven mechanical powers, but we cannot account for the multiplication and increase necessary to the performance of the wonders they accomplished.

"Take canals. The Suez Canal absorbs half its receipts in clearing out the sand which fills it continually, and it is not yet known whether or not it is a pecuniary success. The ancients built a canal at right angles to ours, because they knew it would not fill up if built in that direction, and they knew that such a one as ours would. There were magnificent canals in the land of the Jews, with perfectly-arranged gates and sluices.

"We have only just begun to understand ventilation for our houses; yet late explorations in the pyramids of Egypt show that these Egyptian tombs were ventilated in the most perfect scientific manner.

"Again; cement is modern. The ancients dressed and jointed their stones so perfectly and closely that in buildings thousand of years old the thin blade of a penknife cannot be forced between them.

"The railroad, too, dates back to Egypt. Arago claims that the Egyptians had a knowledge of steam-power. A painting has been discovered of a ship full of machinery, and a French engineer said that the arrangement of this machinery could only be accounted for by supposing the motive-power to have been steam.

"Bramah acknowledges that he took the idea of his celebrated lock from an ancient Egyptian pattern.

"Benjamin Franklin was not the only one that knew of the presence of electricity, and of the advantages to be derived from the use of a lightning-rod. Solomon's temple was situated on an exposed point of the hill whereupon it was built. This temple—so lofty that it was often in peril—was guarded by a system exactly like that of Benjamin Franklin's.

"Concerning manufactures. A Hindoo princess came to court, and her father, seeing her said: 'Go home, you are not decently covered, go home.' 'Father,' she replied, 'I have seven suits on!' But the suits were of muslin, so thin that the king could see through them.

"Four hundred and fifty years ago the first spinning-machine was introduced into Europe; I have evidence to show that it had made its appearance in the world 2,000 years before.

"Well, I have given these facts, a few of many like ones, in proof of my statement that perhaps we do not invent just everything. Of the hundreds of things we know I can show that ninety-nine out of every hundred have been anticipated."

Mr. Philips's delightful lecture enforces that "there is no new thing under the sun." Not even Mr. Philips's lecture: the gist of which was given by King Solomon, nearly 3,000 years ago.

When Solomon asked, "Is there anything whereof it may be said, See, this is new?" and when, in answer to his own question, he replied, "It hath been already of old time," he had previously shown that stale novelties would be coming to the front as fresh ones, ago after ago, so long as the earth should remain—"The thing that hath been it is that which shall be, and that which is done is that which shall be done" Eccles. i. 9, 10.

Modern men may claim to be the inventors of new things; but Solomon's words and Mr. Philips's group of facts, depriving these things of their alleged newness, send us back and back until the claims of man to have been their originator suddenly fall confounded; and then there is only God to whom new things can possibly be attributed. Let me illustrate this:—

Man wears clothing. Who first put him in the way of contriving it? The Lord God, who made Adam and his wife "coats of skins."

Man cultivates the ground. Who first taught him agriculture? The Lord God, who took His newly-made creature, man, "and put him into the garden of Eden to dress and to keep it;" not without instructions what to do and how to do it, surely?

Who so informed man in natural history as to qualify him for naming appropriately "every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air?" Who could have done so but the Lord God? When this event occurred it was too early for man to have been self-informed.

Who endowed man with language, and with power of understanding the meanings of words? The Lord God; or how could Adam and Eve, so soon as God had made them, have comprehended when he said unto them, "Be fruitful and multiply?" and further said what the newly-made pair were to eat and not eat?

Cain "builded a city," large or small—mean or splendid—no matter. How came he at this beginning of times sufficiently conversant with practical architecture to be able to do so?

How came Jabal, about A. M. 550, qualified for teaching the arts of tent-making and cattle-keeping?

How came Jubal, at the same time, fitted to give instruction in instrumental music? and how came men, but 559 years created, to have "harps and organs?"

How came Tubal-Cain, at the same time, to be able to explain all about working up "brass and iron?"

How came Noah, about A. M. 1606, to be equal to making an enormous and sea-worthy ship?

Unless the men who did and taught these things were first instructed by him who educated Adam and Eve, there are no adequate answers to these questions. We know the slow rate at which knowledge "grows from more to more;" but that rate must have been immeasurably slower in the first instance if, as is claimed, knowledge began with men—was self-acquired—If they had no knowledge in any matter to start from, improve upon, add to.

Have we any hint that with God originated the things we proudly claim as our inventions? I think we have. The Lord God both walked and talked with the earliest men,—notably with Adam, Cain, Enoch, Noah; and when he ceased from being such a Presence among them as Adam saw, still, by means of various other arrangements, he kept up personal intercourse with Abraham, Moses, David, Solomon—in fact, with the chosen men of old from Abraham's day to John's.

When, "rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth," Elohim's "delights were with the sons of men," He it was who "found out knowledge of witty inventions." He it was who counselled men to hearken unto him, to hear instruction and refuse it not (Prov. viii. 12-33).

Man's early proficiency cannot, I think, be satisfactorily accounted for otherwise than by supposing he was schooled, and that his instructor was the only One who could have schooled him, viz., God Himself, manifested in the visible Elohim.

True, this view humbles human self-sufficiency in the dust; but, if man has nothing to be proud of, the dust is its proper place. In such case the haughtiness of man deserves to be brought low.

In Moses's time Egyptian greatness had reached, so many think, its meridian. But from the Deluge to Moses was only about 800 years; and had Egypt, supposing such their own instructors, time to rise in 800 years from nothing to the height of grandeur generally attributed? All experiences are against the supposition: for even we, in this nineteenth century of grace, fall far short of matching Egyptian achievements. Their textile fabrics, if all said about them be true, were superior to any we can make—so were their colors, and so were many other things whereof relics remain.

No, we cannot, to please certain Egyptologists without a chronology, begin with Egypt further back than the deluge. The Deluge, according to the Scriptures, was not small and partial, but universal:—"The world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished:" "All the hills under the whole heaven were covered, and the mountains were covered: and all flesh died that moved upon the earth;" only "eight souls were saved." And the Scriptures are confirmed by seashells on mountain-tops the wide world over. Therefore, after the Deluge—Egypt.

The rise of Egypt, in 800 years, to that greatness which we know was reached, is perfectly unaccountable, unless it be allowed that the knowledge and skill exhibited came of God, and not of men. Trace back the teachings, by which the Egyptians profited, to the garden of Eden and its neighborhood, to the instructions first imparted by Elohim, then all is clear, and there is nothing wonderful about the proficiency shown.

That God should have condescended to be man's instructor in arts, sciences, manufactures, and industries, at the very commencement of the human career—when instruction was most needed—is by no means improbable; indeed, taking account of what happened afterwards, it is in the highest degree likely.

Consider the tabernacle in the wilderness. Was this to the glory of man's skill. No, but of God's. Observe:—"And Moses said unto the children of Israel, See, the Lord hath called Bezaleel, . . . and hath filled him with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, and understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship; and to devise curious works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in the cutting of stones to set them, and in carving of wood to make any manner of cunning work. And he hath put in his heart that he may teach—both he and Aholiab. Them hath he filled with wisdom of heart, to work all manner of work, of the engraver, and of the cunning workman, and of the embroiderer, in blue, and in purple, in scarlet, and in fine linen, and of the weaver, of them that do any work, and of those that devise cunning work. Then wrought Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise-hearted man, in whom the Lord put wisdom and understanding to know how to work all manner of work for the service of the sanctuary, according to all that the Lord had commanded" (Exod xxxv. 30-35; xxxvi. 1).

And as with the Tabernacle, so afterwards with the Temple. David gave Solomon the patterns of all things to be fashioned, saying to him: "All this the Lord made me to understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern" (1 Chron. xxviii. 11-19).

Mr. Philips has taken the credit for inventions from modern men, and given it to the ancients. But I think some has been shown for its being taken from the ancients, and given even to God Himself; in other words, to Elohim (Christ, in another form), the Manifester to men of that Deity it would have been instant death to them had they looked upon him in his unveiled glory.

These remarks, however, are not intended to do anything beyond directing attention to a matter which, considering what it involves, is extremely important.

"They mean God's power, wherever seen;
And so I'm sung to do no more."

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXIV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 22, 1885. NO. 16.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR. Payable always. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the true "restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead, the immortalization of the righteous, and the "aionian" destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a healthy life of the Gospel, repentance, and remission of sins, and such life as is essential for the salvation.

Losing One's Soul. The Covenant Loss and Gain.

There is perhaps no passage of Scripture that so clearly teaches the fact and fundamental conditions of man's covenant relation to God as the following: Matt. xvi. 24-26, inclusive.

And yet there is no passage that has been more misapprehended and perverted from its true meaning by religious teachers. Let us review it and see. Verse 24. Then said Jesus unto his disciples If any one purposeth to come after me, let him deny himself utterly and take up his cross and follow me.

25. For whoever shall have purposed to save his life will lose it, but whoever shall have lost it for my sake will find it.

26. For what will it have profited a man, of he shall have gained the whole cosmos, and have paid his life as the price of it? Or what exchange for his life will a man compel unto?

As the reader will observe, the whole language of this teaching is the language of bargain and sale. It is the language of a contract or covenant that a man may enter into or not, and there are at the least two parties to it, commonly denominated parties of the first and second part, and as we learn from clear and matter-of-fact teaching elsewhere in the Scriptures, God is that party of the first, and man, the generic man, the party of the second part. Then as in all bargains under consideration, loss or gain is the point in issue. Do this and you have a more or less reasonable expectation of gain, do not do it and you have a more or less reasonable expectation of loss. The loss or gain in this case is life, individual, personal life. It is a question of life or death. The most that can be lost in any case is this individual personal life, and the argument is that if you lose this you lose everything. For the possession of the whole world (cosmos) or any part of it, presupposes a possession of the individual life in which to enjoy it. The life therefore includes in importance all that can possibly belong to it. Now the possibility of gain here in question and under consideration cannot therefore be what every individual son of Adam has already, or anything that such a person can naturally acquire or become possessed of.

The natural life laid down would necessarily be an abnegation of all that can possibly belong to the natural, and to this all the Scriptures agree, namely, that the natural life, "the soul" "the flesh" alloyed as it is with the Adamic sin, is base coin and cannot be exchanged for anything spiritual, in fact will not pass current in "the spiritual kingdom" or "the heavenly kingdom" or "the kingdom of heaven." But it does pass current in this cosmos, and it is the best possession that any one has, and therefore very appropriately is it herein urged as a final argument to show the importance and intrinsic value of that which God is offering in exchange to every one who hath ears to hear the gospel call. And this is the rational of the argument. You (any Adamic man) have your individual allotment of the Adamic or natural life. Will you coolly and dispassionately content to exchange it for anything in this world? (this cosmos or order of things?) Why of course not. "All that a man hath will he give for his life," unless he is a natural-born fool or insane. In the very words of our text, "or what exchange for one's life (not "soul," "immortal soul,") will a man allow" (or consent unto?) Answer expected. Why none of course. And now we have arrived at this point, where we can properly consider the seeming paradox presented in the 25th verse, namely, the laying down by a soul dispassionate choice on our part of that which the common sense and common consent of all mankind agree in pronouncing the very best thing we have got. If the doing of this is an agreement or exchange to be allowed on our part, a sufficient and convincing motive for the act must necessarily be presented to our reason. Well what is the offer, and what is it that the One who makes the offer wants and has in view? God, the Life-Giver, wants you, not your soul or your natural life. He owns that now. He has only entrusted you with a lease of it for an appointed time under certain conditions. But you are a free agent. He invite you so, and you have alienated yourself in sin as an Adamic man, and are mortgaged to the world (cosmos) the flesh, and the devil, and you have become so lost to a sense of your original birthright, so depraved and grovelling in your servitude that you have even lost your manhood, and any desire for the liberty you might have. The gospel cry rings in your ears. The mortgage has been paid. You are free. Come, awake to a sense of your original birthright. You are or can be a new man if you will. Come out from under the yoke of your old bondage. Arise and walk in newness of life. You naturally answer, but can't the life be renewed where I am and as I am? Can't my "soul" be saved and I remain as I am? Theology is constantly and all heathendom has always said, Yes. God says no. You "soul" is not what I am after, and is comparatively of no importance. What is it? "A vapor that passeth quickly away," "A flower of the field, as it were, that fadeth quickly away." But you, if you accept my gracious offer, may live forever. Otherwise you "go out" with your breath of life, you "expire," you "perish."

The question then is, are you wedded to your idol? Are you wedded to this expiring life and the things that minister to it?

But it is the best and in fact all the life I've got. Who gave it to you? Ah, that is the first point to settle in your mind. Who is the lessor to you of this "tabernacle of the body" with all its hereditaments? Can't I cancel this lease and make a new one with you if I will? "God will be inquired of," and any one who cometh unto him "must believe that he is, and that he is the wages-payer of those who diligently seek him out.

The question then in issue is, am I warranted in resolving, in view of the offer made me, to lay down my soul or natural life (not try to save it) "to count it but loss and dross" as Paul did, if in any way I can fulfill the other conditions of the offer? For there are other conditions, and this is only the first. Well what are the inducements? Who makes the offer? God. Through whom? Christ his vice-gerent on earth. What does he offer in exchange, not for the life, remember, but for the act of goodwill and confidence on your part thus shown in his word and ability to make it good? Life eternal and its concomitants. Immortality for mortality and spiritual "realities" for temporal realities. The grand mistake of modern theology is in assuming and preaching that man has already got immortality, or in other words is "an immortal soul" started on a career of eternal destiny that even an Almighty hand cannot arrest; that repentance is merely turning a switch in this immortal soul's career, which changes his objective course from eternal misery to eternal happiness, and that such a repentance on the part of any individual is rather a favorable condescension than otherwise to the inability of the Almighty, so much so even that angels shed tears of joy over every such occurrence, and such a penitent starts out with the idea that all he has to do is to polish up the immortal soul he already has, that some old-life-indeath of his with an assiduous preparation of some sort of formal good works, have come "ghostly" teacher of human infallibility stamp him "saved," and he will "shine" to all eternity in some sort of a ghostly kingdom. But what saith the Scriptures? "You must be begotten from above." Well, begetting is the initial cause, is it not, of any organic individual life? Whoever is in Christ and Christ in him and God in both, we are told, is "a new creation." What has become of such a person's "immortal soul?"

How can you "account all things but loss to win Christ" if you reserve and save your soul? What does Paul mean when he talks about this mortal being swallowed up of immortality? Does the immortal soul swallow itself. Faugh! upon such reasoning. Is it strange that such men as Ingersoll attack it? Is it strange that we have "Josephites" again in this nineteenth century, and see so-called Christians reviving and preaching again that old lie of Judaism, so effectually "scotched" by Paul, and Peter, and John.

Be men, Christian brethren, everywhere; exemplify your birth-right of true-manhood. the liberty to reject a lie at any time when you become convinced that it is a lie. If you have been unfortunate enough to have been misled or deceived into accepting and believing such a lie, don't let your pride of opinion ignorantly asserted stand in the way of your accepting and embracing the truth. The exhortation of the word in such cases is "to repent and do the first works." For in such cases "the past works" have never really been done. Their so-called doing was only "a wicked supposition," as Paul calls it. Remember the exhortation is "Deny yourself utterly." There is no reservation, and your "soul" is specially designated as the "loss" you suffer in the exchange for eternal life, because its possession or loss presupposes the gain or loss of anything else that pertains to it. God proposes to re-beget you, and the using of old second-hand "souls" for this purpose savors too much of the old heathen doctrine of "the transmigration of souls" to satisfy ordinary Christian intelligence.

CHAS. GARDNER.

"If ye're an Injured Spirit, State Yer Business.

Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures. Luke xxiv. 45.

Of all the benefits bestowed upon human creatures by the blessed Savior, perhaps this transcends them all, for the reason that the person so favored, communicates the light to those around him who sit in darkness. It is surely a divine art, opening eyes that see not and lips that cannot pronounce one syllable of the new song referred to in the psalms of David. This is work worthy of the highest angel in the upper spheres. When the writer was a boy in the North of Ireland, it was the custom then to always carry a copy of the Scriptures with us when "going to preaching."

A good old Covenanter then, thought as much of his Bible and was just as sure to have it near him as a Papist is to have his Madona-medal, beads and other religious articles always close by. Many persons in those days used to put a copy of the Scriptures always under their pillow: especially if compelled to sleep in lonely apartments and alone. They fancied nothing could harm them while the book was under their head. It was their Holy-water, defending them from evil spirits and bad men. It was as Burns would put it:—"the runin stream they dorna cross." Just here I recall what my old teacher David Lindsay told us one morning while standing around the turf fire. (He was a bachelor and slept by himself in one of the rooms of the school house.) He said,—Last night I had a dreadful experience. I suppose it was about midnight, I heard strange noises, then something in the form of a mortal like mysel' jumped in the bed between me an' the wall and pushed me almost out o' the bed. I grasped for my old Bible under the pillow an' my stick by the bed side, an' with one in each han' I looked up to heaven an' said; In the name o' God Almighty if ye're an injured spirit an' ye want me to serve ye in any way, make your business known an' I'll try to oblige ye: but on the contrary if ye're a mortal like mysel' an' want to frighten me awa from this place, I'm no' the man to be frightened. If ye ha' a man's blood in ye, either leave me this night an' forever or else tak yer stick like a man an' stan' fairness wi' me. After waiting a short time for an answer I went back to bed an' heard no more." This man loved and reverenced his Bible as a devout Papist loves and reverences a Roman Catholic Church building; but it is highly probable it was to him a sealed book. Had his understanding been opened so as to know what the word teaches about God and the human race he surely would not expect an "injured Spirit," to appeal to him for help.

Water blest ever so well, will do no one good, unless it is used as water should be used. It can neither do good or evil, while it is looked up; nor can the Holy Book do us any good unless used as directed. David Lindsay's Bible under his head, or even in his hand, was powerless to keep "the injured spirit" out of the room, but if he had understood its meaning lonely though he was, he could say:

"I lay me down, I slept, I waked,
For God sustained me.
I will not fear the ark thousand ten,
Set round against me be."

David Lindsay was a Presbyterian, and a constant Bible reader, but he believed in ghosts or Spirits. He believed that death affected the body only, the real man went marching on as before, only faster. If as Lindsay believed, spirits may converse with mortals, and go where they please, was there any thing wrong in him asking the Spirit if he could be of any service to him? Had he known that Spirits communicated with mortals by taps, some like the city bells locate the burning building, the Spirit referred to might have told him that night where he would find a purse or something just as good. David was a fine scholar, but was as ignorant of the tap language as I am of the Irish. It is the greatest mystery to me that persons who are bright in every other study, should be so dull in Scripture study. The Book of books is scarce ever looked at, because our Commentators insist that death in the Bible don't mean death, and that mortal should be immortal, for say they, the wages of sin is not death, it is only banishment from God. Since I have dismissed the Commentators and use my own eyes, the Bible has become plain enough. Let us pray that our understanding may be opened so as to understand the Scriptures.

Thoughts Suggested by Hearing a Discourse on Peace and War.

Abraham was a soldier. The Apostle Paul says, Melchisidcek, priest of the most High God, met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings and blessed him. The worthies of olden time subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, put to flight the armies of the aliens. John the Baptist said to the soldiers, do violence to no man, and be contented with your wages. Jesus our Lord, said of a military officer, I have not found so great faith no not in Israel, not an intimation that his military profession was bad or unchristian. The first family the Holy Spirit was poured out on, was that of a military officer made up mostly of devout soldiers. Not a word from the Apostle Peter or an intimation that their military calling was unchristian.

The Apostle Paul sent to teach the Gentile nations Christian principles said to the churches, the powers that be are ordained of God, for the punishment of evil doers and for the praise of them that do well, and must not bear the sword in vain.

Jesus said to his disciples, think not I have come to send peace on earth. I have not come to send peace but a sword.

The good time is coming when the nations shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks, when nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither learn war any more. But mere Christian teaching will never bring that glad time to the nations.

Editor Restitution:

Continued our meetings here from Mar. 22, until last night April 12, with increasing interest to the close.

Delivered in all 31 discourses, as a result baptised 18 intelligent believers in the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ.

There being others here from Goodland, Ind., and one from Wisconsin, making in all 26 bold vers, who were organized in Gospel order on last night.

May they be kept steadfast unto the day of His coming.

Yours in the blessed hope.

Singing Birds.

By the river, by the lake,
Where the silver ripples break,
In the lonely mountain glen,
In the crowded haunts of men,
In the woods from foot-tops free,
In the garden apple-tree
Light- and shadow-flittering round,
Little singing birds are found.

In the northern land of storms,
Mid the ice-bergs' awful forms,
Under hurtling leaden skies
Where the verdure never dies,
Where Siberian exiles roam
In the cold and cheerless home,
Where the Niger rolls his tide
Little singing birds abide.

In the valleys green and low,
Where the brooks through meadows flow,
Where the dark pines tear their tresses,
Battling with the mountain storms,
In the fields amid the flowers,
In the sunshine after showers,
Lights and shadows flitting round,
Little singing birds are found.

Bible Living.

The Word of God is given to us to teach us how to live. To have old in right living, we must have it in our memory and obey its teachings.

Not all that we hear, but that we have in memory, always ready to use, is hopeful to us. One boy reads the whole New Testament through, with little attention to what he reads. Another finds in reading that the boy Jesus was "subject unto" his mother and Joseph, her husband. That is, obeyed them. This one fact is fixed in his mind and he never forgets it. When the mothers of these two boys tell them of something they wish done, the mere reader says, "I don't want to do that," and neglects it. The other thinks of him who was subject to his mother, and wants to be like the blessed Jesus, so he quickly obeys. He does this not only once or twice, but every day, and it is his habit. In this way he grows up to be an obedient son and a comfort and help to his parents. That one lesson learned from the Bible is worth more to this boy than all the reading of the other boy.

There are a great many such lessons in the precious book and we need to have them in mind so that they will come to us at the right time. A little fellow who had been taught some of them was told by his mother not to leave the door-step where he was playing. While he sat there a circus came in town with its gaily painted wagons, its pretty horses, and its music. One of the boys running along by the side of the wagons, called to the child on the door-step to go with them. He started and ran a little way, then he hurried back before his mother missed him, and went right to her and said, "Mamma, the boys called me and I started with them, but I thought that the Bible says, 'My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not;' so I came back." You see that one text kept that boy from disobedience and perhaps from serious harm.

If the dear children who read the Guide will try every day to get some new thought about Bible-living and then act upon the lessons learned, the blessings promised in the Book will be theirs in this world and in heaven.—J. H. James, in Guide to Holiness.

Dear Children:

Let me draw your tender minds to a circumstance which occurred about this season of the year, when little companies would travel from all parts of Palestine to visit a certain City, which name signifies "The vision of peace," for there a memorial feast was held, called the feast of the passover. About twenty-seven miles north of this City dwelt a family who were highly favored of God, whose special care it was never to be absent at this time. For although the history of the feast dated many centuries previous, yet its solemnity was deeply rooted in the minds of all the true worshipers of Jehovah. The City where this delightful family resided was built on a hill, and so little esteemed was it among men that the question was often asked, can any good come from thence? The name signifies "Separated." This devoted household was peculiarly blessed with an obedient, dear son, who never told an untruth, or tried to deceive. It is said of him at an early age "he was strong in spirit, filled with wisdom, and the favor of God rested upon him." I can imagine when this sweet, intelligent youth, came to the feast of the passover, and saw the upper and side posts of the door sprinkled with blood, how he would say to his dear mother, Do tell me, what does this mean? and when he entered the house, and beheld the wonderful preparations for the feast, how deeply interested his mind, "quick of understanding in the fear of the Lord," would have been; but how truly solemn the scene must have appeared to one so young, when at midnight the family with haste fed upon the lamb, unleavened bread, and bitter herbs, taking great care while eating, that no bone of it should not be broken." Each man was dressed for a journey, resting on a staff. His penetrating mind no doubt drank in the true meaning of all this, and understood during these moments of eating, the angel of the Lord was passing over the blood stained dwellings of his chosen people. But where no blood had been sprinkled, death smote each first-born in all Egypt, both man and beast. We can truly perceive that this solemn feast of the passover bore a wonderful influence over the youthful mind of this precious boy, who was then only twelve years old. So much so that he could not endure to return home with his dear parents. He craved to be where he could hear nothing else but about his Heavenly Father, and desired to dwell in the Courts of the Lord for ever. His longing heart panted for God; Yes, for the living God. But when the feast was over, his parents with some of their friends journeyed toward their home, supposing their dear son was among the company, but when they found him not; they sought him among their kinsfolks and acquaintances, going no doubt to the hill country where her beloved cousin lived, whose name signifies, "The oath and fullness of God." But the precious youth had not been there. When night covered the earth with its dark mantle, think of the anxious sorrows that must have filled his lonely mother's heart. No doubt she told of his loving ways which she had for a long time treasured up in her thoughtful heart, which convinced her most surely he had not strayed away with boys of ill repute. How bitterly she would weep to lose one whose precious ways had endeared him to everyone. She would wonder where he would get food all these hours, as none of his friends or relations had seen him. Two days and long nights had passed, and their unwearied feet had travelled back to the place where the feast was held hoping there to find their treasure, in whom their life was bound up, and no doubt when they entered the Temple on the third day it was to pray to Jehovah to direct their sorrowful minds to the place where the lost child was but to their great surprise they found him there sitting in the midst of the learned, hearing and asking questions, and all that heard him were astonished at his understanding, and answers. And when his parents saw him they were amazed, and his mother said, Son why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing. And he said, how is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business? But they understood not the saying, and he went home with them, and was subject unto them. Dear children, at the early age of twelve years, boys naturally cling to those who clothe and feed them, their appetites are keen, and home is the sweetest spot to them on earth; but this precious youth had food to eat his parents knew not of. Even at this tender age, his love for his Heavenly Father's business was his chief delight. He knew his origin was from God, which filled him with holy zeal. Like little Samuel, he was listening to hear God speak, and he was just in the right place to answer.

Your affectionate Teacher,

H. COFFMAN.

The Bishop of Manchester on Religious Excitement.

The Bishop of Manchester, preaching at St. Lukes, Cheetham, Manchester, said, if he were asked what was the special spiritual need of this age, he would say sobriety. Excitement seemed to be sought in every way, and he would put it whether the excitement was healthy or mischievous, and whether, generally speaking, it was the best and fittest frame of mind in which to receive a message from God. There were three tempers now noticeable in the world of action and thought. There was, first, that which sought for the strange, and just now the manifestation of it was called "faith-healing." Then there was the Athenian temper, always in quest of novelty. There was a third temper—and he did not know whether to call it the best or the worst, but it was an evil and dangerous one, and a sign of the times—that which did not care about any of those things. In the midst of all the fever and hubbub of which he had spoken, the real essence of religion was lost sight of altogether! How few were there of the best instructed Christian congregations who could undertake to put out in any intelligible, reasonable form, the teachings of Christ's "Sermon on the Mount." He often found the question too hard for candidates for holy orders. The "Sermon on the Mount" contained the essence of his religion, regarded not so much as a theology as a doctrine affecting life and God. The Gospel of conduct as well as sobriety, seemed to him a thing necessary for these times.—Messenger.

Adam's "Help-meet."

Will men who ought to know better cease mis-quoting the eighteenth and twentieth verses of the second chapter in Genesis by putting a hyphen between help and meet, making it a compound word, instead of a noun and its adjective, as our A. V. has it, and as the Hebrew ezer kenegdo requires? Yet this blunder, involving a radical misapprehension of the meaning of the words, is inexcusably frequent both in the pulpit and in general literature. It is a little remarkable that it should occur in the otherwise intelligent passage from White's "Third Genesis," quoted in the December number of the Old Testament Student. The adjective meet has here the same meaning as in other passages, e. g., "fruits meet for repentance," "vessels meet for the Master's use," "herbs meet for them," etc. The smuggling in of the hyphen is due to the popular notion that the alleged inferiority and subjection of women was a part of the divine purpose in her creation. But the record certainly contains no hint of any purposed and original inferiority, whatever inequalities might have been subsequently introduced in consequence of the fall. The helper provided for man was not a "help" in the modern kitchen-sense of the word. She was not created to be his slave, his drudge; but his corresponding opposite, the complementary hemisphere in the orb of humanity, his alter ego, one aperos; eatar, like himself, as the LXX happily translate it. The Edenic conception of woman's relation to man is well expressed in Tennyson's "Princess:"

"She that out of Lethe scales with man
The shining slopes of Maiaro, shares with man
His nights, his days, moves with him to one goal."

She was

"To stir herself to mate
Like perfect music unto noble words;
And so these twain, upon the skirts of Time,
Sit side by side, full summ'd in all their powers."

This entire conception is destroyed by the hyphen, which by its presence projects upon the simple beauty of the inspired record a false and unworthy idea of woman's essential inferiority, begotten of "barbarous laws," and the "rough ways of the world till now." Brethren, save your hyphen for a worthier use than thereby to degrade the biblical conception of womanhood, and in public forbear to speak of Adam's "help-meet."—P. A. Nordell, in Old Testament Student.

Luther used to teach his children to read the Bible in the following way: First, to read through one book carefully; then to study chapter by chapter, and then verse by verse, and lastly word by word, for, he said, 'It is like a person shaking a fruit tree. First shaking the tree and gathering up the fruit which falls to the ground, and then shaking each branch and afterward each twig of the branch, and last of all looking carefully under each leaf to see that no fruit remains. In this way, and in no other, shall we find the hidden treasures that are in the Bible.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CRAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, April 22, 1885.

As we publish four papers each month, our next issue will bear date of May 6.

At the close of our meeting last Sunday morning here in Plymouth, a Mrs. Kilo came forward, desiring to yield the obedience of faith to the gospel requirement, and she was baptised without delay by the Editor in the waters of Yellow River, which flows through the town. As our Sister is going west to live, we pray God that she may prove steadfast to the end, and that we may meet in the kingdom. Though her association with us here was for one day only, yet we trust the renewed association beyond the resurrection will be for the days of eternity.

On the prospects of war or peace between England and Russia the Chicago Evening Journal says:—"The quarrel between England and Russia, while it has been less threatening for a few days past, is apparently as far from a settlement as ever, and new complications are constantly occurring. As England recedes in its demands Russia advances, and each new backdown is followed by a new aggression. How far Gladstone's Ministry will retreat before fighting is uncertain, but Russia means to find out by testing their weakness to its fullest extent. To-day's dispatches are again menacing, but great confidence is felt that England will again yield to Russian requirements and that peace at any price will continue to be the maxim ruling Gladstone's conduct to the end."

THE PROPHETICAL PERIODS.

The prophetical periods were not given to make known the time of the Second Advent of Christ. On the contrary they measure the rise, supremacy, and overthrow of the great world powers. At the same time they show that the calamities and oppressions of Israel and Judah, and the persecutions of the Church have a limitation, and that the sanctuary places of Immanuel's land shall not always be trodden under foot and defiled by apostate abominations. The abhorrent systems of the Papacy and Mohammedanism have their set times, and we have reason to thank God that these times are about fulfilled and their detestable existence is mostly a matter of past history.

THE COMMUNION.

Though we commemorate the sufferings and death of our Adorable Redeemer—who laid down his life for us—more frequently than once a year, yet our communion season on the evening of March 29, was one of unusual interest to us, as being very near the anniversary of the time when Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures. How precious it was to realise something of the infinite love of God, our Heavenly Father, who "spared not his own Son—Greek tou idiou huiou, his own proper Son—but delivered him up for us all." O, it is joy unspeakable and full of glory to know and feel that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son—Gr. ton huion autou ton monogenee, the Son of himself, the alone begotten—that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Surely "God is love; and in this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son—the Son of himself the only begotten—into the world, that we might live through him." May we be preserved from being so led away as to ever "deny the Lord that bought us." Surely, O Lamb of God, the Priesly Priesthood will some day "Sing the New Song, saying, Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God Kings and Priests and we shall reign on the earth."

Selections.

THE REIGN OF CHRIST.

The belief prevailed among both ancient and modern men of God that a great King would come in the line of David, who would conquer all his enemies and establish a universal reign of righteousness and peace over all the earth.

The idea of a spiritual reign, except that over the Church in its present state, is a novel conception of modern times. And it is encouraging to know that the number of those who have been holding this novel conception are continually decreasing, as they are led to investigate the Scriptures on the subject of Christ's reign.

They find the prophecies touching the personal reign of Christ more numerous than those which point to his humiliation, sufferings, and death. If they take the Old Testament and turn to Isa. xvi. 5; they read: "And in mercy shall the throne be prepared; and he shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle of David, judging and seeking to judgment, and hasting righteousness." Ezek. xxxvii. 22; "And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; neither shall they be two nations, nor divided into two kingdoms any more at all," etc. Jer. xxii. 5-8: "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a king shall reign," etc. Amos ix. 11; "In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up his breaches, and I will raise up his ruins," etc. Jer. iii. 17: "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem," etc. Isa. xxiv. 23: "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously;" or, "There shall be glory before his ancients." Psa. lxxii. 8-11; "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the rivers unto the ends of the earth." "Yea, all kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him."

If they take the New Testament and turn to Luke i. 32, 33; they read; "And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." This means that Christ must reign on the throne of David in Palestine, for David never had a throne anywhere else. This is a personal reign of Christ over the redeemed people of God after their resurrection, when he hath put all enemies under his feet, and he is manifested head of creation, ruling over land and sea, and making his name glorious to the ends of the earth.

This cannot be a spiritual reign, for Christ has been reigning, spiritually, over his Church for near two thousand years. Christ said to Pilate: "Now my kingdom is not of this world:" He had not, at the time, come to sit on the throne of his father David; and yet he was born to be King, and he will "reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his reign there shall be no end."

John Milton, the poet, says of Christ's personal reign: "That this reign will be on earth is evident from many passages." Quoting Psa. ii. 8, 9; Dan. vii. 22-27; Psa. cx. 5, 6; Isa. ix. 6, 7; Luke i. 32, 33; also xxii. 29, 30; Rev. ii. 26-27. John Bunyan held to the doctrine of the personal reign of Christ on the throne of David forever. Thomas Goodwin says: "There is a special world, called the world to come, appointed for Jesus Christ eminently to reign in." "There is a world to come appointed for the second Adam." "And as God takes the same substance of man's nature, and engrafteth the new creature upon it, the same man still, so he takes the same world that was Adam's and makes it new and glorious, a new world for the second Adam." "And he shall reign on the earth."

All believers will reign with Christ. Matt. xix. 28, 29: "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye who followed me in the regeneration (new world), when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye," etc. "And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren" etc. Rev. v. 9, 10; "And they sung a new song," etc. "And we shall reign on the earth." David's throne will be established, and Christ will sit upon it, and this promise will be fulfilled, "I will make my firstborn higher than the kings of the earth. My mercy will I keep for him forevermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him. His seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven" (Ps. lxxxix. 27-29).

Isaac Watts says of this reign: "The Wonderful, the Counsellor, shall have honor and wide dominion. Jesus shall sit high on the throne of his father David, and crushing all his foes beneath his feet, he shall reign to unknown ages." Then all the promises of the Bible touching the universal prevalence of the truth and peace will be fulfilled. The song of the angels which they sang over the plains of Bethlehem—"Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace and good-will to men"—will be repeated, as of a fact accomplished. "The lamb and the lion shall lie down together." Then the true Israel of God will inhabit the land from the river of Egypt unto the great river Euphrates (Gen. xv. 18), which and the Israelites have their share (Ezek. xlvii). Then the "dead in Christ shall be raised out of their graves (Ezek. xxxvii. 12-14), and shall dwell in their own land, and "the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem and before his ancients gloriously."

How the heart of Abraham swelled with joy as he looked down through the intervening ages and "saw the Lord high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple!" How joy lifted up the souls of all the ancient people of God, when, by faith, they saw the Conqueror of kings and of wicked nations coming in triumphant majesty to maintain the rights of a long-outraged throne in the presence of all his saints.

THE MILLENNIAL GLORY.

Now, earth's long dark night is passed; the toils, sorrows, and pain of the Church are ended; Antichrist and all false systems of religion and governments are overthrown; and the mystery of God is finished; and the Sabbath, the rest, the crowns, the joy, the glory, and the throne have come. "And pains, and groans, and griefs, and fears, and death itself shall die." The reign of heaven will be restored to earth. The divine administration will be established among men. Rev. xxii. 3: "And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God."

The New Jerusalem—the redeemed of all nations, coming down from heaven with their raised bodies to reign on the renewed earth—will be lighted and enriched by the presence and pervaded by the living energy and love of the reigning King. "The Lamb is the light thereof."—G. W. Pendleton, in Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

THE EUROPEAN OUTLOOK.

When Elijah prayed the Lord to lift his hand of judgment, which had stayed the rains from falling upon ill-fated Israel for three-and-a-half years, he sent his servant to see if there were signs of an answer to his prayers. Six times he looked, and six times he made answer, "There is nothing." But the persevering prophet prayed on, sending for the outlook yet again. Then came the report, "There is a little cloud—like a man's hand"—evidently the prophet's messenger thought, "It does not amount to much." But not so the prophet—his practised eye saw the storm in embryo, and his ear of faith caught the "sound of abundance of rain."

So to the mere casual observer, there may be no special significance in the appearance of the political horizon of Europe at the present time; but to the student of prophecy, aye, and to the statesman, too, there are muttering thunders heard in the distance, and occasionally the red lightenings leap from lurid clouds that hang low in the horizon, revealing a state of things which may (and probably must) bring on, in the immediate future, a whirlwind of war such as earth never saw.

England earned for herself, and measurably maintained the proud title of "Mistress of the seas" since the time of the Spanish Armada. By her naval power she planted colonies at almost every strategic point in the world. These gave her such commercial supremacy that they became the envy of the world. And Russia, Germany, and France, having secured a fleet of ironclads almost equal—jointly her superior—to England, her prestige is greatly threatened. The great nations of Europe like hungry vultures are scouring the horizon of the world to find some weak nation, or some barbarian country, upon which they can pounce, and satisfy the cravings of their capacious maws. France is intriguing in Northern Africa, and grasping at a portion of the Congo region. Madagascar feels her power, and without the interposition of Providence must succumb to her ruthless grasp. Tonquin and Annam lie at her feet; China bleeds; and Christianity in those heathen lands lies humbled in the dust, by a nation calling itself Christian!

Germany has caught the desire for colonial possession and planted her flag on the Island of Papua, or New Guinea, thus forestalling England's purposes in regard to the same. She has taken possession of a large territory in the Soudan, and unfurled her banner on the borders of Sierra Leone, evidently looking to an opening to the sea through the same. This England will not willingly permit.

Russia has her eye on Constantinople, and this time there is no Disraeli in England (as in 1876 to stand between her and her coveted prize. Again she has pressed her conquests clear through Central Asia, to the very borders of Afghanistan, which alone stands between her and England's Indian Empire. Her influence is all potent in the councils of the Afghans, which makes her attitude tremendously menacing to those dependencies of the British crown.

The Papacy is intriguing for the restoration of the temporal power, and she imagines only England and Italy stand in her way. Hence the hatred of Catholics to those countries, and especially towards England, throughout the world. Thus we see the reason of the existing compact between England and Italy.

England is troubled with dynamite fiends at home, and menaced by Irish hatred abroad. She has her foot in Egypt to stay; and she is incurring the hatred of Mussulmans everywhere because she is putting the Mahdi down to maintain the integrity of her Egyptian territory. She has snubbed the "sick man," forbidding him to land an army in his own territory of Egypt,—thus turning his traditional hatred into gall and hemlock. These things, with the Irish question unsolved, the turbulent Boers of South Africa, the menacing attitude of the Germans on the frontiers of Sierra Leone, and the Russians hanging like a war-cloud on the borders of her Indian possessions, fills the horizon of England with ominous clouds, and the heart of her statesmen with gloomy forebodings.

When in addition to this survey of the complications of Europe and the East we add the Nihilists of Russia, the Socialists of Germany, the Anarchists of France, the Black Hand of Spain, and discontent, and crimes the most horrible everywhere: not to mention earthquakes shaking and swallowing up some, avalanches crushing others, cyclones and tornadoes sweeping away everything in their path, defalcations and commercial distress wherever civilization has set her foot, is it any wonder the student of prophecy sees the "time of trouble" (Dan. xi. 1) already commenced. The year 1885 has opened with a fearful record, and the outlook for its future is still more terrible.

These European complications point to a "whirlwind" of war (Jer. xxv. 32-33). The judgments of God are multiplying past all conception (Isaiah xxvii). Oh, is it not time that every lover of Christ's appearing should join in one mighty concert of prayer to the great Father in heaven that he will send right soon earth's own righteous Ruler, to hush the groans of creation, and reign over a world "that does not sin and suffer for its crimes!"—Prophetic News.

ENGLAND, GERMANY, AND RUSSIA.

Misfortunes never come single, in the history of nations as in that of individuals. Although this is a very good working aphorism, which rulers of nations should bear in mind before placing themselves in situations of difficulty and danger, there is another that merits our attention, to the effect that we should not meet troubles halfway, or rush into a panic at the first appearance of clouds on the political horizon. Just now English statesmen have need of all the coolness they can summon to their assistance. It is not a time to listen to rash counsels. We are involved in a serious diplomatic quarrel with Russia, and have scarcely got quit of another of equal importance with Germany. People who do not follow very closely the events as they are daily recorded—in the shape of telegrams, speeches in Parliament, and leading articles in the newspapers—may well ask what the quarrels are all about, and how the complications have arisen. It is not easy to give a brief and intelligible reply.

As regards Russia, we might say broadly, that the attempt to overreach us in the matter of the Afghan boundary, by taking possession of places and tracts inside the disputed territory, has been the indirect consequence of our Egyptian troubles. It is a fair inference from the known facts to assume that Russia—seeing us engaged in the Soudan upon a task which demanded the attention of England's "only General" and the presence of the Guards, though the occasion a favorable one for pushing on her frontier still further towards India.

During the past twelve years that frontier has been advanced with surprising steadiness. Khiva was captured in June, 1873, and since then one after another of the Khanates of Central Asia has fallen under the scepter of the Czar. The last of the independent States to succumb was that of the Tekke Turkomans, whose capital, Merv, was occupied by Russian troops about two years ago. The understanding that had been arrived at between the Russian and English Cabinets regarding these annexations was that England would not place any obstacle in the path of Russia's so-called civilising influence in this part of Asia so long as she respected the integrity of Afghanistan.

The last named country has always been regarded as a kind of outpost of our Indian Empire, its geographical position rendering it absolutely necessary for the security of India that it should be held by a friendly Power. It was to prevent its falling under Russian influence that we went to war with Shar Ali in 1878, at a cost of twenty millions sterling, and hundreds, perhaps thousands, of valuable lives. When the present Amir was recognised in July, 1880, after the death of Shar Ali and the enthronement of his son, Yakub Khan, mutual engagements were entered into, which bound us to defend the Amir's territories from foreign aggression.

The Joint Boundary Commission, of which the English members have been on the spot since November, vainly awaiting the arrival of the Russian Commissioners, was appointed expressly to settle the disputed questions which, it was feared, might cause conflict on the frontier between the Czar's officers and the Amir's. It is not yet explained why the Russian Cabinet has neglected to send its envoy to Sarakhs. Instead, its local officials, prominent among them General Alikanoff, have posted Russian troops in certain places which the Afghans claim to be within their boundary. The question has happily, so far as is known, not yet passed beyond the control of the Russian and English Ministers. The chief anxiety arises from the inflammable temperaments of the forces now standing opposed to each other, and the apparently imperfect authority exercised by the Czar's government over its governors and generals in Central Asia. Turning to the other source of disquietude which lately existed in our relations with Germany, there is good reason to hope that the happy settlement of differences arrived at between Earl Granville and Prince Bismark will not be upset by the news of an alleged outrage on the English flag in the Cameroons.—Prophetic News.

ABSENT FROM THE BODY.

In pursuing the regular course of our inquiries, we proceed naturally from the consideration of the resurrection to that of final judgment which immediately follows. Of the many places in Scripture which relate to that event, there is one in the fifth chapter of the Apostle Paul's second Epistle to the Corinthians, to which I particularly wish to call your attention; because in studying the passage as a whole, you will perceive the importance of the rule I have so often insisted on; that of not interpreting single texts by themselves, but judging of them partly by the general drift and tenor of the whole discourse (examining what goes before and what follows), and partly from a comparison of one passage with another, so as to reconcile each part of Scripture with the rest.

Take, for example, the words of the tenth verse (which are most frequently quoted), by themselves, and they will not only afford no indication of any such doctrine as bodily resurrection, but would seem rather to imply the contrary: "We must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in the body;" here our present state in the world is spoken of as "in the body;" and there is nothing in the passage to lead us to suppose that we shall have bodies when we appear before Christ's judgment-seat; the two conditions—that of being "in the body," and that in which we shall "appear before the judgment-seat of Christ"—seem opposed and contrasted to one another. And if you look at some of the preceding verses, they would seem rather to imply of themselves, that the apostle is speaking of a separate state, without a body: "knowing," says he, "that whilst we are at home in the body we are absent from the Lord; we are willing rather to be absent from the body and present with the Lord; wherefore we labor that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him;" and then follow the words, "We must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, to give an account of the things done in the body."

This passage would, I say, of itself, seem to relate to the condition of the soul separate from the body; and indeed some commentators have referred to it as regarding the separate state. But they should have remembered that the apostle is most evidently alluding to the state, whatever it is in which we are to appear before Christ's judgment-seat; so that if we are then to have bodies, he cannot be supposed, without a very forced and harsh interpretation, to be speaking of a separate state, in the words immediately preceding.

And if you look a little further back, Paul himself furnishes a ready interpretation of his own expression here: "We know," says he, "that if this our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God—a house not made with hands—eternal, in the heavens." That is, when the bodies in which we now dwell are destroyed (which he call tents or tabernacles, to indicate that they are not our lasting and final habitation; a tent being only a temporary residence, which after a time is taken down and removed), we have another dwelling provided for us—a permanent habitation (which may therefore more properly be styled a "house"), namely, immortal bodies, in which we shall be clothed at the resurrection.

And shortly after this he adds, "We that are in this tabernacle, do groan, being burdened" (laboring, that is, under the infirmities, temptations, and imperfections to which our earthly bodies are subjected), not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, mortality might be swallowed up of life." Then, having spoken of the burden of the corruptible body which we now inhabit, he adds this caution, or purpose, as it seems, to guard against the supposition that the deliverance he looks for from this burden, is a separate state of the soul; what we desire, he says, is, "not to be unclothed" (namely, as in a separate state), but the hope we cherish is, he says, "to be clothed upon," that is, to have an addition to what we now possess, by being placed in a far superior habitation—by having "our vile bodies made like unto Christ's glorious body." And these our glorified bodies are to be of so refined and purified a nature in comparison of what we now have, as to be called by him in another epistle "spiritual bodies," for "flesh and blood" says he (that is, such gross materials as our present flesh and blood), "can not inherit the kingdom of God."

And when you observe that in that very passage where he says that "flesh and blood can not inherit the kingdom of God," he is distinctly teaching that Christians shall, nevertheless, in that kingdom of heaven, have bodies (though very different from what they have now), you may easily perceive how he comes in this place also to speak of being "absent from the body and present with the Lord," when he is speaking not of a separate state, but of absence from such a body, of gross flesh and blood, as we now dwell in. The body in which he speaks of the Christian as being "at home," whilst he is "absent from the Lord," is evidently that "earthly tabernacle" which he has just before spoken of as a burden (of which he holds out the encouraging hope) is, not being "unclothed"—not a separate state—but the condition of being "clothed upon;" namely, with our spiritual and eternal body.—Archbishop Whately's "Future State," pp. 115 118.)

FOREMAN.—At Wichita Falls, Tex., April 8, 1885, John Foreman, at the residence of his son Major John A. Foreman.

Bro. Foreman was born in London England, January 21st, 1800, emigrated to America in 1818, and after a life of industry, and laboring to elevate the condition of mankind by educating and emulating their best hopes. He was a careful Bible reader and a member of the Christian church, and his dying prayer was:—

"Oh! God, be merciful unto me; my soul resteth in Thee, that I may come forth in the morning of the Resurrection with all the Redeemed."

His memory will long be cherished by his friends, and all those who knew him best.—Wichita Herald.

BARBER.—At the residence of Elma V. Test, Salem, O., Mar. 20, 1885, Emma V. Barber, aged 50 years, and one day.

The deceased was a very exemplary woman, was a full believer in the gospel of the Kingdom and all the promises that God has promised to those that love and obey him, she was raised a Methodist, in 1860 she began searching for the truth as her views did not accord with the Bible, five years later she joined the Disciple Church and as years advanced she saw her views still did not harmonize with the Bible. She then began searching the Scriptures and made it her chief study, she then saw and understood the Gospel and obeyed it by putting on Christ by baptism. She then began to live it out by her daily actions doing unto others as she would have them do to her, a great deal of her life was spent waiting on the sick and dying, her gentle voice was always a comfort to those she waited on. She lived every day as though it was the last, in full expectation of the coming King to change her mortal nature to immortality, yet her hope was not realized, but whether awake or asleep it matters not, if we be found ready. She was possessed of more than an ordinary talent always ready to give a reason of her hope, she has kept the faith, and fought a good fight, so there is layed up for her a crown of life which the righteous Judge will give all those who love his appearing. She leaves two children, three brothers, five sisters and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss, yet we mourn not as those who have no hope, and by the help of God we hope to meet our loved sister where parting shall be no more.

Sleep on, dear sister, until the archangel's voice shall call thee forth, then from thy dusty bed shalt thou arise in immortal beauty, to sing the everlasting song, that death is swallowed up in victory.

Brother George Kiton, of Glevelend, was with us in our sad bereavement, and spoke comforting words to us from numerous passages of Scripture.

CADY.—At Webster City, Iowa, Feb. 23, 1885, James Farman Cady, aged 22 years.

Bro. James Cady, son of P. P. and C. B. Cady, was baptised when but sixteen years old, together with his sister, Mrs. E. M. Wing, by E. J. Hill, of Iowa, since which he has lived a consistent Christian life, gaining the love and esteem of all who knew him. The sudden and short illness that terminated his useful and active life was brought on by overtaxation of the brain, together with the fatigue of his recent trip to the World's Fair at New Orleans.

His remains were removed to his parents, home near Hubbard, from whence he was followed to the funeral service in the church at that place, and thence to the cemetery, by a large concourse of sympathising friends, from many adjoining towns as well as the country around.

Always loving, courteous, and gentlemanly in deportment, in him, his parents lose an affectionate and dutiful son, the community a noble and active citizen, the church a faithful member, and every one a loving friend.

Editor Restitution.

Let me say to the brethren and sisters in general, that as we see the day of God Almighty approaching, that we accept the words of the apostle, to give the more earnest heed to the things which we hear; least at any time we let them slip, and should come short of the glory of God. Oh, that men and women would look more to the interests of their eternal welfare, and seek to themselves a home beyond this vail of tears. Oh, how good, how comforting, is the word of God, whosoever loveth me and keep my commandments, it is he who shall have a right to the tree of life and enter in thorough the gates into the city, that is the city of our God. Oh, brethren, bestir yourselves, for the day of God's executive judgment is at hand, which is spoken of by Jude. He is coming with his saints to do his judgments upon the ungodly. May he save us, is my prayer.

JOHN HOPP.

"There is in the possession of the Potter family of Rhode Island," said a distant relative of that family living in this city, "a Bible, which is not only notable for its antiquity, but for the history connected with it. It belonged to John Rogers, the martyr. During the persecutions of the early martyrs he hid it to keep it from falling into the hands of Gardiner and Bonner or their spies. John Rogers was burned at the stake more than three centuries and a quarter ago. After his death the Bible fell into the hands of his eldest son, descendants of whom came to America in 1635, bringing the book with them. This was the family of James Rogers, who, in travelling through the New England wilderness, carried the Bible in his bosom and used it for a pillow. It was believed that it was an amulet that kept off the devil and the Indians. It descended through three generations of the Rogerses in this country to Judith Rogers, who married Thomas Potter of Hopkinton, R. I., in 1762. The Bible has been in the possession of the Potter family ever since. It is Matthew's or Cranmer's Bible, and it is not divided into verses. Its arrangements of chapters differs materially from that of the King James version. It contains the Liturgy of the English Church in the reign of Edward VI. It was printed about the year 1620."

The church of God at Cleveland, O., will hold meetings at 10:30 a. m. every Sunday (D. V.) in Bland and Keller's Block, Room 20, 1764 Dunham Street, Corner of Kellers, north of Central Market. Reply free. Brethren from abroad of like faith and all preachers after truth are welcome.

THIS PRAYER I PRAY.

O Lord, I've waited long and patiently
To hear thy voice,
And see the wondrous beauty of Thy face
Bright with undying love and heavenly grace—
O Master! I would fain rejoice
In the glorious dawn of immortality.
From this dark day
So full of sorrow's mists, and dread, and cold—
With only here and there, a gleam of gold
By faith reflected—I would pass away
Into the perfect light.
Unshadowed by the raven wing of night.—
This prayer I pray.
Bring me into thy fold.

"THE LORD'S SUPPER."

Encircling this significant rite, how much of mystery and superstition there is! As instituted by Jesus Christ, how free from all this, and yet what a depth of import! The farther we get away from "interpretations," and the closer we come to the direct, simple, and unvarnished Word of God; as in this, so in all other questions, about which much has been written.

Let us then, as scholars, not as teachers, sit for a while, and learn from the fountain head, something about this Lord's Supper. First then it is called this because the Lord Jesus instituted it: and when he did so, he had a clear perception of the lasting benefit it would prove to those who became his disciples, in all time to come. Naturally, we attach a greater weight to the last acts and words of men, than those which had gone before. This act of our Lord's ranks among the last, only a few hours before his betrayal. "As they were eating, he took bread," simply "bread"; "and when he had blessed," or as elsewhere expressed, "gave thanks," "he brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take eat; this is my body." Oh, how much nonsense and superstition has grown out of this statement admitting the power of Jesus Christ to perform miracles; we fail, utterly fail; exercise as we may, the strongest faith; to discern in the record given, how this could be in anywise understood, only as the facts in the case warrant! as yet, he was not "the Lamb slain," and as yet he had not even been delivered to his tormenters. "My time is not yet."

"This is my body," in contradistinction to all the bodies ever offered in sacrifice before! This is the Body prepared," and the offering I am about to make, shall fully answer to the types, in me the antitype. As under the law there were real bodies offered, "so, once, in the end of the world, hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." I care not how others may view this truth; I cannot, I dare not, and call myself a believer, think of this "one offering," other than a whole offering! "If" said the apostle Paul—"we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so, them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." From precisely the same state, Jesus was brought forth. It is further stated, that by this same apostle—"moreover brethren, I declare unto you the gospel," and among the first things; "That Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." We ought to emphasize this statement, "according to the Scriptures," in order to get the full import of the sense in which it is used. The reader should carefully study the law of the sacrifice, according to Scriptures given in Moses. The full significance of this tragic event, ends not, only in the "offering of the body of Christ!" There is the blood, the life, involved; and so we read—"He took a cup," one, doubtless, which had been used in the service of the Passover—"and when he had given thanks, he gave to them; and they all drank of it, and he said unto them, this is my blood of the covenant which is (to be) shed for many," This "Covenant" is not a Testament! A Testament, or Last Will, is not a Covenant; and this will appear altogether plain to all, the deeper we study this feature. In fact, the word Testament, should have no place here! The Covenant, or agreement was already made, and what was needed was its ratification. This only could be, consequent upon the death of the victim; and so we read (or should) "a Covenant has force over dead sacrifices; but hath no strength while the appointed sacrifice liveth."

Granville Penn remarks in his Annotations, "The form and mode of sacrifice in solemnizing a Covenant between two parties, was similar among the Jews and their heathen neighbors. The contracting parties confronted each other, and a victim was placed between them: this was the interposite. The terms of the Covenant were then pronounced, and assented to by both parties; but the contract was yet unconfirmed until the blood of the victim was shed; and its life extinguished; the Covenant then became irrevocably confirmed." Homer describes this solemnity in his third Iliad: The heralds brought the sacred pledges: two lambs; and stood between the Trojans and the Greeks: Atrides cut the throats of the lambs, and laid them lifeless on the ground: and they adjured the eternal gods."

I am confident, that any who read the ninth chapter of Hebrews, with the view here presented, can only read to be convinced, that the words "man" "testament and testator" have no place here, and here I call attention to the Revised Version, and quote, using the word Covenant (as warranted by the margin), verses 15 to 18, inclusive—And for this cause he is the mediator of a new Covenant, that a death having taken place for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first Covenant, they that have been called may receive the promise of the eternal inheritance. For where a Covenant is, there must of necessity be the death"—(here it is said "of him" but it is unwarrantable in the premises, as can easily be seen). It is the "victim," not the Covenanter, who confirms this Covenant. The Lord Christ being the victim, the reconciliation between man and God is effected; and thus by the blood of the cross—the body of his flesh, through death; he may indeed be called the Reconciler! 1 Cor. xi. 24, 25. R. V. "This is my body which is for you: this do in remembrance of me. In like manner also the cup, after supper, saying, This cup is the new Covenant in my blood." Here it seems to me from what follows; that those, who, having entered into covenant (not Testament), relations, are solemnly bound by the agreement not to violate it! Should they, then it is evident they crucify the Lord afresh—count the blood of his covenant worthless—tread it under foot! The judgment of God overhangs all such; and to him vengeance belongeth; I will repay saith Jehovah!

I say then, that while the service of "The supper" is memorial, it has associated with it, solemnities worthy such a covenant, and such a God, and such a "Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." Behold him, the crucified one; Behold him and hear him say "It is finished!" and with bowed head, and exclamations, saddest of the sad, cry in mortal agony, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

In conclusion, while much more can be said, confirmatory of the foregoing; let me admonish those who would treat this service lightly, not to do so! and those who would make more of it than is warranted, Beware! and imposing as it is, be careful, not to attach the judgment of men in its administration, thereby trespassing!

SEEING ALIKE.

In natural vision there are near-sighted and far-sighted optics. One person has the microscopic, another the telescopic range. A good eye sees well at all distances.

So with the mental eye, if "single" or sound, "the whole body is full of light." But false education and narrow surroundings destroy the correct sense, and while truth is one, and unchangeable, different persons have different views of the same object.

Are we taught in the Bible to expect, or require, perfect unity of mind on every topic of divine instruction? Some persons will answer "Of course! or why is revelation made? for no two persons the solve the difficulties of a correct map, or an arithmetical problem differently."

There is a difference, however. Let us not claim for the Bible more than its writers' claim. Nowhere do they assert that every word was a direct communication from God. The Scriptures may be fitly compared to a living body, which has skeleton, muscles, nerves; but these are but the material organs of life and intellect. There are parts without sensation, more protective coverings, and parts more ornamental than useful. So is the Bible a channel for spirit and life to us, and much of the Scriptures are but a necessary support and filling for the beauty and completeness of the whole. "They were written aforetime for our learning, that we, by patience and comfort thereof might have hope." "All Scripture, given by inspiration, is profitable for doctrine, reproof and correction, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished to all good works." Mark the object; hope and virtue.

We cannot be too thankful for the word of God's grace, "which is able to build us up, and to give us an inheritance among them that are sanctified," but I nowhere learn that the comprehension of all knowledge is prescribed as an end, that to know all mysteries, in any degree commends us to God. It is an instrument, a sword to excise evil from ourselves, and to confront the adversaries of God. Only so far as knowledge is sanctified to moral improvement, or the honor of our God, is it of value. A humble reception of the word of God is more precious than all worldly wisdom in theological science. Yet I have known many brethren, vainly puffed up with their sense of super-intelligence in things revealed, looking down with absolute disdain upon those who have not reached their platform. Here let the question be met. If the system of "the faith"—generally believed among us to be an essential preliminary to baptism, is a condition of acceptance with God, how long has the requirement existed? for as a whole harmonious combination it it very recent.

Where for 1600 years of church history can we localize, before the nineteenth century, a church or party identical with ourselves? If we cannot, has God been without a church of true believers, or Christ Jesus without a membership of his body, in all these dark ages? God forbid the thought.

Doubtless the clearer our faith, the better we can realize our duty and privileges. Like our Pattern, we should "grown in wisdom and favor with God."

Permit the suggestion, that the assertion "there are no non-essentials" in the Bible will bear modification. While all that our Heavenly Father gives, is to be reverently treasured, there must be a difference in value between the books of Chronicles, and the Sermon on the Mount. Our physical form may be mutilated and disfigured, yet the self-hood developed may be as good, as dear, as great as ever it was, perhaps more so; for Jesus says it were better to enter life halt or maimed, than to pass whole into Gehenna. As, then, the living form developes leading characteristics which make the person acceptable, so in the Bible are certain leading and great ideas which run throughout the book; such as God's eternity, immortality, unchangeableness, his unity, etc., his choice of various media for the communication of himself to the world, and our helpless sinfulness; above all, the revelation of his purpose to redeem a lost world, "a restoration of all things spoken of by all his holy prophets," so that ultimately the "whole earth shall be filled with his glory."

These grand truths were confirmed in Christ Jesus, and constitute the gospel of the kingdom,—presented in various forms,—teaching pre-eminently one thing as essential—"That he is, and that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him."

Without this degree of faith, we would not, and could not come to God. It cannot be proved that God only listens to the voice of his reconciled childrens' prayers, it was the voice of self-righteousness was said, "we know that God heareth not sinners," for Jesus came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance.

Very able articles have appeared in THE RESTITUTION on the above important themes, one recently on "Leaving first principles" exhibits that faculty which sees afar off on the topic of God's kingdom, yet there are numerous Scriptures which speak of the kingdom as now existent. "Come to you," "among you," "of such is the kingdom," "in the patience and kingdom," "translated into the kingdom," etc. Is not the fig tree an assured possession before it blossoms? Is there not life in the child before birth?

God has now his own Elect King. The rulers and officials are now being chosen and trained for their dignities. Many generations of the faithful have committed their treasures to Christ's keeping "against that day." There lives are now hid with Christ in God, until the Lord appears again.

The territory is assured, and under the "all power in heaven and earth," is being prepared, according to the promise of him in whose sight things purposed are accomplished; all that is needed is manifestation.

So dear friends, if we are Christ's all things are even now ours, "things present and things to come."

Is Jesus heir of all things? "In him we are complete," and all things shall work together for God to those who love God. Is Jesus now Head? We are members of his body. Is he, like David—anointed long before his coronation? We are a royal priesthood. What shall separate us from the love of Christ? Tribulation, persecution, distress, etc. Nay! In all these things we are more than conquerors. Rom. viii. 35, 37.

If then our faith is a living bond to God through Jesus the Christ, why should we not claim our high prerogatives now! "We are children of a King." "Now are we the sons of God."

He who hath begun a good work in us will surely carry it on unto the day of Christ, only provided, we permit him to will and to do of his own good pleasure in us, for this is the will of God, even your sanctification, and "fear not little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

Let us henceforth try to discover in each other all there is of good and truth, thus we will gain effectual influence in helping, by that which every joint of the body supplies, to make increase of the whole, growing up into Christ in all things, "till we all come to the unity of the faith to the measure of the stature of the perfect man," when God will be glorified in his saints, and admired in them that believe.

LETTERS AND POSTS OF THE ANCIENTS.

There is reference in the Book of Esther to the first postal service worthy of the name concerning which we have any definite knowledge. (See i., 22; iii., 13, 15; viii. 10, 14; Rollin's Anc. Hist., Bk. 4, chap. 4, art. 1, sec. 4.) Jeremiah (li., 31) refers to some such system among the Assyrians, and it is likely that from the earliest ages kings and men of power made provision for the rapid conveyance of their messages.

In Palestine and other mountainous countries this was done by fleet footmen. Some rulers provided themselves with a corps of those who were qualified by nature and practice to become such messengers. Pliny (as quoted in Dunglison's Physiology, Vol. II., p. 249) says that excision of the spleen was performed on runners as beneficial to their wind.

There is record of those who traveled on foot from Tyre to Jerusalem, one hundred miles, in twenty-four hours; and we read that some could accomplish so much as one hundred and fifty miles during the same period of time. (Barnes on Job ix., 25.) These professional footmen were well known in the time of Job whose language is: "Are not my days swifter than a post (lit. runner)?" Saul, the first Hebrew king, had an organized body of "footmen" (margin, as original, runners), in which respect he doubtless followed the usual custom of kings. Under our English reading "guard" we find these runners to have been a regular corps in the armies of succeeding Hebrew monarchs. Hence the allusion of Jeremiah; "If thou hast run with footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canst thou contend with horses?"

Among nations richer in swift beasts, and dwelling in less mountainous country than the Jews, the runner, doubtless from earliest times, ran with other legs than his own. But the only word used in the Bible for such couriers, whether mounted or not, is the one of which we have spoken, and which is translated "posts." This latter English term, coming from the Latin, originally meant the house or station whence relays of horses were obtained, and where couriers might lodge. Such an original meaning of the word is almost lost to us, though remaining in the expression "military post."

The Persian postal system was established by Cyrus the Great during a reign continuing from 559 to 529 B. C. It was greatly improved by Darius, to whom some even ascribe its origination. (Rawlinson, Anc. Mon., Vol. III., p. 426.) Herodotus (viii., 98) gives the credit to Xerxes. This latter monarch in the earlier years of his reign devoted himself to the thorough organization and the general improvement of his realm. He perceived that the peace and permanency of his rule would be greatly enchanced by quick communication between himself and all parts of his vast empire, that he might thus have prompt and frequent reports from every officer of his government, and be able speedily to transmit his own directions and decrees. Thus only he could have "well in hand" an empire of twenty satrapies and one hundred and twenty-seven districts, extending from India to Ethiopia.

Accordingly, he established post-houses along the chief lines of travel at intervals of about fourteen miles, according to the average capacity of a horse to gallop at his best speed without stopping. At each of these there were maintained by state a number of couriers and several relays of horses. One of these horsemen receiving an official document rode at the utmost speed to the next post-house, whence it was taken onward by another horse, and perhaps by a new courier. Ballantine states that at the present day a good horseman of that country will often travel one hundred and twenty miles or more each day for ten or twelve days consecutively.

Such was the method of transmitting messages existing in the time of Xerxes and Esther, and in our day still employed by the government of Persia, and, under substantially the same form, in thinly settled regions of Russia, and other countries. This system was adopted with some improvements by the Greeks and Romans, and transmitted to the nations of western Europe, with whom in the course of centuries it developed into the inexpressibly useful form in which it has been enjoyed by us.

But in ancient times the postal system was intended only for the monarch and those "whom he delighted to honor," and not for his people, who derived no direct benefit from it. It is true that good roads, bridges, ferries, and inns were established; that by guard-houses these routes were kept free from brigands which infested the empire (Herod. v. 52); and that travellers might journey upon those highways; but it does not appear that they could obtain the use of the post-horses, even when the government was not in need of them. And above all, the post itself was only for the king. It soon became a law of the system that a courier might impress man or beast into his service, and it was regarded a serious offence to resist such impressment. This privilege of couriers was subsequently, as is well known, a part of the Roman system, reference to which is found in the familiar instruction of our Savior, "Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain" (Matt. vi 41; xxvii. 32; Mark xv. 21). The messages of the king were thus "hastened and pressed on" at any inconvenience to the people; but common men must send their letters by caravans, by special messengers, or in any way they might.

The main post-road in Xerxes' day was that from Susa to Sardis, a distance of about fourteen hundred miles (Herod., ibid.). Besides, there was a branch to Ecbatana, and a main line to Babylon, with less important routes to all the localities of the empire.—Wm. P. Alcott in the Lowell Hebrew Club's Book of Esther.

ENGLAND AND RUSSIA.

Sermon by Dr. H. Pereira Mendes at the Nineteenth Street Synagogue.

Dr. Pereira Mendes had announced he would speak upon Hebrew customs concerning the dead, but deferred his remarks in view of the impending conflict between England and Russia, the all absorbing topic of the week. He took his text from Micha, iv. 2; "For the law shall go forth of Zion and the word from Jerusalem."

As Americans, said he, we look at England and know we look at a great heart whose life blood has throbbed to the ends of the earth and made many a waste a garden, filled many a wilderness with happy homes and teeming cities. We know we gaze on a land whose brave children have played a grand part in civilization, and created a name which shall be to all time treasured and emblazoned in brilliant letters on the scroll of the world's famous nations. In the battle of people's rights, ever in the front rank her sons have ever pressed. Mark the great scene at Runnymede where a king first learned that the people had rights. Need I mention besides such characters of liberty as the Petition of Right, the Habeas Corpus, the Bill of Rights? To a liberty-loving people such acts make England's name very dear. Let the myriads of tongues that voice the language of the great mother of great colonists speak. They can but proclaim the triumphs of industry, energy, enterprise, impossible but for the English heritage of freedom. Let the voices speak from the land of the Czar! Behold, the sounds of industry are with the bonds of woe commingled! 'Tis true that in Asian wastes, where Cossack passion waves, life and goods are secure from savage attack, but throughout the whole of holy Russia, industrious suffer and poverty and misery lament the bread-winner's absence. Driven to desperation, peasant and superior unite at the whisper of nihilism, and the land still wet with a Czar's blood cries out to Heaven against official corruption and unjust government.

Turn we to the principle of religious liberty, as dear to the American as his personal liberty, and again England sends to the world a message that stirs the American heart. More than five hundred years ago a Wycliffe commenced the reformation which first waked the world's ears to protest against priestly presumption, and which startled it into new and energetic life when Luther thundered a century and a half after. Turn we to science and discovery, literature and all the industries, and the world finds cause to applaud the land whose sons have in this direction added to her glory. That in her centuried history there are dark spots is most true. Where is the history that shows them not? If the conflict commence the voice of America, where freedom is the watch-word of progress, will go forth to that people which was first among Christian nations to declare the people's rights; to that nation whose triumphs of enterprise are as glorious as they are numerous; to the land which so many young giant colonies so oft think of and call by the name of home. But it is America's duty to raise her voice in the interests of peace and attempt to avert a conflict the fame of whose victories will never atone the shame they will cast on the close of the Christian nineteenth century. Russia and the Jews. Dr. Mendes then showed how Russia's injustice to the Jews, continued still, would alienate Jewish sympathy from Russia; "but," said he "we have other words to speak as Hebrews. We cannot forget we are a nation of priests preaching universal peace, universal brotherhood to an attentive world, and that the hiss of bullets and clang of swords, the moaning of widows and cries of the orphan ascend to Heaven from so many parts of the world. Every honest heart is full of grief that humanity at this date should present such a sad spectacle. We mark how most of the combatants are followers of the religion whose password is peace and good will. We observe how these Christians love one another. The monarch of England, arming for war is proudly called fidei defensor, defender of the faith—the very faith which preaches peace and good will. Head of a vast section of the same faith is the Czar of the land called Holy Russia. Where is the holiness of a land where official corruption is proverbial? There has been more blood shed by "peace and good will" soldiers than the tears of all the angels can atone for. Never has the sword been sheathed, never have widows ceased to mourn for husbands slain since the day those words first were spoken.

When wars shall cease. If after all these years Christianity has not torn the savage out of the heart and taught the world better logic than that the side which has the better soldiers and weapons must always have its own way, because might is greater than right, then we Hebrews must speak louder yet, and plead in the name of peace and its resultant blessings, in the name of justice and intelligence, in the name of those whose homes are darkened through war's bereavement, for our restoration. Not for our own vainglory do we plead, but that the prophet's word may be fulfilled to mankind's benefit. "And it shall come to pass that many peoples shall go and say, Come ye let us go up to the mountain, to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways and we will walk in his paths, for out of Zion shall go forth the law and the word from Jerusalem; and he shall judge among the nations and rebuke many people, and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn of war any more." So sing the prophets; 'tis the music whose witchery consoled the Jew in his centuried wanderings; 'tis the music that sings hope to the world weary with strife. To Zion's courts shall nations turn and not to the sword for decision. Ours be the duty then as Hebrews to preach to the world this message of true peace and real good will. So shall the day hasten to come when from Zion shall go forth law to all nations, and the word from Jerusalem shall be published. Amen.—N. Y. Herald.

The Assyrian Inscriptions (brought to Our Doors).

The British Museum authorities have just published a volume, containing lithograph fac-similes of an important selection of inscriptions in the cuneiform character. By this book, the Assyrian inscriptions are brought to the very door of those who can get access to it. The book contains only a selection, of course, from the inscriptions recently brought to light. In the selection are historical documents of great importance. The most important is the memorial cylinder of King Nabonidus, found by Mr. Rassam in the record chamber of the temple of the Sun god at Sippara. The king commences by a description of the restoration of the great temple of the Moon god at Harran. This temple was one of the most ancient edifices in Western Asia, and was closely connected, indeed a sister edifice, with the great temple of the Moon god in the city of Ur, the modern Mughier, the city from which Abraham migrated. Shalmaneser II. (B. C. 850), the contemporary of Ahab and Jehu, repaired the temple, and it was within its walls that Assursanipal, the Sardanapalus of the Greeks, was crowned. From the same inscription we gain an account of the invasion of Media by Cyrus, and the overthrow of Astyages and the capture of Ecbatana as events taking place in B. C. 550. Not the least interesting in this series are some selected letters and despatches from the Court officials to the king. Full of praise and adulation, they contain much evidence of intrigue and diplomacy, and will be very valuable material out of which to construct and explain the history of the great Empire of Assyria. In this volume the editor has endeavored to obtain as typical a selection as possible, and we are sure that all students will agree that he has been successful.

Except during the three winter months, the climate of Persia is warm and dry. For nine months no rain falls and scarcely a cloud is to be seen. One who has not experienced such a steady climate might think it would prove monotonous. But those who have enjoyed it are very well satisfied with it, and never miss the variable and stormy climate of Europe, and especially that of America.

It is said that the seas on the Australian coast are heavier than any where else in the world. For hundreds of miles black, beetling cliffs from 400 to 600 feet high extend without an opening of any kind into which a distressed ship might run for safety. Round the base of these cliffs the crested hills of angry waves surge and roar, swept along with terrible force by winds born at the Southern Pole, and which, careering over thousands of miles of sea, have encountered lands here for the first time.

Dr. Torrey, United States Assayer, received a few days ago a meteorolite, which fell a few months since upon a slope of the Glorieta Mountains, near Santa Fe, N. M.

The visitor from space, which burst into three fragments in falling, weighs 300 pounds, and is composed almost entirely of metallic iron and nickel. The sides present a fibrous appearance, while the bottom is mottled and bronzed in color. While lying at Santa Fe an effort was made to split one of the fragments, but all the steel wedges employed were broken in the attempt. The meteorolite which is nearly the size of the famous one at the Smithsonian Institution, has been disposed of to one of the great European museums.

In some sections of the northern portion of Arizona the question of water supply, even for domestic purposes, is a very serious one. This is particularly the case at Ash Fork, a station on the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad. A series of very lovely and fertile valleys surround the place, and plenty of grass grows for the support of large herds of cattle, but no water can be had except from an occasional "tank" during the winter season. At Ash Fork the railroad company attempted to sink an artesian well, but after reaching a depth of 900 feet the drill became fastened and could not be removed. Many futile attempts were made to extract it, but at last it was abandoned in despair. All water now used at that station and by the residents of the town is brought by rail from Peach Springs, sixty-five miles to the westward, and is sold at 60 cents per barrel.

A short time ago a prospector, stimulated by the inquiry for water, reported that he had discovered a huge well, about eight miles from Ash Fork, sunk in a level plain. Parties at once repaired thither, with ropes and other paraphernalia, to explore the wondrous discovery. They found the locality, but to this day they do not know the exact nature of the curious covers that met their gaze. It is located on a level plain and can not be seen until it is approached very near. There is no evidence of earth or rock having been removed from the pit, which was found to be 150 feet in diameter and 320 feet deep, with perpendicular walls. No one in the party was brave enough to descend and explore the "wells," when the rope had been lowered; and the explorers returned to Ash Fork scarcely wiser than they were before their trip. It is certainly a great curiosity, and there probably exists a supply of water somewhere in its depths or in its numerous caverns or tunnels that apparently emerge into the dark earth below from this curious threshold of sunlight.—Tucson Citizen.

A Petition after Leaving Brother and Sister Tarr.

Father in heaven another change has come,
And I must leave this pleasant transient home.
My heart is sad knowing that I must go,
For what's before me, Thou alone must know.

Thy promises, Thou dost to me fulfil
While I in weakness strive to do Thy will;
Good hosts, and friends Thou dost for me provide.
While I, into Thy hands, my every want confide.

O, bless the friends that I have left behind
Who've been to me so very good and kind.
Starting with me their all the weary days
Their food and fuel, and their lamp's bright rays.

Supply their need from Thine exhaustless store
Till they arrive where want can come no more.
Be near them in Lord in every trying hour
And shield them by Thine own Almighty power.

Guide Thou my footsteps while I still shall roam
Far from my kindred and my own loved home;
A pilgrim in this vale of sorrow here,
May some kind angel Lord be ever near.

To chide me Lord when'er my feet would stray,
And keep me in the narrow way.
[illegible] to ever come, and in Thy Kingdom share.

And as new scenes and duties now arise
Help me to set to Thy before Thine eyes.
Into the future Lord I see not yet,
Do Thou direct, and I will follow Thee.

In love with Truth I am most blessed Lord,
Alas with those who love Thy holy Word,
And those who love Thy word, my friends shall be
Thro' all this mortal life and to Eternity.

MYSTICAL AND COINCIDENTAL BIBLE TIMES.

"Why seeing times are not hid from the Almighty do they that know him not see his days." (Job.)

"By measure hath he measured the times, and by number hath he numbered the times, and he doth not move nor stir them until the said measure be fulfilled.—Measure thou the time diligently in itself and when thou seest part of the signs past which I have told thee before, then shalt thou understand that it is the very same time wherein the Highest will begin to visit the world which he made. Therefore when there shall be soon earthquakes and uproars of the people in the world, then shalt thou well understand that the Most High spake of these things from the days that were before thee, even from the beginning. For like as all that is made in the world, hath a beginning and an ending, and the end is manifest—even so the times also of the Highest have plain beginnings in wonders and powerful works, and endings in effects and signs." (Esdras).

The Lord says through Moses, "And if ye will not be reformed by me, then will I also walk contrary unto you and will punish you yet seven times for your sins."

Four repetitions are given by Moses of "seven times for their sins." It is one of these four repetitions that I write of to-day as contained in the days given by the angel to Daniel. "How long shall be the vision concerning the daily—and the transgression of desolation to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot." "And he said unto me, unto 2300 days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

The angel said to Daniel, "Understand O son of man, for at the time of the end shall be the vision. Behold I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation, for at the time appointed the end shall be."

Taking the Bible history of things pertaining to the Jews and the events of their time, we find harmony in the Scriptures concerning the "time of the end," "for at the time appointed the end shall be."

"Rise and measure the temple of God and the altar, and them that worship therein. And the court which is without the temple, cast without, and measure it not for it hath been given unto the nations."

Taking out of the Bible the kings of Judah and the years they reigned, we find that about the time of 737 B. C., Israel or the ten tribes, was carried away captive by Shalmanezer, and 2300 years from this event brings us down the stream of time into Queen Elizabeth of England's reign A. D., 1563, with the Protestant Church established in England. A national victory over the Papal power of Rome, a power the Pope has never been able to firmly re-established there again,—Here we find the "measure" and "number" of—1,

Six hundred and six years before Christ, Judah was utterly carried away captive from her land—her temple destroyed, her desolation complete at the hand of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon. Two thousand three hundred years from this event brings us to A. D., 1894—the time when religious persecution in the death was ended in the Reformation ranks, as history records the dreadful persecution attending the Salem witch-craft movement, and of Baptists suffering death for their religion previous to this time. Here is "measure" and "number"—2.

As the birth, death, and resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth, with the natural and spiritual life of the only begotten Son of God, and the first begotten from the dead being manifested is the Way made known to build "the faith" upon into a spiritual temple or sanctuary, "which sanctuary are ye", for "Behold I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious, and he that believeth on him shall not be put to shame.

If ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious, unto whom coming a living stone, rejected indeed of men, but with God elect, precious, ye also as living stones are built up a spiritual house, to be a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ." "Whom say ye that I the Son of man am? Thou art the Christ the Son of the Living God. Blessed art thou Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my church, and the gates of hades shall not prevail against it." (This truth "I am the Son of God.") A firm belief in the truth of the witnesses, the testimony of his disciples—is to build upon the sure foundation. "For I must needs fulfill all things written in the prophets and in the law of Moses and in the Psalms concerning me."

We will see how the apostate church in building her spiritual house—built according to the prophesies. Now we follow Usher's figures. In the above we traced through the kings of Judah. Usher says that "B. C., 534 in the second year after their return from Babylon, they appointed Levites to oversee the work of the house of God, and lay the foundation of the temple." The old men lamenting who before had seen the old temple standing, and the younger sort rejoicing to see the new one going up. Two thousand three hundred years after this event, 1766 A. D., we find a new foundation laid for the temple of God by Whitby in his "New Hypothesis," teaching that the first resurrection was a symbol only, and not the resurrection of the dead in Christ from their graves, at his coming.

And the nominal church have to their own satisfaction laid their hopes entirely in this foundation. Give your hand to our church, enroll your name in our church book. This is the first resurrection, and your salvation is their teaching to converts. Here is the "measure" again with "number" 3.

B. C. 520, Zerubbabel and Joshua incited by the prophets Haggai and Zecharish set forward the building of the temple. Haggai prophesieth that the glory of the second temple shall be greater than that of the former in regard that the blessed Messiah shall one day honor it with his presence and from thence propagate peace to all nations. Through the long vista of 2300 years we come to the wonderful sign year of 1730 A. D., when that singular phenomena occurred, "The dark day" "of thick darkness and no brightness in it." The day the prophets wrote of ages before. "The great day of the Lord is near and hasteth greatly even the voice of the day of the Lord. That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress; a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness." "A day of the trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities, and against the high towers, and I will bring distress upon men, and they shall walk like blind men because they have sinned against the Lord. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy." Zeph. i. 14-18. "The day of the Lord is darkness and not light, even very dark and no brightness in it." (Amos v.) Let us return to Haggai. "Consider now from this day and upward, even from the day that the foundation of the Lord's temple was laid.—consider it. Is the seed yet in the barn? Yea, as yet the vine and the fig tree and the pomegranate and the olive tree hath not brought forth."

"What shall be the sign of thy coming and the end of the world." "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened and the moon shall not give her light," in the answer of Jesus to his disciples' question. It is remarkable that after the great tribulation and martyrdom which the church had undergone from Papal and Pagan power, she should fall into the great and utter darkness of life without the attempts of the body after the Way was manifested in Jesus of Nazareth who was the Sun of righteousness that arose with healing in his wings.

But that this Sun is eclipsed and become dark indeed in the church (the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead) through building on this foundation of sand the "New Hypothesis," is evident from the writings of Lyman Abbot in his Sunday School lesson for May 10, Subject, "Victory over death." In the Christian Union, copied by the Weekly Inter-Ocean.

Mr. Abbott says, "I do not believe in the resurrection of the body. First, I do not enter here into the scientific objections to it. They are so great as to be well nigh invincible. The gathering together the dust of the ages into which by the processes of nature, that is of God, they are disseminated from myriad graveyards and battle-fields—from all the new forms of life, is an act not indeed beyond the conceivable power of the Almighty, but so utterly unlike his methods as we see them in nature and in history as to be incredible. It only needs to be stated to be disbelieved. I doubt whether any intelligent man really does believe it.—He may refuse to think it and may repeat to himself, 'I believe in the resurrection of the body', without considering what it means, or he may entertain it as a religious imagination, while he disbelieves it as a scientific fact. With this juggling I will have no part nor lot. It is perilous to intellectual honesty. No belief is holy that is not wholly believed. No belief is healthy that is entertained in one chamber of the soul and expelled from the other.

Second, But I disbelieve in the resurrection of the body chiefly because it is directly opposed to the clear and explicit teaching of Scripture, and because rooted in a Pagan materialism, it confirms paganism in our theology and administers to us the cruelty of a Pagan comfort in our sorrow. The phrase "resurrection of the body" does not occur in the Bible. The attempt to preserve the body by embalming, so far as it existed among the ancient Hebrew at all was borrowed by them with the worship of the sacred bull from Egypt. Neither the hell nor the heaven of the ancient Hebrew was material, nor were its occupants flesh and blood.

This doctrine unknown to the ancient Hebrews or known only along with other relics of a Pagan superstition, is distinctly, emphatically, vigorously, repudiated by the New Testament, nowhere more distinctly than by Paul in 1 Cor. xv.

But did not Christ rise from the dead? Yes, and so did Lazarus, and so did the son of the widow of Nain. They rose with their earthly bodies. They were not ready for the heavenly sphere. Christ expressly told his disciples that he was not clothed with his spiritual dress. A spirit he says "hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." In that he rose from the dead he became the first fruits of them that sleep. In that in his ascension he was changed in a moment in the twinkling of an eye, and the corruption put on incorruption, he became also the first fruits of them that will not sleep, but will be still alive and remain until the coming of the Lord.

Third. The doctrine of the resurrection of the body, which is directly antagonistic to the teaching of Scripture is as directly antagonistic to its spirit. It is materialistic not spiritual, Pagan, not Christian. It keeps its hold on popular imagination because we persist in looking upon those things which are seen and are temporal, not upon the things which are unseen and eternal.

We believe that the body is the man, we confound the dress with the friend, the tenement and the tenant. We cannot, we will not, believe in the invisible reality; so when the visible begins to disappear, we try in vain to keep it from dissolution, and that being impossible we exhort our imagination to conceive its preservation and reconstruction. "I believe in the resurrection of the body" is the dogma of a sensuous imagination equally opposed by intelligence and by spiritual perception.

That the body dissolves into the earth from whence it sprang, never to return to hinder the soul with its pain, or torment it with its decay, —that the soul passes instantly and without a break from its earthly to its spiritual condition, that there is no long and dreary sleep, no intermediate state. That the day of judgment comes for each soul when in the wisdom of divine grace and love, that boundary is passed beyond which, not even divine grace and love can rescue it from its self-chosen death, that they who are in Christ come not into judgment at all, but have already passed from death unto life. When they have passed from the domain of selfishness into the state of obedience to Christ, that to every redeemed soul, God will give it a body as it hath pleased him, —a body as infinitely superior to this earthly tabernacle with its subjection to decay and death, as the New Jerusalem is superior to our tented camps, and the heavenly fields to the desert of our earthly pilgrimage.... This I believe to be the clear revelation of God's word in whose light and life alone any soul can shout rejoicingly even in death's own presence. Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."—L. Abbott.

Jesus says in his Sermon on the Mount, "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy in thy name, and by thy name cast out demons, and by thy name do many mighty works. And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you, depart from me, ye workers of iniquity. Every one therefore which heareth these words of mine and doeth them shall be likened unto a wise man which built his house upon a rock; and the rains descended and the floods came and the wind blew and beat upon that house, and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these words of mine and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man which built his house upon the sand and the rain descended and the floods came and the winds blew and smote upon that house, and it fell, and great was the fall thereof." Ye are of the household of God being built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus himself being the Chief Corner Stone.

If the Eminent Divine had studied God's word faithfully and thoroughly he would not have fallen into such gross darkness and utter blindness. The resurrection of the body of Jesus was manifest and so taught by the apostles—and Jesus positively declares, "I am the way, the truth, and the life. They that are in their graves shall hear his voice and come forth, and I will raise him up at the last day." His dead body rose from the tomb. Jesus' body was flesh and bones, and this same Jesus whom ye saw go up into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye beheld him going into heaven. He will come in the flesh and bones body. Job says, "In my flesh shall I see God"—Isaiah declares, thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead. How dark in the knowledge of the Lord, and blind to the glorious truth as it is in Jesus, the church has become. Alas for that day is great, so that none is like it. It is even the time of Jacob's trouble, but he shall be saved out of it. "From this day will I bless you." We can see through this resulting belief how in darkness and not in light, the spiritual house is erected on the sandy foundation of Whitbye's "New Hypothesis."

This strange and wondrous sign year ends "Measure" and "number" 4.

Four hundred and sixty-seven B. C., Ezra the priest, a man skilled in the law, obtains a large commission from king Artaxerxes to settle the Jewish commonwealth and to reform the church at Jerusalem. In the seventh year of Artaxerxes, Ezra with a great multitude of Jews, sets out from Babylon (confusion).

Two thousand three hundred years from this time brings us to another sign year A. D. 1833. The stars shall fall (future tense) from heaven, says Jesus in describing to his disciples the signs of his coming and the end of the world, and at this present time we can see that this prophecy was then fulfilled. "The stars of the heaven fell unto the earth (past tense) as a fig tree casteth her unripe figs when she is shaken of a great wind. N. B. It is remarkable that at this time William Miller commenced to preach the soon coming of the Lord, and startled the world by taking his lamp and going forth to meet the Bridegroom, proclaiming the Scripture, "Behold I come quickly." "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn away to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." "Weeping endureth for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." When "the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings." This we find to be "measure" and "number" 5.

Four hundred and fifty-five years before Christ, Ezra obligeth those who had taken strangers to wife to send them away. In the twentieth year of king Artaxerxes "Nehemiah which is the Tirshatha" (Nehemiah interpreted means renew that which hath been polluted, consolation "Tirshatha" means "that overturns the foundations") obtains leave to build the wall at Jerusalem, and finish that great work. The wall was built in troublous times while fifty-two days were they in building it. Two thousand three hundred years from this date resolves down the length of years to 1843—significant as to time—that the inherent immortality of the soul was found to be a strange doctrine, that the church had taken to her bosom, and cherished so long and so fondly, a strange wife indeed when discovered through the law of the Scriptures of truth. "The dead know not anything. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish. Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God, which made heaven and earth, the sea and all that is therein, which keepeth truth forever. The Lord loseth the prisoners."

How strange that many in quoting Testament Scriptures as proof of life and death, can not see that the death state is not mentioned except as sleep. "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness," that the apostles' eyes are constantly fixed on the resurrection from the dead as the time they shall see him as he is, and be like him: that in the resurrection ye are as the angels of heaven." The disciples did not teach that the ascension of Jesus was his resurrection, but when he came out from the tomb where they had laid his dead body—where it was sown in weakness it was raised in power: it was sown a natural body, it was raised a spiritual body. This they taught as the resurrection, Says the angel, "Behold the place where they laid him, he is not here, he is risen, and goeth before you into Galilee."

This strange wife, an immortal soul, and a heaven at death, must be put away for "Thy word is truth." This heresy so beloved of the church, was after faithful Scriptural investigation proved unlawful "according to the law of the Lord," and a false doctrine and cast aside as such by many. This error discovered overturns the foundations laid by Whitby and leaves the house built thereon desolate and wrecked, not one stone left standing on another, "and great is the fall thereof." Their hope is cut off, for "Thy word is as a fire." "Let both grow together until the harvest, and in the time of the harvest I will say to the reapers, gather up first the tares and bind them in bundles to burn them, but gather the wheat into my barn." Fifty-two days (years) were they in building the wall in troublous times. Eighteen hundred and forty-five plus fifty-two equals eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, observes. This date to 1845 is, "number" and "measure" 6.

B. C. 415, is the time given to us by Usher (see index to the Holy Bible, at the close of large Bibles) as the last Jubilee the prophets of the Old Testament ever saw. The time that Malachi the last of the prophets exhorted the people constantly to adhere to the law of Moses, till Christ the Chief Prophet shall appear, whose forerunner, John the Baptist, should come in the spirit and power of Elias to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just. Lest I come and smite the earth with the curse." Through the long vista of 2300 years from the above date, we emerge into the present year of 1885 A. D. Long years are passed since Malachi the last prophet of the Old Covenant, warned and exhorted Israel. "And when they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord harkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him, for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels, and I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not." This completes the "measure" and "number" of seven—and "one" of the "seven times" of Moses, four prophetical warnings to Israel of punishment from the Lord. What hopes lie enfolded in this number for the children of God, watching and waiting will end when he makes up his jewels.

It is noteworthy that the "Herald of the Morning," in the double application of Jerusalem's warfare, gives this present year as the time of The Christ or Messenger of the Covenant coming with "the voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low, and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain. And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. O Zion, that bringest good tidings; get thee up into the high mountain. O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength, lift it up, be not afraid, say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God. Behold his reward is with him, and his work before him. Isaiah xl. "Look up for your redemption draweth nigh." "Lord Jesus come quickly." See Isa. xxvii. 7, 8.

Editor Restitution:

By request I will give a brief account of a series of meetings recently held in this vicinity by Bro. J. S. Hatch.

Some Seventh Day Adventists held forth for several weeks during the first part of the winter, and several expressed a desire to hear our views, so Bro. Hatch was sent for and arrived so as to begin meetings Feb. 24. Owing to the cold weather and bad roads the attendance was not large, but was steady, and the speaker received the best attention.

The subjects were presented in a plain and candid manner. Difficult passages were taken up and explained to the satisfaction of all hearers.

Several were much interested, but as the views presented by some of them, were comparatively new they wished time to investigate before deciding to obey. Bro. L. H. Chesebrough of Galesburgh came March 11 and remained till the close of the meetings March 15. Not the least of the good resulting from the meetings, was the arousing of the members to renewed efforts. There had been no regular meetings of our brethren in this vicinity for some time and the interest in the cause was quite naturally dying out; but we are making another effort to maintain meetings, and also have organized a Bible Class.

Bro. Hatch gained many friends during his stay who will be glad to welcome him should he return. We cheerfully recommend him to any who desire to hear the gospel expounded in a fair and convincing manner.

Yours in the hope.

Conference Notices.

The first quarterly session of the A. C. Conference of north western Pa., will be held with the church at Geneva, Pa., commencing Friday, April 17, and continue over Sunday. The church cordially invite all who believe that the return of "the Nobleman" is near at hand to be present and be benefitted by the meetings.

MRS. L. M. STODDARD, Pres.
MRS. S. A. ATWATER, Sec.

The Church of God at Millerton, Kan., will hold a general meeting, commencing Thursday evening, May 14, continuing over Sunday. Brother C. C. Ramsey has promised to be with us. This will be our first general gathering, and we expect to arrange for a conference, and we are desirous that the brethren and sisters living in this and adjoining counties may be with us, that our arrangements may be perfected. Now brethren and sisters all are invited. Come and let us have a joyful time together praising the Lord. We need a general waking up that we may be found at our duty when the Master calls. Millerton is on the St. Louis, Ft. Scott and Wichita R. R. 22 miles South-west of Wichita.

Brethren and sisters from abroad will find the writer and other brethren living near the station to care for them. H. W. BARNHILL, Sec.

The next annual meeting of the Michigan Church Conference will be held, the Lord willing, at the Brick School House 3½ miles North of Mendon, St Joseph County, commencing Thursday evening June 4, 1885, and continuing over Sunday.

All that are interested in the truth are cordially invited to attend and the brethren and sisters of Michigan are urged to make a special effort to be present at this meeting.

Let none remain away through fear of being a burden to those that entertain the conference, as arrangements will be made to provide for a large number, and all who come will receive a hearty welcome.

Mendon is on the Grand Rapids and Indiana Rail Road, twenty-one miles South of Kalamazoo. Trains will be met at the depot in Mendon on Thursday, to convey passengers to the place of meeting, all are requested to be on hand that day if possible, but any coming later will be met if they will inform the writer of the day and train on which they expect to arrive. An effort will be made to obtain a reduction in rail road fare, and those desiring the benefits of such reductions or any other information in regard to this meeting will please address the undersigned at Mendon.

By order of the Executive Board.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and his immortalized saints joint heirs with him in the government of the nations: the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; their immortalization at the re-appearing of the righteous, and the annihilation of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, as preached to Abraham, as presented to the Israelites in the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for eternal salvation.

THE FOUNDATIONS OF THE BELIEF IN THE IMMORTALITY OF MAN. PART I.

The question which has been proposed for this Symposium has been taken by preceding writers in two different senses, the historical and the theological. 1. What have been regarded by men in past ages as foundations for belief in immortality? 2. What ought we to regard as the solid foundations of belief in it? A similar ambiguity has attached to the word immortality during the discussion. Some of my predecessors have treated it as signifying only an eternal duration of life beyond; others as signifying either a survival which may be of limited duration, or an absolutely eternal survival. In attempting to summarize and disentangle the arguments so far as they have gone I shall indicate my own belief on the main question, while employing the word immortality, not in the sense of a limited survival, but exclusively in its proper sense of an eternal and deathless survival. There is one important principle which underlies the various senses of this word as employed by preceding writers. They all alike take it to signify, both in Latin and English, deathlessness—that is, they take mors, or death, in the sense of ceasing to live, and by the addition of the negative in, they fix the meaning of the compound immortality to the idea of not ceasing to live. All the alleged figurative meanings of death are laid aside, and the word is used by all alike in its natural and fundamental sense, to represent the idea that man, or his soul, will not die, or cease to live. This is well worth noting here, since most of the writers will probably object to my imitation of their own example in the latter part of this argument.

All these who have already written, except Prob. Row and Professor Stokes, have assumed that the proof of survival of the soul at the death of the body is equivalent to the proof of its immortality; and some, especially Mr. G. Horder and Mr. Robinson Gregory, seem to consider the drawing of any distinction between the two almost as trifling with the evidence, and contrary to the established modes of thought both ancient and modern. The distinction, nevertheless, is not only real, but of the highest importance. Throughout the organic world we meet with survivals which are not lasting but temporary. The seeds of all plants are living survivals of portions of the structure which dies, themselves to die in their turn when their end is answered; Nature thus giving, even in the physical sphere, an emphatic warning against the assumption that all parts of an organization which are produced at once, always perish together. They may alike perish eventually, but at different epochs. The butterfly concealed in the chrysalis, if it could reason, might correctly argue from its wings, that it was destined to outlive the chrysalis, but it would be mistaken in thinking that it would live for ever. And, for anything that appears as yet in this series of papers, men may be equally mistaken, while putting their chrysalis speculations in place of Divine Revelation, in confounding all survivals of the soul for judgment (to a vague but real belief in which consciences largely leads mankind), with immortality. No answer has yet given to Prob. Row's observations on this subject in the first paper:—

"For aught we know, he says, "there may be diseases, such as deadly forms of evil, which may destroy the substance of the soul, whatever it may be, just as there are diseases which destroy the body. Further, as we are certain that our conscious existence once had a beginning, we have no means of knowing that when it has fulfilled the purpose for which it has been brought into existence it may not have a termination. These are points on which reason is absolutely silent; and consequently light can be thrown on them only by a Revelation. Reasons which may be adequate to prove that our conscious personality may survive the dissolution of our bodies, may be quite inadequate to prove that it will never have a termination: our ignorance of what Spirit or Personality is renders all reasonings on such subjects alike futile." p. 284.

These observations may be considered in contrast with Bishop Weather's very excellent definitions and assertions in the eighth paper, on the Nature of "spirit," and on the distinction between the "soul" and the "spirit" of animals and mankind. "Whether in the body, or out of the body, the soul is, both in its essence and in its faculties, indestructible. By the law of its being it will live for ever." What can the Right Rev. writer know of essences? What can the coadjutor Bishop of Cardinal Manning, or even Leo XIII., author of the Encyclical "Illustrious Genus" "certainly know concerning "the law of the soul's being," which is unknown to Prob. Row, to Professor Stokes, or to the immense number of able and religious men in all civilized nations who now steadfastly maintain that eternal survival of all human souls cannot be established on grounds either of moral instinct, or of psychology. In a recent Synod of the Reformed Church of France held at Montpellier last October, and composed of men some of them as able as any at Rome, a paper denying this "natural law of being," or inherent immortality, was read by M. Babut (described by M. De Pressensé, the distinguished Senator of France, as the "leader of Evangelical Protestantism" in the Southern Department)—a paper which was assented to by M. Bonnet of Frankfort, the well-known Evangelical Commentator, and supported by Sabatier, the Christian science professor of Montpellier; the whole assembly of fifty pastors offering no serious resistance to their statements. Only last December, again, Professor Bonney, one of our own most distinguished men of science, and a preacher of orthodox Christianity, in his Hulsean lecture at Cambridge, took the same ground, as a believer in life in Christ only, and declined to rest man's hope of immortality on "the law of his being." It seems to me futile to affirm that the solid foundation of human hope lies in a psychological dogma so frequently rejected by men of the keenest sagacity and of steadfast faith. When there is a question of any real doctrine of natural religion, of which it can be said, "God hath showed it to them" Rom. i. 16; as, for example, the doctrine of God's existence, or of the obligation of conscience in matters of justice and purity, or even the general doctrine of "judgment to come," there is no radical difference between honest and godly men in any age or country, and then, I think, Revelation always explicitly confirms the dictates of such natural conscience. But this cannot truly be said of the dogma of the absolute eternity and immortality of all souls,—a dogma on which, notwithstanding the vigorous affirmations of Mr. Garrett Horder and several other symposiasts, there has been no consensus, either in ancient or modern times, among religious men, and of which there is not even one single mention in any of the books of the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, covering a space of 1500 years.

It has been asserted several times in this Symposium that the historical evidence now before us in monuments and books shows that the general belief of ancient nations favored the opinion of the immortality of all souls. Nothing can be farther from the fact. If the Egyptian beliefs, reckoning from the remotest antiquity, may be taken as a specimen of primeval doctrine on this subject, it may be positively declared that all the leading Egyptologers of Europe are now agreed that this belief restricted immortality, or eternal life, to the good; that the Egyptians believed only in a temporary survival of the wicked, whose souls, they steadfastly held, were at last devoured and destroyed by avenging demons, under the judgment of Osiris in Amenti, or the underworld. M. Edouard Naville of Geneva, who stands at the head of this department of study, recently favored me with a letter, in which he says of the ancient Egyptian belief: "I have no doubt that the fate of the wicked is destruction. We often hear of treacherous guides who lead the soul to the place of destruction. It is spoken of enemies who devour souls, who live upon them. It is spoken also of dead spirits, of the furnaces wherein the dead souls are to fall. There is a chapter in the 'Book of the Dead,' of not dying the second death. All these images indicate a final destruction, and that explains why, contrary to what we see in other mythologies, such as Homer's, there is hardly any description of the state of the wicked in the Book of the Dead." Precisely of the same judgment is the great French Egyptologer, the Vicomte E. de Rougé "La seconde mort figure en première ligne parmi les supplices des méchants. Hors, le Livre des morts, livre leurs ames à l'anéantissement." M. Lichtenberger, in the Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, M. Lenormant and Mr. Reginald Stuart Poole, of the British Museum, in recent articles, have expressed an equally positive judgment in the same direction. Among literary men who are historians of opinion, without being Egyptologers at first hand, Professor Rawlinson may be mentioned as maintaining the same conclusion. The Egyptians, from first to last, from the earliest times to the latest, believed in the immortality of the good, but only through union with Osiris, and "justification" after trial; and they also believed that the incurably sicked through various modes of punishment would be utterly destroyed. There is nothing more surely regarded as settled by the most learned authorities on Egypt than this. Perhaps we shall now hear fewer confident statements as to the belief of all antiquity in a future state, necessitated and determined by the quality of the soul as essentially immortal. I must leave my predecessors, who have imputed their own philosophy to the primitive sages, to settle their accounts with the Egyptologers. The Egyptians seem to have had not an inkling of that which Bishop Weathers knows, of the "essence of the soul" or that "law of its being," which rendered it "indestructible," and compelled it, good or bad, to "live for ever."

But then the Scripture writers of Israel seem to have been in precisely the same predicament with the Egyptians; for they never once explicitly teach us that we all have immortal souls; while the New Testament is as silent on this "fundamental truth" as Moses and the Prophets.

In former years I think I attached too much credence to the single testimony of Josephus as to the doctrine of the Pharisees on the "immortality of the soul." Some of them, doubtless, held the heathen psychologies) doctrine on the subject; but during more recent years Archdeacon Farrar has thrown a flood of light on Jewish belief in the age of Christ and the generations following; in his greatest work, on Mercy and Judgment; light which forbids us to rely on the Grecising and deceptive Josephus, and assures us that the Jews of the Roman times largely retained the "Conditionalism" of their forefathers, as expounded by the illustrious Maimonides of a later age. Maimonides distinctly and positively teaches in various forms of speech, that the ancient Hebrew doctrine was the eternal survival of the righteous alone, and that the wicked man is called a "dead" man, because destined to death eternal, in the sense of extinction. Chap. viii. De Pœnitentia.

Modern Jewish writers, such as the French Grand Rabbi Stein, in his work on Judaism, 1859, candidly acknowledge (while maintaining for themselves, along with Dr. Adler, the hope of eternal life on the philosophical basis of natural immortality) that they cannot find that doctrine in the Old Testament. Dr. Stein, with severer accuracy, in my opinion, than Dr. Adler, admits that the natural immortality of all souls, as the basis of a hope beyond death, is not to be found in the Mosaic writings. He says:—

"What causes most surprise in perusing the Pentateuch, is the silence it seems to keep respecting the most fundamental and consoling truths. The doctrines of the immortality of the soul, and of retribution beyond the tomb, are able powerfully to fortify man against the violence of passion, the seductive attraction of vice, and to strengthen his steps in the rugged paths of virtue. Of themselves they smooth all the difficulties which are raised against the government of a Divine Providence; and account for the good fortune of the wicked and bad fortune of the just. But man searches in vain for these truths, which he desires so ardently: he in vain devours with anxiety each page of Holy Writ: he does not find either them, or the simple doctrine of the resurrection of the dead explicitly announced."

Dr Stein then goes on to maintain that these fault's respecting "man's natural immortality," etc., "were supplied by the traditions of the Oral Law." Le Judaisme ou la Vérité sur le Talmud, p. 15.

Rabbi Hermann Adler, in the charming paper, introduces, I venture to think, some confusion into the argument by treating the many clear indications of faith in an eternal life among the saints of the Old Testament, as so many proofs of the natural immortality of the souls of all, as if it were clear that their faith rested on that psychological premise. Rabbi Stein demolishes that "foundation of belief in immortality" in Old Testament times, by frankly confessing that the Hebrew Bible contains "not one single indication of hope built on such a basis." But Rabbi Adler, I think, demonstrates with a victorious exegesis against Prob. Row, and other questioners of the faith and hope of the saints of Judaism, that both Moses and the prophets had just as sure a belief in the immortal life of the servants of God as good men possess in modern times. How could it be that the saints of a nation who had lived for several centuries in Egypt, where the world to come was almost as vividly conceived of as the present world, where elaborate pictures of the judgment of the soul after death were painted on every mummy-case, and depicted in every copy of the "Book of the Dead," were [illegible] all the wicked be [illegible] Psa. xxxiv. 20. "When the wicked spring as the grass, and all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is that they shall be destroyed for ever," Psa. xcii. 7; the strongest Hebrew word for extermination.

So much, then, on the foundations of belief in man's immortality that prevailed in Egypt, and among the Israelites. The heathen Greek foundations of belief in it are well represented by Plato and his followers. Mr. Page Hoppa and Mr. Garrett Horder, whose highly interesting papers recede the eloquence of Isæde as imaginative compositions. I am compelled, however, to admit that they rest their opinion and hope on a more sandy basis than that of the great Athenian sage, since Plato at least provided for future immortality by the assumption of pre-existence. Mr. Horder and Mr. Page Hopps, on the contrary, wish us to think—notwithstanding all we now know of the mode of production of human beings, of the gradual process of their development from germs—that the animating principle of each (it may be) abortive human formation, at some unknown stage of its imperfect evolution, acquires a durability, in all cases, by the Divine Will, as everlasting as the nature of Deity itself. If those who hold this belief—whether thinking that souls come ex traduce, or by distinct creation, which Bishop Weathers pronounces to be the true doctrine—would give some approximate idea of the pre-natal epoch at which this marvelous gift of an immortal soul is bestowed, it would become easier for us to accept their opinion. At present, although fully sensible of the magical effect of both Mr. Horder's and Mr. Page Hopps' Platonic utterances, and not altogether regardless, either, of the authority of the Pope, alleged by Bishop Weathers, or of the authority of the Methodist Conference, represented by Mr. Robinson Gregory, I still found myself, like Cicero, after reading the Phædo, relapsing into incredulity immediately that the music ceased.

To do them justice, however, Mr. Page Hopps, Mr. Garrett Horder, and Mr. R. Gregory, all attribute some utility, as aiding our faith in our natural immortality, to the Christian revelation. Mr. Horder especially attributes to "Jesus Christ" the "confirmation of the idea of immortality," "though it did not originate with him." "He has changed a yearning into a settled assurance." "He has brought life and immortality to light by the Gospel," that is, "He has brought it from the realm of shadow into the revealing light of day." The "it" here is the supposed fact of the natural immortality, the naturally deathless life, of souls born of Adam.

This leads to the principal observation which I have to offer on the preceding series of papers, with the exception of those of Mr. Row and Professor Stokes. Neither the Jewish Rabbi nor the Unitarian philosopher may listen willingly to me here, but I submit my opinion, not altogether without hope, to their candid consideration also, while specially addressing those who accept, with me, a belief in the Christ of the New Testament, the Word made flesh.

Nothing has struck many readers in the careful and repeated perusal of the preceding contributions to this Symposium on the true foundation of the belief in man's immortality, so much as the contrast between the insignificant place assigned in those arguments to the Divine incarnation, and the central place assigned to it as the foundation of immortal hope for man in all the New Testament writings.

In these contributions there has prevailed even in the most orthodox of the series, as Principal Cairns's, a persistent endeavor to lay the basis of our hope of eternal life on the original constitution of man as immortal in his spirit, however perishable in his body. It is man as man who "hath immortality." It is this they think which renders it no urgent a case, before the Divine Mercy, to redeem him from the eternal misery into which sin will sink him, if he dies impenitent. In the four Gospels, and in the Apostolic Epistles, I find no single sentence corresponding with these endeavors. Man's soul is nowhere affirmed to be endued with immortality. No single argument set forth by Mr. Horder or Mr. Hopps, by Mr. R. Gregory or Bishop Weathers, is even once referred to by Christ or Apostles, as the foundation of a hope of a deathless life beyond. On the contrary, all the resources of language are exhausted by the New Testament, in attributing the gift of everlasting life to the Incarnation of the Son of God.

The doctrine of the union of the eternal Logos of God with the humanity of our Lord Jesus Christ has ever been the grand crux of the New Testament Christianity. To get rid of this, whole Gospels must be declared pious forgeries of a later age, whole Apostolic Epistles condemned as spurious. I reject, indeed, as inexpedient, the systematic popular use of the unbiblical term "Trinity," as also several of the bolder definitions of the very late so-called Athanasian Creed, as going beyond the record. But firmly holding the authenticity of St. John's Gospel, and maintaining with Dr. Dorner that this Gospel only more fully expands what is already clearly taught in the Synoptics, Christ is to me the Eternal Son of God. But in the Apostolic writings I find this mystery of mysteries always taught, both by Christ and his followers, in closest connection with the gift of eternal life to regenerate men. The doctrine of the two Adams underlies and runs throughout the New Testament:—of the first Adam through whom we receive "sensual" or psychical life, and of the second Man, "the Lord from Heaven," from whom we receive "spiritual" and "eternal" life. The doctrine of Regeneration is based upon this distinction. Unless we are born twice, we shall die twice. "Ye must be born again," or die the "second death." Rom. viii. 3, 14. "The world passeth away and the lust thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever." 1 John ii. 17.

In every conceivable mode of speech, Christ himself unites this assertion of his own Godhead with that of man's "not dying," or "perishing," "but having everlasting life." That wonderful and much neglected chapter, John vi., is one prolonged declaration that man's undying life depends on the Divine incarnation.

Need I add that in the judgment of the present writer, now supported by that of many far more competent persons, these two stupendous facts are closely connected in the relation of Cause and Effect; and that the main difficulty in Apostolic Christianity, the doctrine of the Eternal Sonship and Divine nature of the Christ, is explained as the incarnation of "the life" John i., by the relation given; that this awful proposition has for its end the endowment of men—doomed to perish under the law—with an ever-expanding indestructable life in God, so that here, and here alone, is the true foundation of the belief in man's immortality." Sinful Man's everlasting being and blessedness are the results of the Divine incarnation, and are not the results of his natural constitution.—Edward White.

*Among the punishments for sinners the second death figures last in the scale. Hence, the corrupting deity delivers their souls over to annihilation. This French quotation means—the Second death is the Capital punishment.

Energy.

The Christian is known by the energy with which he wills to do right. He does not merely love what is good, but chooses it with power. We often hear of greatness of character. The only true greatness consists in unconquerable purpose of obedience to God. It consists in adhering with energy and courage to truth, duty and honor. It consists in asking ourselves, first not what is generous, but what is excellent and acceptable to God.

The true use of the trials and temptations of life, and of the turbulent passions in our own breasts, is to call forth spiritual energy and heroic purposes. Excellence must be pursued earnestly. Our whole nature must be awake. Who does not see that such a world is fitted to form a higher order of minds than a state removed from temptation? True, we must toil, but the harvest is rich. Force of moral purpose makes us happy. Happiness does not consist, as men are apt to imagine, in passive enjoyment; it is found in the strenuous use of our best affections. Moral energy inspires an unconquerable resolution, and fills us with a rare delight. The most exulting moments of life are those when, after a conflict of strong passion with the sense of duty, we come off conquerors.—Channing

Conference Notices.

The Church of God at Millerton, Kan., will hold a general meeting, commencing Thursday evening, May 14, continuing over Sunday. Brother G. C. Ramsey has promised to be with us. This will be our first general gathering, and we expect to arrange for a conference, and we are desirous that the brethren and sisters living in this and adjoining counties may be with us, that our arrangements may be perfected. Now brethren and sisters all are invited. Come and let us have a joyful time together praising the Lord. We need a general waking up that we may be found at our duty when the Master calls. Millerton is on the St. Louis, Ft. Scott and Wichita R. R. 23 miles South-west of Wichita.

Brethren and sisters from abroad will find the writer and other brethren living near the station to care for them. H. W. BARNHILL, Sec.

The next annual meeting of the Michigan Church Conference will be held, the Lord willing, at the Brick School House 3½ miles North of Mendon, St. Joseph County, commencing Thursday evening June 4, 1885, and continuing over Sunday.

All that are interested in the truth are cordially invited to attend and the brethren and sisters of Michigan are urged to make a special effort to be present at this meeting.

Let none remain away through fear of being a burden to those that entertain the conference, as arrangements will be made to provide for a large number, and all who come will receive a hearty welcome.

Mendon is on the Grand Rapids and Indiana Rail Road, twenty-one miles South of Kalamazoo. Trains will be met at the depot in Mendon on Thursday, to convey passengers to the place of meeting, all are requested to be on hand that day if possible, but any coming later will be met if they will inform the writer of the day and train on which they expect to arrive. An effort will be made to obtain a reduction in rail road fare, and those desiring the benefits of such reductions or any other information in regard to this meeting will please address the undersigned at Mendon.

THERE has been a collision between the State troops of Illinois and a mob of striking quarry-men at Lamont in that state, in which the militiamen were assailed with a shower of missiles from the infuriated mob which was replied to with bullets on the part of the troops, resulting in the killing of two of the strikers.

THE first part of an article on the subject of immortality by Edward White will be found in the present number. One point deserves particular notice, which is, that the Egyptians did not believe in the immortality of the wicked, but held that eternal existence was conditional. Since re thanks to the author for sending the paper.

THE latest news from Europe is that an effort will be made to settle the Anglo-Russian difficulty by arbitration. On Monday afternoon it was stated by Earl Granville in the House of Lords that England and Russia had agreed to renew negotiations in London concerning the Afghan frontier question, and that the difficulties which had arisen from the Penjeh incident should be submitted to a "full investigation and reference to friendly powers." The feeling is, however, predominant in many minds that war is only postponed.

A Church with Apostles and Prophets.

Now and then our friends in different parts of the land encounter the claim, that as the primitive church of Christ contained prophets and apostles, the true church of the present day must also contain them, and consequently every church which does not contain them is a spurious church; and furthermore, that as the church of Latter Day Saints (called Mormons) is the only one that does contain them, it must be the only genuine church on earth. This claim has deceived many and led them into a system of delusion.

A few thoughts concerning this claim may be appropriate; and perhaps its fallacy may be seen by relating a little conversation with a leading Mormon Elder on this point. Said he, "The true church of Christ contained prophets and apostles, did it not?" yes. "Then any church that does not contain them must be a spurious church?" "Certainly so." "But the Advent church does not have prophets and apostles in it, and therefore cannot be a genuine church." Here you are mistaken." "What, you don't mean to say that there are prophets and apostles in the Adventist church, do you?" "I certainly do." "Well, I never heard of that before." "But I know it a long time ago; and I would not belong to a church without prophets and apostles." "Well that is news to me." "I presume so: but I will now inform you wherein we differ from you in this matter. In the language of Paul, we 'are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone.' So we have the apostles and prophets where they belong—at the foundation—while you have a tier of prophets and apostles as the building progresses; and now as we are putting the rafters and shingles on to the building, you want to put on apostles and prophets for rafters and shingles. As well might you have several tiers of Christs in the building, and have a new Christ to top off the building with."

That seemed to set him to thinking. Possibly it may make others think, who have been puzzled with this notion. We want apostles and prophets in our church, but we want them just where God put them, in the "foundation," for he new they were needed; and after God has given us a foundation, we had better not attempt to build new foundations higher up in the building; and certainly it would be folly to put a new foundation on top of the house. Death never took our apostles and prophets out of the foundation—they are still there—and we propose to keep building on this foundation without building on others.—*N. Y. ### INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE.

Proposal to Explore the Great Pyramid of Gizeh by Means of a Diamond Drill.

At the meeting last evening, April 13, Mr. Edward Hine was elected a life member.

Letters was read from Professor C. Piazzi Smyth, James M. Durkee, S. E. Massey, J. L. Dampier, J. N. Wing, Alfred E. Watkins, William E. Brown, Henry Kellogg, Dr. E. M. Epstein, J. P. Weothee, N. F. Safford, Samuel Berwick, Professor I. N. Vail, Rev. J. Upjohn, W. K. McAllister, Jacob M. Clark, J. M. Goodwin.

Much interest was elicited by the proposal of an engineer to explore the great Pyramid of Gizeh by means of diamond drills. It is generally believed by pyramid students that, in addition to the chambers and passages already discovered, the pyramid contains other chambers, whose exact locality is yet unknown. One half of the hill at the northern site has lately been found to be formed of stone chippings left by the pyramid builders. Among these chippings near the top are found those of diorite white and black. No such material is found in any of the tombs in the vicinity, or in the pyramid itself, except near the entrance passage; hence the inference, in the minds of explorers and Egyptologists, of an undiscovered room. Many have endeavored to find an entrance thereto, but so far it has remained a sealed mystery. It has also been found that the entrance on the north side of the structure is twenty-five feet east of the center. This being an unusual position for an entrance has led to the belief that its location is due to other chambers, yet undiscovered, on the west side. There have also been discovered three stones having oblique joints, which are vis-a-vis to the portcullis block. These stones are claimed by those who have examined them to be two secret key marks, designed as a guide for men at a remote period. This and much other testimony leads to the belief that the grand old building has not yielded up its secrets. It is proposed to fully equip a party of engineers for a stay of several months at the seat of operations. These engineers, in addition to the usual outfit provided for such expeditions, will be furnished with a diamond rock boring drill and compressor, a small steam boiler and appurtenances, suitable pumping apparatus and an electro dynamo.

General Stone, lately commander-in-chief of the Egyptian army, expressed himself in favor of the plan of operations and has furnished much valuable information.

Arrangments were made for the lecture of Mr. Edward Hine of London, the English apostle of the theory of the Anglo-Saxon race being identical with the lost ten tribes of Israel. Mr. Hine has been lecturing to crowded audiences in New York, Brooklyn, Boston and other eastern cities, and has elicited great interest in this grand truth. He will preach here next Sunday on this subject and lecture on the week following at the tabernacle on Wednesday, the 29th inst., of which notices will appear.

Mr. A. M. Fearles read a translation from the work of M. Lecointre, an engineer engaged with M. de Lesseps in the construction of the Suez canal, entitled "Campagne of Moses," throwing a new light upon the route of the exodus and the actual point where it crossed the Red Sea. This will appear in the next number of The International Standard.

A very interesting paper by J. Ralston Skinner on "Hebrew Metrology" was read and illustrated on the blackboard by Mr. Latimer. An able review by Mr. Hess in the Fort Dodge Chronicle of the last number of The International Standard was also read.

The meeting adjourned for two weeks.

Arctic Discoveries.

Speaking of the discoveries of the Greely party, the Interior says:—

"They put beyond dispute the fact that the Polar sea is not a solid block of ice the year round; that there is really open water in that region, and that its currents are swift and strong. In 1882 a portion of the expedition, following in Markham's northward route, found the so-called immovable ice to be constantly in motion and themselves floating on an immense ice cake. Still another party, traveling about 488 miles from the pole, the nearest point ever reached by man, discovered indubitable indications of a comparatively prolific animal and vegetable life. These discoveries completely upset the theories of the English explorers that an open Polar ocean is a figment of the imagination, and that the approach to the Pole is out off by a sea of immovable ice and the utter absence of animal or vegetable life. They prove that there are strong currents sweeping northward in the Polar sea, and open reaches of water which might prove navigable under favorable conditions; and that, with a series of stations connected with an accessible base of supply, a close approach might be made to the pole. These are valuable facts amply compensating for the suffering and fatality incurred, and reflecting the highest honor upon the American name. They form, with the meteorological work of the party, a complete record of one of the highest latitudes ever attained by man, and an invaluable contribution to the world's stock of scientific knowledge."

A Certain Sound.

True religion is practical; it is to shine out in the life and to speak in the daily conduct. It is not for the cloister, but for the home, the shop, the counting room, the market. It is not for Sundays only but for week-days. It is seen and heard not only in the conference room, but in the walks of business and social life. It consists not only in devout feeling and ecstatic emotions, but in helpful, self-denying acts of liberality and kindness. It has not only prayers, but alms. It not only vies

"With Gabriel while he sings
In notes almost divine,"

it cheerfully descends to the lowliest paths of Christian service and toil.

Religion is not philosophy or speculation or mysticism, but something for the every-day wrap and woof of life. It makes a man honest, charitable, kind among his fellows, as well as reverential and believing before God. It is the source and origin of all true morality, of all right living, of whatsoever things are honest and lovely and of good report. This is the religion that shows by its fruits that it is divine.

Newspapers of To-Day.

People generally, and even those who may be termed steady readers and close observers, have but a faint conception of the multitude and influence the press of this country has attained. From a careful examination of the advance pages of the 1885 edition of the American Newspaper Directory, issued May 1st, by Geo. P. Rowell & Co., of New York, it appears that there are 14,147 newspapers and periodicals published in the United States and Canada; of these the United States has 12,973, an average of one paper for every 3,867 persons. In 1884 the total number of newspapers was less by 823 than at present, and while the gain this year is not so marked as in some previous years, it is still considerable. Kansas shows the greatest increase, the number being 78, while Illinois follows with a gain of 77. It is curious to notice that New York, the scene of so much political activity during the last campaign, should have only about one-third as many papers as the State of Pennsylvania. As an index to the comparative growth and prosperity of different sections of the country, especially the Territories, the number of new papers form an interesting study, and may well occupy the attention of the curious.

The invention of the modern system of punctuation has been attributed to the Alexandrian grammarian Aristophanes, after whom it was improved by succeeding grammarians; but it was so entirely lost in the time of Charlemagne that he found it necessary to have it restored by Warnefried and Alcuin. It consisted at first of only one point, used in three ways, and sometimes of a stroke, formed in several ways. But, as no particular rules were followed in the use of these signs, punctuation was exceedingly uncertain, until the end of the fifteenth century, when the learned Venetian printers, the Manutii, increased the number of the signs, and established some fixed rules for their application. These were so generally adopted that we may consider the Manutii as the inventors of the present method of punctuation; and, although modern grammarians have introduced some improvements, nothing but a few particular rules have been added since their time.—Cassell's Popular Educator.

Notes by the Way.—No. 4.

March 14 finds me safely landed in the town of Morrill, Brown Co., Kansas, at the home of Bro. C. A. Saylor, a very worthy Brother, sound in doctrine and in practice. I commence preaching the word to a good audience, a larger portion of which were young people, raised in the place, but brought up under the influence of Dunkard parents. I was invited to speak in the house of worship occupied by the Dunkards, and I accepted the invitation for Sunday Evening. I remained with the brethren until the 29, holding forth the word of life in their school house. There are a few noble souls that are holding on to the word, waiting for the Kingdom. I delivered 16 discourses in the Spirit of exposition and exhortation. No special results, observable. A longer effort might accomplish something with the help of the Lord. One word in regard to the country. Brown Co., is situated in the N. E., portion of Kansas, the surface is quite rolling, on the streams gently undulating, on the prairie adapted to corn, of which a large crop is annually raised, also fine blooded hogs and cattle. Orcharding is cultivated with perfect success. I never saw such beautiful apples at this season of the year, large, fair and juicy. The trees are also clean and thrifty. Such delightful roads I have not seen in any other country in the spring, so soon after the melting of the snow. I left this part of the State April 2, and after a series of delays, misconnections, and lay-overs, I arrived at Girard, in Crawford Co., S. E. Kansas. There are a few families of the faith living from seven to twelve miles west of Girard. Once there was a church of forty members that met for worship at this place, but from a variety of causes they are reduced to twenty. Judging from what I see there are a few who lament the lax condition, but they are helpless to remedy it on account of a lack of co-operation. There is rather more than the usual amount of back-sliden ministers in and around the county. Some have completely denied the faith and resort to card-playing and other amusements; others have turned their attention to buying and selling, and while they assent to the truth they make no profession of living it, and some have gone to the devil by the way of the Dark Valley R. R. viz: Whiskey, and it is no wonder that the word and the seats point to these apostates as sample restitutionists. We ask what good can God or man do in a community where such elements exist? This people have been cursed by a herd of jealous preachers who like the Kilkenny cats, fought until there was nothing left, but the evidences of their strife. Right here allow me to give my opinion as to why we as a people are growing less in number and influence. I have observed in my travels in several states an immense amount of dead, leafless timber; not even a bud that promises life or fruitage. It is a sad state of affairs. There must be a cause to produce such an effect. I have used the above figure to illustrate the once believers in the gospel, who are dead, twice dead, plucked up by the roots. Wells are they without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest. Again "like priest like people" is a true saying. One of the most destructive causes of our desolation is our lack of system and unity in essentials. One preacher insists that no organization is the true plan, another fires his blunderbuss at public prayer. Still another caters to the covetousness of his hearers he bragging that he is like Paul, supporting himself by his hands, that it is not a gospel way to take pay, and when his hearers practice what he teaches he gets mad and quits. Another feels called upon to open his battery, and shot and shell the Holy Spirit until the recoil of his gun knocks him over and he is laid up for repairs. And thus it goes on to the end of the chapter. No Spirit consequently no life; no organization, therefore no order; no prayer, no praise, no breaking of bread. Is it any wonder that this dried, lifeless timber lies strewn over these prairies. When the Master comes will they be accounted worthy of that age and that resurrection, or will the writing on the wall find them wanting. Oh, how important that we continue faithful over the few things committed to our trust, let us try to shun the many stripes that will be due him who knoweth his Master's will and doeth it not. Adieu, more anon.

C. O. RAMSAY.

Youth's Column.

Things that Never Die.

The pure, the bright, the beautiful,
That stirred our hearts in youth,
The impulse of a wordless prayer,
The dream of love and truth,
The longing after something lost,
The spirit's yearning cry,
The striving after better hopes—
These things shall never die.

The cheerful hand stretched forth to aid
The brother in his need,
The kindly word in grief's dark hour,
That proves a friend indeed;
The plea for mercy, softly breathed,
When justice threatens nigh:
The sympathies of a contrite heart—
These things shall never die.

Let nothing pass, for every hand
Must find some work to do;
Lose not a chance it may be given,
Be true, and just, and free;
So shall a light that cannot fade
Beam on thee from on high,
And angel voices say to thee,
"These things can never die."

Speak kindly in the morning; it lightens the cares of the day, it makes the household and all other affairs move along more smoothly. Speak kindly at night, for it may be that before the dawn some loved one may finish his or her space of life, and it will be too late to ask forgiveness. Speak kindly at all times; it encourages the downcast, cheers the sorrowing, and very likely awakens the erring to earnest resolves to do better, with strength to keep them. Kind words are balm to the soul. They oil up the entire machinery of life, and keep it in good running order. Always leave the house with loving words, for they may be the last.

---

In a sermon on the feeding of the five thousand by our Lord, a minister lately spoke of the lad who brought the barley-loaves and the woman who made them. Little did she think, as she pounded the grain and mixed the dough, and tempered the heat of the oven, that her loaves were to feed the gathered companies, who sat down in orderly ranks on the green grass, and were refreshed by a meal provided over by Christ. As little do we know whereunto one small act of ours may grow. The obscure agents in this world are often stronger than those who are seen.—Intelligencer.

Reading the Bible.

1. Read the Bible regularly. A good man of old says: "I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food." This is the true idea. The Bible is daily bread to be taken regularly that the soul may grow thereby.

2. Read the Bible attentively. The meaning of the Bible is in the Bible. Unless he that reads gets the meaning, it will not do him good. Hasty reading of a good many chapters at once is of no advantage. Read slowly, a little at a time, and think on what you read, and you will understand and remember it.

3. Read the Bible as God's book; not merely because father or mother wishes you to read it, but for better reason—because God speaks to you in the Bible. When I have seen a little girl run, her eyes sparkling with joy, crying, "O mother! here's a letter from father to me, for my name is on the outside," I always wish she might thus look on the Bible, for it is a letter from our Father in heaven. So feel and so read, and you will not grow weary of the Good Book.

These few hints are enough for once. Will not our young readers remember them, and read every day with great attention, the Book of God? I love to see a child, as I do sometimes, take her little Bible every morning and sit down to read a chapter, without waiting for any one to tell her to do it. This is a better habit than Willie's for he only read occasionally, and had to be reminded often of his duty. Read often, and love to read, children and you will not forget it.—The Golden Lesson.

Dear Children:

It is joy, and comfort to me, in my declining years, to unfold to your tender minds the precious histories contained in the blessed Scriptures, and like the little bee "whose fruit is the sweetest of all things," I not only desire to gather for myself, but hive for others also. The beautiful stories in the Bible differ from those we read in other books, for it gives an outline of the evil in human nature, as well as the good; and we are confident it is all true. You will remember that it is written, that "a rich man can hardly enter the kingdom of God;" because the deceitfulness of riches choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful. "The poor man is hated even of his own neighbors, but the rich man hath many friends." I want to interest you in one who made himself rich, yet had nothing. His possessions were in a place which signifies, "Harvest full of ears of wheat." He was very great, being a man of immense wealth, having three thousand sheep, and a thousand goats which used to graze on a beautiful mountain where a noted prophet offered a sacrifice well pleasing to Jehovah. The rich man whose name signifies "A fool," was shearing his sheep, and at such a time a great feast was generally prepared. His wife was of a sweet disposition, kind, and benevolent, a woman of good understanding and of a beautiful countenance; the meaning of her name is, "My Father's Joy." In a wilderness not far from the rich man's possessions, a man of God sought refuge there. A cruel king whose name signifies "Slaughter," threatened to kill him. Of this dear one, I have often told you, whom you will remember, when I call him the noble shepherd boy, or the sweet singer of Israel, whose name signifies "Beloved." When he heard the rich man had prepared a great feast, he sent ten men, and said, Ask him in my name of peace, and thus shalt thou say unto him that liveth in prosperity, Peace be both to thee, and peace be to thine house, and peace be to all that thou hast; give, I pray thee, whatsoever cometh to thine hand unto thy servants, and thy son, the Beloved. But the churlish rich man answered, Who is the Beloved? and what care I whose son he is? There be many servants now-a-days that break away every man from his master. Shall I take my bread, and my water, and my flesh that I have killed for my shearers, and give it unto men whom I know not whence they be? The servants of the Beloved were grieved with this unkind answer, for with care they had watched the rich man's cattle, assisting his servants all they could. When they delivered the cruel message, the Beloved said, Gird on every man his sword and follow me. And about four hundred went with him, fully prepared to destroy the rich man and his household, because of the hardness of his heart, as it is written, "a rich man answereth roughly." During this time one of his servants told his benevolent wife the unkind message he had sent to the Beloved, and he finished his conversation by saying, "My master is such a son of Belial, that a man cannot speak to him." This greatly troubled his tender hearted wife, and quickly she departed, taking with her two hundred loaves, two bottles of wine, five sheep ready dressed, five measures of parched corn, a hundred clusters of raisins, and two hundred cakes of figs, but she told not this to her husband, and as she was journeying, she met the Beloved with his warriors, and when she saw him, she fell at his feet to the ground, and said: Upon me, my lord, upon me, let this iniquity be. Let thine handmaid speak, I pray thee, and hear the words of thine handmaid. Let not my lord, I pray thee, regard this man of Belial, for as his name is, so he is; folly is with him. Thine handmaid saw not the young men whom thou didst send. Now therefore, my lord, as the Lord liveth, seeing the Lord hath withholden thee from coming to shed blood, and from avenging thyself with thine own hand, let thine enemies be as this foolish one, let this blessing I have brought be given to the young men that follow thee. Forgive the trespass of thine handmaid. The Lord will make thee a sure house, because evil hath not been found in thee all thy days. Yet a man is risen to pursue thee, and to seek thy life, but the soul of my lord shall be bound in the bundle of life, with the Lord thy God; but when the Lord shall have dealt well with thee, then remember thine handmaid. And the Beloved said unto her, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, which sent thee this day to meet me, and blessed be thy advice, which hast kept me this day from coming to shed blood, for in very deed as the Lord God of Israel liveth which hath kept me back from hurting thee, except thou hadst hasted, and come to meet me, there had not been one left in thine house. And he said unto her: Go in peace, I have harkened to thy voice.

When the dear wife returned home to her husband, her grief was increased when she saw him sitting at a great feast, like the feast of a king, merry with wine, for he was very drunk. Being a woman of good understanding, she resided it well not to mention what had occurred until the morning. When she related the circumstance, the heart of her husband died within him, and he became as a stone, just like he was in his disposition, hard and cruel, and after ten days the Lord smote him so that he died. After his death, the Beloved, who had seen the sweet, affectionate nature of the one who was her Father's Joy, married her, which made her the wife of a king.

Dear children, can we not discern the evil of riches. What a tendency it has to harden the heart. Our Heavenly Father saw fit to send his beloved Son into the world, so poor, that he had not where to lay his head. Let us earnestly crave the true riches, which addeth no sorrow thereto.

Your affectionate teacher.

MONITORY.

UNKNOWN INFLUENCE.

How unconscious we often are, when we utter the word, or write a line, that there may be within winged seeds, which will take root in some far off quiet place, of which we may have never dreamed, or by the wayside of some busy mart we have never passed. From these may come blossom or fruits which will cheer and refresh journeying pilgrims, or arrest steps that are hastening on to utter forgetfulness of God.

This thought recurred as I recalled a little article, read long since, and which may have entirely passed from the mind of the writer. It was an editorial, the subject, "Ye are not your own." The simple truth, as it was treated, gave an impulse to my religious desires and devotions that has never left me. I cannot recall a single sentence distinctly, but like a song that is once heard, sung in harmony with heavenly airs, and life's best chords, its vibrations never have ceased.

A heart-reward thought, a cheering truth, a word
Breathed with true prayer, in heaven God hearth are heard,
Nor changed, nor lost, by distance, or by volume,
In worldly vortex, or by flights of time.

Some laborer, who, perchance, has wept o'er leaves,
Feels fruit will find, and gather golden sheaves,
And when Life's river stops their weary feet
The sower, reaper, and the saved shall meet.

THE WORLD'S BIBLE.

The Christian is the world's Bible. Whether we will or no, that is the book the world will read. They will judge the truth of God by this test. Thus we are being read, and the world is getting information for or against religion. What an exhortation to correctness of conduct and conversation! The text from which each of us is preaching is himself. "Ye are our epistle, known and read of all men." If we are the world's Bible, we must live its truth. A life always has more power than a precept. It is a holy principle worked out to its proof, and that is always power.

True, the world will not always read fairly. It will ask perfection where it only has a right to ask a seeking for it. It will read sidewise or backwards and deal harshly sometimes. It will ask a model in us when we can only point to Christ as the Model, and prove what we are by attempts to reproduce it. How important that we leave upon the world the general impress and consciousness that we are practicing that holy rectitude which has its origin in the love of God. If those that read us find in us God's truth, then we are circulating a Scripture of truth,—the world's Bible in use to good purpose. Many of us need rebinding, reprinting, rebarmonizing. God's impress must stamp character upon us, and we in turn stamp the great world-volume. What the Church and the world want just now is more of these world's Bibles of a better type. Christ was the living Word added to the written Word, and we as followers of Christ need to reveal him to mankind with our lives.

REMEMBER

That we will send THE RESTITUTION to the poor, at their request, so long as we can get the means to publish the paper. Let all our brethren who have means to use in sending the good news to others, send us the name of some friend or relative, and send us an extra dollar, to send the paper to them. If you cannot think of any such persons send the money, and we will apply it where it will be appreciated and return blessings on the donor.

REMEMBER

When sending your remittance that many sums of money are lost every year by the careless manner in which many send their subscriptions to newspapers; so please get a Post Office Money Order, a Bank Draft, an Express Money Order, or have your letter Registered. Do not send Bank Checks, as it costs us from twenty-five to forty cents to collect each one. If you are compelled to send postage stamps buy those of the one or two cent denominations. We do not want large ones.

THE JEW.

He wanders 'mong the nations,
An exile from Judah's hills,
Not fruit, nor place can change him—
A Jew as wanders still.

He falls before the dread simoom,
That in the desert blows;
He shivers underneath the blast,
'Mid the long Polar snows.

Landless and exiled on he roams,
Dwellest in every clime,
While the Turkish Crescent's waning o'er,
His own loved Palestine.

The rise and fall of empires,
Have passed his wandering view,
Ah! what a life of destiny,
Is that of thine, O Jew!

The proud, the impious Babylon,
The seat of pride and lust:
He writhed beneath her captive chain,
Then pressed her in the dust.

The blaze of Persian glory,
Like the Meteor flash had gone,
And the ray that brought deliverance
No longer on him shone.

He trod the streets of classic Greece,
When laurels wreathed her brow,
'Mid the tombstones of her splendor,
We see him linger now.

He gazed on Rome in glory,
As she spread her eagle wings—
Scourge minister of the nations
Her voice the law of kings.

He sits serenely Jerusalem
Strewn 'mid the desert sands,
But the everlasting hills are there,
Mount Zion ever stands.

Jerusalem's promised child,
His waiting eyes shall see,
And Israel's son no longer roams,
From bondage now is free.

When Judah's scattered children,
Throng to their promised home,
And Messiah sways the sceptre,
A King on David's throne.

THE LANDMARKS OF THE AGES, AS TO SONSHIP.

We bow our knees to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ—of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named—touching the purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus before the world began. Eph. iii. 11-15; 2 Tim. i. 9; Titus i. 2.

These landmarks stand all along through the ages. They belong to the grand realities of our world's dispensational history.

1. "We know that all things work together for good to them who love God—who are the called according to his purpose; for whom he did foreknow. He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he (his Son) might be the first born among many brethren." Rom. viii. 28-30. Our world's affairs were not left at loose ends, to begin with.

Note. "Ye were redeemed—with the precious blood of Christ—who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world; but was manifest in these last times for you who believe in God, that raised him up from the dead and gave him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God." 1 Pet. xviii. 21.

2. The two seeds begin with Cain and Abel. Hence, their conflict through time goes on until "the seed of promise" shall crush its foe and bring in "the better thing." Gen. iii. 15-16; Rom. xvii. to xxi.

3. Abraham had eight sons, but one only and that after protracted trial, was "born by promise." Abraham himself was not the honored seed, though "Father of us all"—who believe. "Because neither the seed of Abraham (as such—nor) the children of the flesh—are the children of God; but the children of promise are counted for the seed." Rom. iv. 16; ix. 7-9.

4. David had "many sons;" but "even Solomon in all his glory" of natural heirship and national splendor, was not more than "mortal man;" but no son of Joseph "after the flesh" could be the seed of Solomon—or come within a thousand gradations of it.

5. "But when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under law to redeem them that were under the law, that they might (by faith) receive sonship! Gal. iv. 4-5; and he, the Son, "might be the first born among" them. "For him hath God the Father sealed," confirmed by his voice from heaven, by his angels and apostles. Matt. iii. 17; xvii. 5; John v. 27; Acts ii. 22, 46.

6. This seal set on Jesus' Sonship makes him the pivotal "Rock" on which the ages revolve! Those before trend toward him; and the gospel—the kingdom and coming glory, unfold from him. Hence, as Abraham's seed and David's Lord, Jesus is the concentre of the ages! Such is the sun to the solar system! Observe, he was the subject of the primal promise. Gen. iii. 15. The more excellent offering of Abel "was as the germ of his one sacrifice." Heb. x. 1-18; xi. 4. The rainbow covenant with Noah for "earth and all flesh" comprehends Christ's "better covenant, and "rainbow throne." Rev. iv. 3. His high priesthood was above and beyond the patriarchs! as it took in "The Logos evangellas"—the word and Son of promise; and the Levitical priesthood was both overshadowed and ended in that of Melchisedek—whose origin, range and outcome are "not of men, but of God." These briefly are the ancient landmarks which properly culminate in the crowning sacrifice of the most distinguished patriarch—Abraham! His victim was no Ishmaelite, but Isaac, the special son of "The Logos evangelion," (the word of promise—these primal words take in the origin and authority of the creative "Word." John i. 1; Gen. i.; Ps. xxxiii. 6-9; Heb. xi. 17-19.)

7. Now, in our age, we have the antitype of Isaac for our sacrifice in all its plenitude and power for good. The great High Priest of our profession is Christ Jesus, and while "Moses of the Old Covenant was a servant—with David—to do God's will in their sphere; we have "the Son over his own house"—a priest forever of God's ordering after the order of Melchisedek—holy, separate from sinners, higher than the heavens above "infirmity;" and by "The Logos (word) of the oath, since the law is consecrated forevermore!" Heb. v. to vii. His resurrection, his Ascension, transcends that of Enoch and Elijah; "for it hath pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell"—and "draw all unto him," John xii. 32, into the liberty of the glory of the sons of God." Rom. viii. 18-23.

In the light of this brief summary, who will presume to set a son of Joseph (after the flesh) to fill out this portraiture of Abraham's seed—David's Lord, to sit on his throne;" and be indeed, "God manifested in the flesh; and glorified" to end all evil, "restore all things spoken by the holy prophets—that the divine glory may cover the heavens and the earth be full of his praise! Heb. iii. 3; Rev. xxi. 1-5.

Gently and yet in "the armor of God" I would remonstrate with each advocate for a more human fatherhood to Jesus. Your range of thought is ten thousand times (inexpressibly) too narrow. It would be sinful to "reply against God" at any point; but to consume an assault that applies against the bulwarks of heaven all along the line of "God's goings from of old," exceeds (to my mind) all ordinary infidelity.

Do reflect while you may. There is mercy now for errors of judgment; but it is the depth of delusion to dream of holding "the cup of salvation" with the bottom out! To confess Christ, aside from "God his Father"—and he, "the only begotten Son!" It is either "God in Christ," or all is "lost."

Your notion is theoretic, not at all "of faith," nor in the line of promise. It depletes, limits, and lets down every age as to "the record, God has given of his Son." Because when the Divine, angelic, supernatural, elements are more or less doubted, the earthly sensual and Satanic remain to dominate for doom. 2 Cor. xi. 3.

Surely there is no abuse of my liberty in Christ in thus giving his word "free course that it may run and be glorified." There is room, come along in the good way. There is all abounding blessing. Amen.

Let it not be said of us, "I called and ye refused." John iii. 16-19.

Lovingly for truth and grace.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD, NO. 2.

Among the important and essential things taught by the Great Teacher is that of prayer, both public and private. The preeminent prayer is that denominated "Our Lord's Prayer." He begins—Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. He acknowledges God to be his Father, and our Father, for it is in the plural. Whom does he include in the Our Father? It is readily admitted they are his followers, the obedient believers of the gospel of the kingdom of God, but who are they, and how are they to be known from modern professors? Christ's positive teaching will settle this question. Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, and he that believeth (the Gospel) and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be condemned. This lays the foundation, strong and sure as the Eternal Throne. The filling out is in perfect keeping with the foundation. This is an important matter, let us understand you. Well the promise of inheriting the kingdom of God is to intelligent baptized believers of the gospel. We might give much more, but it is only our object to give enough to lay the foundation, and to show that baptism in water for the remission of sins, in the name of the Holy Ones, has an important place in the foundation or make-up of Christian character, by which a true believer of the gospel is known.

Hallowed by thy name. Holy and reverend is his name. These terms belong to God, mortals have no business with them; popes and cardinals are usurpers of God's holy attributes. The apostasy has no part or place in the kingdom of God.

Thy kingdom come. This model form of prayer was given to the church of God, at the commencement of the gospel age, and how long will it be proper to pray this prayer? Oh, says the Gentile believer, till the world is converted to God. This is indefinite, unscriptural, and not at all satisfactory. The kingdom has not yet come, and will not until Christ comes in power and great glory, and takes to himself his great power and reigns on Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously. Then the kingdom will be set up in its mustard-seed form, as he taught in his parable. This prayer will be proper to use until the last son or daughter of Apostate Adam is fully redeemed from the flesh and blood state, and made immortal, by virtue of the great atonement made through the death, burial and resurrection of God's well beloved Son, the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Do the angels pray? I am not aware that they use a form of words, but they do God's holy will in the fullest and strongest sense of the word.

Thy will be done on the earth. This cannot be while a particle of sin remains unrepented of or unatoned for. God will have a clean universe; and that will not be till the devil and all his works are destroyed in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. Give us day by day our daily bread. How few of the professed followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, live out in their faith and practice this saying, in this model prayer. We act just as if we wanted somebody to underwrite for God. Without faith it is impossible to please God. He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him.

And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those that trespass against us. Is this the rule? I am fearfully afraid then some of us will be shut out of the kingdom.

Lead us not into temptation (or leave us not in the way of temptation) is said to be the correct rendering. It is difficult to set too high an estimate on this short sentence in our Lord's inspired prayer. Leave us not in the way of temptation,—pre-supposes that we are under his watchful care and protection; that he is familiar with the ills of human life, that the hairs of our head are all numbered, that not a sparrow falls to the ground without his notice. To notice the ten thousand things that flesh and blood is heir to, is a Herculean task which we cannot undertake at this time. Every baptised believer that has been striving to walk in the narrow way, knows full well the meaning of what we say.

But deliver us from the Evil One. Here we have the wisdom, the love, and the infinite goodness of our blessed Lord and Master. Save us from the evil or evil one, is equivalent to being saved and gathered up into his blessed kingdom.

For thine is the kingdom, power, and glory, for ever and ever. Amen. This is the closing paragraph of this inspired prayer of the Son of God, brimfull of wisdom and instruction, for the benefit of his body, the church, during the times of the Gentiles, as well as during the age to come, world without end. Amen. He gives the reason. For thine is the kingdom, power, and glory forever and ever. This is reason or motive sufficient to animate the most insensible and unfeeling. He settles the fact that the kingdom is God's and although great, grand and glorious is under the whole heavens, yet hath he given it to his church. Hear the prophet; "And the kingdom and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens, hath he given to the people of the saints of the Most High God, and they take the kingdom and possess it forever and ever. What a magnificent gift, what everlasting and senseless gratitude should flow from our unworthy hearts to God, our Father in heaven, and to his dear and well beloved Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, the Anointed One, and the ever blessed Spirit, for the great scheme of human redemption.

LINES WRITTEN ON THE ANNIVERSARY OF MY BIRTHDAY.

My days are four score years and seven,
So it as the Psalm grave forth:
And dreams as a tale that's told
They are forever fled and gone.

My feeble people is decreasing,
My short-lived frame creeps to and fro;
The lamp of life burns dim and pale,
It flickers in the socket low.

The checkered scenes of human life,
Are like the cloud and early dew;
After, how soon the tale is told,
And all is lost to human view.

I stand upon the river's brink,
And hear the swelling billows roar:
And sigh for an immortal life,
Oh, land me safe on Canaan's shore.

Is this the end of mortal man,
Made in the image of his God?
To fall like leaves in Autumn's day
Forever sleep beneath the sod?

As true as nature does her work,
So sure the dead will live again:
Arise to an immortal life,
No power to lie among the slain.

We soon shall pass the point of fate,
Life's toil and care will all be o'er;
All hail the resurrection morn,
Life from the dead forever more.

We've mostly scenes of joy and grief,
The like the world has never known,
The saints ascend to meet their Lord,
The left to weep and wail and moan.

WISE AS SERPENTS AND HARMLESS AS DOVES.

"Behold, I send you forth as sheep, in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." Matt. x. 16.

Thus spoke our Divine Lord when he first commissioned his apostles to preach the gospel. They were going out to save men from death. Their operations would be among all classes and characters. They themselves would be exposed to persecution and death. They would have to meet prejudice and persecution and bitter opposition. Unbelief and hardness of heart would hinder them at every step. They had a most important mission to accomplish. It was important that their object should be gained. They must succeed. Christ gave them this general rule by which to govern their conduct, as best calculated to secure the object they had in view. Human nature is much the same in all ages, and the plan of God is mainly the same. This rule is doubtless just as good now as it was eighteen hundred years ago.

Why does our Savior take the serpent as an example of wisdom for them to pattern after? There must be some reason for this. He does not want those who go out to catch souls to imitate the serpent except in the matter of its wisdom. But in that respect he does. The habits of the serpent are peculiar, and contain a lesson of instruction. Why does not the Savior tell his servants to be wise as lions, wolves, or other ferocious beasts? Why select serpent.

Any one who has given the matter any reflection can readily answer. The serpent does not, in approaching his victim, rush out in a manner to frighten, intimidate, and repulse, like those creatures. His approaches are very cautious, and yet effectual. He glides along in the most careful manner possible, so as not to needlessly alarm, and presents himself in a manner to favorably affect the one whom he is seeking to reach. If necessary, he can wait long and patiently, while the victim runs or flies hither and thither, still holding himself in that position which will most favorably influence. The victim, thus drawn toward him, comes within reach, and is taken. When the serpent strikes home to secure his prey, there is very rarely a failure in accomplishing his object. In all this there seems to be a wisdom peculiar to that creature. When the cat or other destructive animal lies in wait for its prey, it usually conceals itself until it gives the spring which destroys its victim. But the serpent often presents itself fully to view, and, by the attractions which it presents, secures its object.

Our Savior instructs his followers to imitate the wisdom of the serpent, while they are harmless as doves. They do not catch souls to destroy, but to save. If they desire to accomplish this good object, they should use wisdom. The object is the highest and noblest that can engage the attention of men. Therefore the highest wisdom should be employed to accomplish it.

The human mind is difficult to manage. How necessary that all who try to present God's truth before it, either as ministers, or distributors of tracts, or in common conversation, should understand their business. It is very easy in ten minutes' conversation to leave impressions upon minds which it will be nearly impossible to efface. Much injury has been done to the cause of truth in the past by individuals in various communities being over ready to "pitch in," as the common expression has it, and argue and debate, on street corners or in stores, or wherever there was a chance to crowd in the truth, whether people wanted to hear it or not, until people became disgusted, and perhaps their ears could never again be reached. This is not the wisdom of the serpent. It has no resemblance to it.

Neither do such follow the directions of Peter. They may quote a portion of his direction, but they forget or ignore the remainder. "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear." The class above referred to rarely wait to give any one a chance to ask them the reason of their hope, but press them upon people against their wishes, and they entirely forget the "meekness and fear." Such only do harm.

This great principle of the Savior and his apostle should be remembered by all who engage in the distribution of tracts and papers.

A spirit boasting, or glorying over others, because our views of Scripture are more consistent than theirs, will always drive them away. We may use the truth as a club to show our great strength in the argument, but it will not bring men to God. And, as a general rule, unless there be a disposition to listen and consider the truth, and hear what is said, talk concerning it will not accomplish very much.

What we want is a spirit of meekness and Christian love, which, being real and genuine, and heart-felt, will manifest itself to the one listening, and show him that our motive is to do him good, not to gain a personal victory over him. When a person can be persuaded that is our real motive, it will have its influence.

We must not undertake to force religion or truth down people's throats. Were it possible to succeed in so doing it would amount to nothing really in the sight of God. He wants the willing service alone. When we have that spirit of love spoken of above, it will give us the very disposition spoken of by our Savior, at the head of this article. For the "wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without wrangling [margin] and without hypocrisy." It is a wisdom that comes from another source which makes men love contention and personal triumph, and leads men to crowd upon people that which they will not hear if they can help it. It is "earthly wisdom," which grows out of selfishness.—C. T. Butler, in Zion's Watch Tower.

A Picture of Ancient Babylon.

In the current number of the British and Foreign Evangelical Review there is a fine description of ancient Babylon, translated from the German of F. Delitzsch, the eminent Assyriologist, who invites his readers to accompany him in a walk through the city, as it was B. C. 558, or about eight years before Nebuchadnezzar's death. Before entering the city they view the surrounding country: "The Babylonia of the present day resembles a desert, out of which arise mounds and ruins, solitary and grave; nearly all the canals are choked with sand; the shepherds wandering alone, with their flocks nibbling the sparse grass, are almost the only human dwellers over the whole plateau. How different was it in olden times! Between B. C. 2000 and 500 Babylonia was the garden of the ancient world. The land, surrounded like an island by two of the finest streams in the world, the Euphrates and Tigris—the rivers of Paradise—is truly the gift of both. They flowed with swift current from the Armenian highlands into the sea now known as the Persian Gulf. In the course of centuries large masses of loam were rolled down and heaped at their original mouths, and this is what we now call Babylonia. It was on this soaked, fat and fertile soil that the oldest authentic civilization, not of Asia merely, but of the world, developed itself." The melting of the Armenian snows caused inundations which had to be checked by damming the rivers with dikes and walls. Canals served for navigation, and also led off the superfluous waters to parts unaffected by the overflow, and developed to such a degree their fertility that wheat and barley often gave the laborer 200 or 500 fold. Near Bagdad the two rivers are so near that only six hours are required to pass from one to the other. On this tongue of land, which was once a fourth narrower (for the Euphrates has since removed its bed further westward), the great canal system commenced, and by means of still smaller arteries the life-giving waters were distributed to nearly every tree. The district between Bagdad and Hilla (a three-days ride) was formerly strown with heaps of towns and villages. To its south, in the very heart of the land, lay Babylon, "the gate of God." Its commercial importance is described, its fortifications, the Euphrates (half a mile wide) swarming with ships of every size; the large Euphrates bridge, built by Nebuchadnezzar; the different quarters and great buildings; the royal bank, where important business, public and private, was transacted. "The conditions and bargains are first, perhaps, put down on papyrus rolls, then carefully written out on clay tablets in cuneiform writing, to which each party affixes his seal, or, in default of it, his finger-nail, whereupon the tablet is baked." In running back over the history two or three important periods are noticed; but the mistake is made of saying that it was only eight years since Samassumukin's rebellion against the Assyrian rule. Eighty years must be meant. Many may know that forty-two years before this, when Merodachbeladan had rebelled, Sennacherib, in 690 B. C., marched against the city, gave it up to the flames, left not one stone on another, dug canals through its ruins to bury it under water, "and, as he says in his annals, overthrew it even more than was done by the deluge." Delitzsch's reconstruction has been effected by means of the three mighty heaps of ruins recently investigated by the eminent English archæologist, Hormuzd Rassam, with the aid of the cuniform literature and the accounts of the Greek writers.

THE MOST WONDERFUL MOUNTAIN.

The most wonderful mountain in the world is Roraima, which lifts above its sloping sides a solid block of red sandstone about 2,900 feet high, some of the faces of which, according to Sir Robert Schomburgh, are "as perpendicular as if erected with a plumb-line." It is the highest and most wonderful of a group of table-topped mountains situated in an almost inaccessible part of British Guiana. Its flat top is twelve miles long. The mountain sides are sloping and wooded to a height of 7,750 feet above the sea. Then rise the vertical walls of the vast sandstone formation. Cascades pour over the edge, the water falling 2,000 feet to the forests below, forming the sources of rivers.

A statistician has figured out the expenditures for various purposes in the United States approximately as follows: Drink, $900,000,000; missions, home and foreign, $5,550,000; bread, $505,000,000; meat, $203,000,000; iron and steel, $290,000,000; woolen goods, $237,000,000; sawed lumber, $285,000,000; cotton goods, $210,000,000; boots and shoes, $198,000,000; sugar and molasses, $155,000,000; educational purposes, $85,000,000. According to these figures drink costs more than bread and meat, and but little less than food and raiment.—Philadelphia Press.

ANCIENT CHINESE TELEPHONES.

At a recent meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society in Shanghai, says the Scientific American, a paper by Dr Macgowan was read on the subject of the early use of telephones in China. This paper being very brief we give it in its entirety.

It detracts nothing from the merit of the ingenious physicists who have conferred on mankind the boon of the telephone, that its principles are familiar to uncivilized peoples, several of whom are in possession of rudimentary telephones. It was, I opine, when the Chinese were in their youth that they constructed the rudimentary instrument, a specimen of which I herewith transmit for the society's museum. It consists of two bamboo cylinders, one and a half to two inches in diameter, and four in length; one end of each is closed by a tympanum of pig bladder, which is perforated for the transmitting string, the string being kept in place by being knotted. This rude instrument is styled the "listening tubes," and is employed for amusement as a toy, conveying whispers forty or fifty feet. It is unknown in many parts of the empire, Chihkiang and Kiangan being the only provinces (so far as I can ascertain) where the listening tube is employed.

Besides this toy, Chinese ingenuity produced, about a century and a half ago, the "thousand mile speaker." The implement is described as "a roll of copper, likened to a fife, containing an artful device; whispered into and immediately closed, the confined message, however long, may be conveyed to any distance; and thus in a battle, secret instructions may be conveniently communicated. It is a contrivance of extraordinary merit." The inventor of the "thousand mile speaker," Chiang Shunhsin, of Huichou, flourished during the reign of Kang-hsi. He wrote on occult science, astronomy, etc. The above account of his invention was taken from his works by the author of a Fuhkien Miscellany. At that time—reign of Kien Lung—there was no longer an instrument of this description in that province. It seems to have perished with the ingenious scientists who contrived it.

Here is a fine opportunity for the organization of a new telephone company, with a legal department to hunt up the lost evidence, and take a whack at the bell telephone monopoly. Doubtless many heathen Chinee might be found glad to testify they had often used the old telephone in talking from the Great Wall to Pekin, and further if necessary.

OLDER THAN THE MOUND BUILDERS.

The burying-ground of an ancient race has just been discovered in Southwest Virginia. The skeletons are, for the most part, crumbled to dust; yet they can be counted in astounding numbers over the areas of the plantation, showing it to be the cemetery of the nation. A remarkable fact is made known in the search—one of twofold importance. For, on the one hand, by it the bodies, however decayed, can be easily located. It was found that the human frame after death—even in its particles of dust—remains a conductor of electricity. In the case of no other animate creature is this true. And so the bodies are distinguished.

But of those nameless men and women. Their lives are unchronicled, and unlettered their tombs; their biography is written only in their death. But they are children of promise, about to awaken an interest heretofore unknown. Their burial reveals two customs which alone must place them in historical date, as in enlightenment, far beyond any nation of America as yet brought to public attention; and we dream of the "Lost Arts" and "Ten Tribes" once more. First, they are buried in rectangles—two hundred of them side by side are lying east and west, one hundred of them north and south: this giving the vast majority their resting-place toward the east. In this they are Christian. May they not be kin to Solomon the Magnificent, and their cemetery planned from the court of the temple? Are they merely Indians? The direction of their burial might so allow it. But one other circumstance remains. Whereas the skull does not class them as "redmen," they are buried with hands folded across the breast (as no pagans are), plainly awaiting the day when the divinity shall reinhabit the forsaken shrine. And so they slumber on—beneath the tread of men, the trampling of the war-horse and the trail of roaming beasts. Had they been contemporary with many known tribes, their vivid faith and marked customs must have left their impress upon the nomads coming into contact with them. Would science, lynx-eyed, have overlooked the traces of their intercourse?

They are clearly older than Nahuas, Aztecs, Toltecs, Cliff-dwellers, or Mound-builders. They are children of a higher faith and purer life. The Mexicans, if descendants, are so far removed from them, so enormous is the lapse of time, that the definite faith and history committed to them (by these primal men and women) have, in the descent, become the incongruous myths and superstitions that make us wonder whether, at any time in their history, the builders of Ohio's mounds and Mexican temples were taught the stories of Babel and the flood.

These new beings may have learned directly those accounts that inspired their souls in death. Indeed, their faith being so evident, it is easily probable that they once peopled the "old world," proving how "God hath made of one (blood) all nations of men."—G. P. Watson, in Magazine of American History.

ing," and enjoyed it too. I feel that the counterpart is wanted, changing the figure and looking at this world as the night season. Here we toil in the dark, not title to be followed by the cheerful, blessed day in which the results shall be reaped and God be glorified, gratefully, gladly at the feet of our dear Lord:

Work for the day is coming:
Day in the Word foretold,
When 'mid the race's strife and hate,
Longed for by saints of old,
He who on earth a stranger
Traversed its paths of pain,
Jesus, the Prince, the Savior,
Comes to reign.

Work for the day is coming!
Darkness will soon be gone,
Throughout the night of weeping
Day without end shall dawn.
What now we sow in patience,
Then we shall reap in joy;
Hope will be changed to gladness,
Praise to our Lord employ.

Work for the day is coming.
Made for the cities of Light;
Oft when its garment-mystery,
On us is cast, unseen by sight!
Soon will the veil be raised,
Some all our toils below:
Not to the dark we're treading,
But to the day we go.

Work for the day is coming!
Children of light are we;
From Jesus' bright appearing,
Powers of darkness flee.
Out of the night of his bidding,
Souls like the sea we've tossed
Over all the East we've gladdened
Plate of the rosy morn.

Work, then, the day is coming!
No time for sighing now:
Harps for the sands once drooping,
Wreaths for the victor brow.
Now morning light is breaking,
Day dawns in every land:
Night shades beset us longer,
Jesus, our Lord, is at hand.

EXPATRIATION AND RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

Part I.—Jewish Exile and Recall "He that Scattered Israel will Gather Them."

Probably most of the differences in the interpretation of unfulfilled prophecy are traceable to conflicting theories of interpretation as to what is literal and what is allegorical. The historical school, for example, oftimes regard as parabolical what, when the prediction is fulfilled, will be found to have been literal forecasts to the very letter. The fact that all fulfilled predictions have been literally accomplished prepares us for the law which governs the unfulfilled, or, in other words, those fearful events which mark the close of this dispensation.

Many illustrations of this law are recorded in the sacred Scriptures; but one will suffice to prove the literality of prophecy.

When Moses referred to the awful expedients which would be adopted even by women, incited to murder and cannibalism, when as a penalty for the national apostasy they should be famine-stricken, he indicated (Deut. xxviii. 56-57) that the "tender and delicate woman among you, who would not adventure the sole of her foot on the ground for delicateness and tenderness—her eye shall be evil toward the husband of her bosom, and toward her son, and toward her daughter, and toward her young one; for she shall eat them for want of all things secretly in the siege and straitness wherewith thine enemy shall distress thee in the gate." Now any prophetic student prior to the predicted event might have justly regarded this prophecy simply as a figurative or hyperbolical picture of the awful expedients to which famine would drive the luxurious. But we find that when Benhadad, King of Syria, invested Samaria, there was such a famine (2 Kings vi. 26-28) that two women, obviously of high social rank, agreed to kill their infants for food, and that one in fact was actually murdered and boiled and eaten by these two unnatural mothers. And at the final destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman general Titus, Josephus related similar cases, so hard pressed for food were the doomed citizens.

It may, however, be admitted that history, both sacred and profane, supplies many striking foreshadows of the events which will wind up this dispensation, and more especially of the lurid reign of the Antichrist. Even so early in the chequered history of the church as the age of the apostle John (see 1 chapter ii. 18) there "were many Antichrists." So during the past 1200 years, the Latin, Greek, and Moslem Antichrists have so dominated the fairest portions of Europe as to give some insight into the activities of the lawless one. The Russian church has, in fact, so apostatized as to shamelessly call the Czar "Our God, upon earth," and thus has prepared the way for the blasphemous assumptions of "Gog," the appellation of Antichrist as the head of the north-eastern events their interpretation may be accepted.

The fact of the literalness of all unfulfilled prophecy is of great importance at the present crisis in the history of the church; for never were the facts and the doctrines of the Old Testament so ignored if not denied as during the past half century. Unhappily too many pulpits, and too many pseudo-religious serials, give such an "uncertain sound" on the subject, that the majority of professing Christians are not "preparing themselves for the battle." For example, one prominent Nonconformist minister, in a recent work on the Ten Commandments, dates thus to write—"Place the Old Testament on a level with the New, and you run the risk of misunderstanding both Moses and Christ." And all this veiled infidelity, in spite of the fact that there is not one doctrine of the New Testament which is not taught—either directly or indirectly—by striking symbols in the older Book. And more even than this, notwithstanding the Holy Spirit—forewarning and so guarding against this latter-day heresy—instructed an apostle to intimate of the Old Testament (2 Tim. iii. 16), that "All Scripture is God-breathed (literal), and is profitable for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

But we need not refer to past literal fulfilments of prophecy to prove, however conveyed, that the event was invariably found to literally echo the prediction. For "even in [these] days we can trace the initial accomplishment of events, some of which were predicted above three thousand years ago—most of them of such an extraordinary character that no human wisdom could have forecast their occurrence.

The great Hebrew lawgiver, Moses, about 1,500 years before the Christian era, in his valedictory charge to the Israelites, said that, (Deut. iv. 25-27) "When Israel shall beget children and children's children, ye shall have remained long in the land, and shall corrupt yourselves, and make a graven image, and shall do evil in the sight of Jehovah thy God to provoke him to anger—Jehovah shall scatter you among the nations, and ye shall be left few in number among the Gentiles, whither Jehovah shall lead you."

Two such scatterings of the Jews, consequent on the violation of the covenant of the Jews to serve God loyally and continuously are recorded in the national annals known as the Book of Kings. The first occurred under the Assyrian king Shalmanezor (2 Kings xvii. 11), who "carried away Israel unto Assyria, and put them in Halah, and in Habor, by the river of Gozan, and in the city of the Medes: because they obeyed not the voice of Jehovah their God, but transgressed the covenant." This expatriation into Central Asia mainly concerned the ten tribes, whose whole history had been one of disobedience, and that in its worst form—namely, that of idolatry. For such virtual rejection of God, he declared by the pen of Amos, who was eminently a prophet to the ten tribes, that (Amos ix. 8, 9,) "His eyes were on the sinful kingdom, and that he would destroy it from off the earth (or rather land); saving that he would not utterly destroy the house of Jacob." But happily the Most High, as in all his dealings with the Jews of both branches, had still mercy in store for the family of Joseph. First, speaking of their dispersion he declared, "I will sift them among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve," which curse has been fulfilled to the letter. And then he added the promise which implies their re-instatement, "Not the least grain shall fall upon the earth," so as to be annihilated. As one result of such restoration (v. 12) they will possess the remnant of Edom, and of all the Gentiles" contiguous to their inheritance.

The remaining two tribes were about one hundred years after this event also punished by exile, as predicted by Moses, for similar violations of the national covenant with God. For after a siege with Jerusalem which lasted eight years, Nebuchadnezzar captured the capital of the Judahites (2 Kings xxiv. 14-16), and "carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valor, and all the men of might, and all craftsmen, and smiths, and all that were strong and apt for war—even them the King of Babylon brought captive to Babylon."

And dealing with Malachi.

But whether of the tribe of Judah, or of Ephraim, the Israelites were, in the design of God, never to become extinct as a distinct race. The fact was often implied by Moses in his exhortations, especially in his pleadings for Israel after they had made the molten calf, in imitation of the Egyptian idol, Apis. For he said (Deut. xxxiii. 16), "Wherein shall it be known here that I and my people have found grace in thy sight? Is it not that thou goest with us? so shall we be separated, I and my people, from all the peoples that are on the face of the earth!" Balaam, though an utterly unconscientious man, was such a true prophet that to him the Holy Spirit gave instruction to predict (Numb. xxiii. 9) that the Jews "should dwell alone, and not be reckoned among the Gentiles."

But in addition to these implied predictions that the Israelites should never be lost amid the Gentiles, there are many definite promises that, whether they be Judahites, or sons of Ephraim, their dispersion shall end, and that at an assigned period. One prediction will suffice to show this fact (Deut. xxx. 1-5): "For when they shall return unto Jehovah, their God, and shall obey thy voice according to all that I command thee—thou and thy children, with all thy heart and all thy soul"—then as a result of such national penitence God says, "I will have compassion on thee, and will return and gather them from all the nations, and will return and gather thee whither the Lord thy God hath scattered thee. If any of thee be driven unto the utmost parts of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence he will fetch thee." Yet, after all, this is but a specimen of the teaching of all the Hebrew prophets, from Isaiah to Malachi, as to the future national existence and the restoration of the Jews when "the times" or the reign of the Gentiles shall come to an end.

It is scarcely needful to say that the bulk of the predictions respecting the recall of the Jews refers to the two tribes, and also to the ten tribes which were, for the apostacy of Solomon, so long separated from Judah. And more even than this; for during the millennial age they will—as in the days of David and Solomon—become one nation. For the Divine promise, by the pen of Ezekiel, has never been fulfilled (Ezek. xxxvii. 15-22), "I will take the children of Israel from among the Gentiles whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land, and I will make them one nation upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all." Thus will the parabolical "sticks" of Judah and of Ephraim be once more united, and that in perpetuity.

There is a noticeable contrast between the dispersion and recall of Judah and that of Ephraim, consequent on their different expatriations by Shalmanezar and Nebuchadnezzar. This distinction between the ten and the two tribes is forcibly expressed by Isaiah when he intimated that God (Isa. xi. 12) will "assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." This fact is further confirmed by the prophecy of Zacharias (xii. 11-14), respecting the last investment of Jerusalem by Antichrist and his ten vassal kings. For in the penitential mourning of the inhabitants of the besieged city, the only tribes mentioned besides that of Levi are those of Judah and of Benjamin. We may thus infer that it is not until the multitudinous hosts of Antichrist are destroyed by Christ in person (Rev. xix. 11-16), that the ten tribes will be restored, and become one nation with Judah to be disunited no more.

Whatever secondary agents may be employed to recall the ten tribes to their God-given inheritance, God himself will be the real author of their national restoration. Hence it is that we read (Jer. xxxi. 10-11), "Hear the word of Jehovah, O ye Gentiles, and declare it to the isles afar off, and say that he that scattered Israel will gather them, and keep him as a shepherd doth his flock, for Jehovah hath redeemed Jacob and ransomed him from the hand of him that was stronger than he." The same distinction between the houses of Judah and of Ephraim consequent on their expatriation at different periods will mark this personal interposition of the Most High on and Poland, who, at the last accessi-

Ezra from Persia. Of these, 10,000 live in Jerusalem, who are chiefly supported by European Jews.

The noblest of the Hebrew prophets, the apostle Paul, confirmed the predictions of the distinctively Hebrew prophets, as that no one dare say that the fact of Jewish restoration and conversion is a mere imagining of national pride. For the fact of Jewish revival in the last days the Holy Spirit assigns three reasons:—First, Rom. xi. 25-32: "The gifts and calling of God are without repentance." Second: That "The Jews are still beloved for the fathers' sake." Third, The excision of the Gentiles consequent on the universal apostacy of Christendom. No wonder, then, that when he was instructed to declare the reinstatement of his kinsmen, Paul was constrained to utter this anthem of gratitude. Rom. xi. 22-36: "O, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God—how unsearchable are his judgments, and his way past finding out; for he hath concluded them all (Jews and Gentiles) in unbelief, that he might have mercy on all!"—*E. Sister W.—

The facts are, Paul was, before he saw the Just One a bigoted Sabbatarian, zealous of the law; and he was determined, as that sect always are and have been, that every body should worship God his way. So when certain Jews believed the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus, in preference to the law and Moses, he set out in company with others, empowered with letters of authority from the chief priests and elders, the Sanhedrim for Damascus, to bring them bound into Jerusalem, for to punish them, delivering into prison both men and women. And at that time there was a great persecution against Sabbath-keepers? O, no! against the church, the believers in Christ Jesus. As for Saul (Paul), he made havoc of the church, entering into every house and haling men and women committing them to prison. This was the destruction that Paul entered upon, and this is what he built again when the commandment came and he died. To thus preach Christ, not Moses, the gospel, not law, made him a transgressor. We will now sum up and see if it was the Ten Commandments that converted Paul, as you say. 1. We find Paul an Israelite, of Benjamin's tribe. 2. He was brought up and taught according to the perfect manner of the law, therefore, was not a transgressor of it. 3. It could not be true that he was once alive without the said law. 4. He was never accused by the Jews as a transgressor of the said law, till he preached Christ; until he was converted by the appearance of the Just One. And, 5, the law that he was once alive without, that convinced him of sin, that was holy, spiritual, just, good; was the "law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus," not on tablets of stone, called "the law of sin and death."

But is written on the fleshly tablets of the heart, the gospel. This explanation is quite lengthy, but the case demanded it. I used to stumble over the same thought that you advanced.

Again you say, that Peter on the day of Pentecost said, repent and be baptized for the remission of their sins, and if there is no law, of Ten Commandments, there is no sin, for sin is the transgression of the law of Ten Commandments. Here you seem to think that you have made out a logical case. We will examine it as logical and more as Scriptural. First then what is it to repent? You and your blind leaders say it is to keep the Ten Commandments. Suppose we grant this definition. God repented that he had made man, i. e., he commenced to keep the Ten Commandments! He repented that he had made Saul king over Israel, i. e., he commenced again to keep the Ten Commandments! and when he did not thus repent he did not keep the Ten Commandments! Shame! Such blasphemy! John preached the baptism of repentance, i. e. those baptized must begin to keep the law of Ten Commandments; and by being baptized was a sign that they had commenced to keep the law, i. e. they had repented. The Savior was baptized of John, thereby showing that he had repented, i. e., he had commenced to keep the Ten Commandments! But it is written that he the law, Sabbath and all; hence "repent" to them did not mean to keep the law. Their sins did not consist in not keeping the Holy Sabbath. "These," says the record, were "devout men." Devout law keepers! Yet Peter tells them to "repent," i. e. Keep the Ten Commandments? We are informed by the record that these "devout men" were all "Jews," "out of every nation under heaven." In men if Peter meant, to keep the Ten Commandments by the word repent, it could have no bearing at all upon the question of an uncircumcised Gentile. That law was given to them to obey and called by Christ the law of Moses. Jno. vii. 19. Now what is the trouble? The trouble is you have a man made theory, and the Scriptures of truth will not support it. Peter never said a single word about a "moral law," the Ten Commandments" or the Holy Sabbath; neither did he say any thing about the "ceremonial law," the "carnal law," or any such fleshly cant; but boldly says: "Ye men of Israel hear these words"—Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy? No, oh no; but, "hear these words: Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you—how? by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him, in the midst of you, . . . he being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye (men of Israel) have taken and by wicked hands have crucified and slain: Whom God raised up, . . . therefore let all the house of Israel assuredly know that God hath made that same Jesus both Lord and Christ." "Now when they were pricked in their hearts, and said men and brethren (in the flesh), what shall we do?" Peter tells them to "repent." This word sometimes means to "reform." But how could they reform here of what Peter charges them? "Repent" is from the Gr. metamelomai and means, I am concerned for the past.' See appendix to Emphatic Diaglott—word repent. God was concerned for the past, when he contemplated the removal of Saul from being king. Judas was concerned for the past, in his conduct, when he returned the thirty pieces of silver; see Matt. xxvii. 3. Christ was concerned for the past, as to what had been done by Adam; when he demanded baptism of John. So in like manner were those "devout Jews from every nation under heaven," "concerned for the past," when Peter had told them that they had "slain both Lord and Christ." So you can see that a person can repent without having to keep the Ten Commandments. Did Judas, in repenting keep the Ten Commandments. Is that what we are to understand by the hung himself?

Yours truly. J. W. R.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the doctrine of "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." And means by this, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked: eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

THE FOUNDATIONS OF THE BELIEF IN THE IMMORTALITY OF MAN. PART II.

The long prevalence in Europe of the philosophic doctrine of the natural immortality of all souls, has steadily acted on interpretation of Scripture in such a manner as to impose non natural senses upon several leading lines of the terminology. The entire line of references to life and death throughout the Bible, in relation to human destiny, has been dealt with in such a manner as to consist with the metaphysical system which has governed interpretation. Death, Destruction, Perishing, ἀπώλεια, ὄλεθρος, φθορά, all the Greek terms which Plato in the Phædo uses to denote extermination of life; all these terms which Bishop Weathers himself uses in English form, in this very Symposium, when he desires to denote the extinction of animal souls; are forced out of their proper senses, in order to consist with the doctrine of a naturally deathless being for all men alike.

Dean Plumptre joins with Principal Cairns in steadfastly affirming that we must exclude the idea of literal destruction from the verb ἀπόλλυμι in relation to the future state (Spirits in Prison, p. 225). But it is asking too much of simple minds to desire us to believe that ἀπόλωνται, in 1 Cor. xv. 18; signifies gone to ruin or endless misery, when the same word in Ecclesiasticus xliv. 9; (Sept.) is especially explained to signify a total cessation of being. "And some there be, which have no memorial, who are perished, ἀπώλοντο, as though they had never been, and are become as though they had never been born."

The term death or μένει is indeed allowed, in popular language by orthodox writers, to stand for its proper meaning of extinction of life, in relation to the soul, in one single instance, namely, in forming the word immortality; because, when joined with a negative, it then signifies, deathlessness or eternal conscious being, for both good and bad; just as in the text, "the worm dieth not," the word dieth is allowed to signify, "ceaseth not to live;" because on this can be built an argument for endless misery, if the "worm" be taken for the "conscience" of a sinner in Gehenna. But in all other cases the Scripture language is invested with an unnatural meaning, in order to consist with the psychological system of Christendom.

It is the same with the great word Life. It is permitted to bear every shade of meaning except the central natural meaning of life properly so called. Bishop Weathers lays down this law of exegesis as a sacred dogma, as if it were as clearly true as the multiplication table. But if any one will take the trouble to try this experiment of reading the Greek Testament through, to test the possibility of making excellent sense by adopting a more "literal" meaning of these terms, he will, I think, discover that Professor Stokes is not so far wrong in finding that these ideas not only make sense, but that a flood of light falls on the whole system of Christian Doctrine, respecting the Fall of Man, the Incarnation, the Atonement, the Resurrection, Regeneration, Salvation, Life Eternal, and future Judgment by destruction.

The true and complete solution then, of the mysterious question of man's relation to a future state, I find in Revelation only, and not in natural speculation. In departing from God man has lost the knowledge of truth concerning himself. Man is a fallen but redeemed creature. Towards him God has purposes both of mercy and judgment. His eternal life includes both body and soul, and both are rendered immortal only through the power of the Divine Christ—by the Holy Spirit—a prospect restricted to those who are "born of God." But the spirits of all mankind survive in the first death, either for purposes of awful judgment and retribution; or in many cases, probably (1 Peter iii. 18), for purposes of further education and salvation. The instinct of survival is in various forms, therefore, very widely diffused, and is misinterpreted only when it is converted into argument for the natural and absolute immortality of all souls.

This instinct we find under many perverted forms, under the transmigrations of Buddhism, the speculations of Plato, the Pentateuchal faith of Spiritualism. But the solid foundation of immortal hope is, I think, found only in him who is "the Resurrection and the Life," and who "hath the keys of Hades and of death;" while for those who willfully reject him, there is reserved a "punishment" which is "eternal," being nothing less terrible than "everlasting destruction" of body and soul in Gehenna." Matt. x. 28.

The doctrine of the natural immortality of all souls as separate beings is widely extended, but it is still principally localized in Europe and America. Eastern Asia, (India, China, Japan, with 700,000,000 of mankind) holds pre-existence, transmigration and survival; but nirvana, i. e., abolition of individual being and consciousness, is believed to await all individual life at last. There is no Asiatic faith in the natural immortality maintained by Bishop Westhore, Principal Cairns, and Mr. Hopps, from Calcutta to Japan.

The contribution of my immediate predecessor, Principal Cairns, places me in some difficulty in concluding this paper. The general reader would scarcely find it an edifying termination to this Symposium were I to occupy much space in defending a book of my own, against the minutor criticisms even of so distinguished a reviewer as Dr. Cairns—especially when the defence would be the ordinary one of theological rejoinders, that the reviewer has first misapprehended some of the positions taken by the volume criticised, and then argued on the basis of his own misconceptions. The respect due to the Principal, however, compels some notice of his observations, though unwilling to lengthen this paper, or to take advantage of succeeding him in the series; more particularly as a composition so remarkable for calmness and charity could have proceeded only, in a case of a writer occupying Dr. Cairns's position, from a self-restraint of which I am deeply sensible. Dr. Cairns writes from the standpoint of the Confession of Faith of the Presbyterian Churches, and believing every word of this Confession, as no doubt he does, in the plain, grammatical sense of the terms, it is easy to see how shocking to him must appear a doctrine which strikes, if not at the root, still not very high up in the trunk, of the theological system which it is his professional duty to defend in relation to man's immortality and its consequences. If I cite a few of the positions of this Confession it will more readily appear how great credit is due to the reviewer for his gentleness in commenting upon direct denials of what to him must be most dear and sacred:—

Confession, chapter iv. After God had made all other creatures he created man, male and female, with reasonable and immortal souls.

Chapter iii. "By the decree of God, for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestined unto everlasting life, and others foreordained to everlasting death." "These angels and men, thus predestined and foreordained are particularly and unchangeably designed; and their number is so certain and definite that it cannot be either increased or diminished." "The rest of mankind, God was pleased, according to the unsearchable counsel of his sovereign power over his creatures to pass by, and to ordain them to dishonor and wrath for their sin, to the praise of his glorious justice."

Chapter vi. "Our first parents, by their sin, fell from their original righteousness and communion with God, and so became dead in sin, and wholly defiled in all the faculties and parts of soul and body." "They being the root of mankind, the guilt of this sin was imputed, and the same death in sin, and corrupted nature, conveyed to all their posterity, descending from them by ordinary generation. From this original corruption, whereby we are utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite to all good, and wholly inclined to all evil, do proceed all actual transgressions." "Every sin, both original and actual, being a transgression of the righteous law of God, and contrary thereunto, doth in its own nature bring guilt upon the sinner, whereby he is bound over to the wrath of God, and curse of the law, and so made subject to death, with all miseries, spiritual, temporal, and eternal."

Chapter ix. Man by his fall into a state of sin hath lost all ability of will to any spiritual good accompanying salvation: so as a natural man, being altogether averse from that good, and dead in sin, is not able, by his strength, to convert himself or to prepare himself thereunto.

Chapter xxxiii. "The end God's appointing the Judgment Day is for the manifestation of the glory of mercy in the eternal salvation of the elect, and of his justice in the damnation of the reprobate, who are wicked and disobedient. For then the righteous shall go into everlasting life; but the wicked, who know not God, and obey not the gospel of Jesus Christ, shall be cast into eternal torments, and be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."

By these citations from the "Confession of Faith" it will appear how steadfastly Dr. Cairns adheres to not only its general scheme of doctrine on the nature and destiny of man, but, also, to the traditional methods of biblical exegesis, on which the system is founded.

I may be permitted to present the result in a brief summary:—

1. The Confession commences with the statement that Adam was created immortal, or deathless, as the Eternal Being Himself, with respect to his soul, but as to his body susceptible of death, in the sense of total dissolution. 2. That he was placed in Paradise on trial for everlasting life, under the menace of death for disobedience; while, notwithstanding, apart from eating the "Tree of Life," the effect of which would be to cause him to "live for ever" (Gen. iii.), the chief element in his complex nature was already incapable of dissolution, as Bishop Weathers also affirms; so that the privilege held out to him really was to escape death of the body in the literal sense of the threatening, and death of the soul only in two metaphorical senses of the term, spiritual alienation from God, and eternal misery. 3. That, failing in his probation, he brought upon himself death of the body, and two metaphorical deaths of the soul; and upon his posterity,—according to a recent more lenient interpretation of professed Calvinists,—simply temporal death (which system does not render any very lucid account of the natural state and legal prospects of the souls of the posterity), but, according to the Confession (at once more ancient and orthodox) both temporal death and eternal misery of the soul. 4. That, therefore, all mankind are now born, before they have committed personal sins, justly liable to everlasting misery; partly through "imputation" of Adam's sin, partly through natural immortality, and partly through the possession of a nature necessarily corrupt in all its springs and developments; even "elect infants" being naturally under this curse, as S. Augustine taught, and delivered from it only by predestination to life. 5. That Christ appeared to bear the "Curse of the Law," which was Death; a curse which signified eternal misery of the soul in the instance of Adam, and signifies the same thing in the "second death" of the wicked; but was taken to signify "Death on the Cross" only in the person of the Savior. 6. That in consequence of this death of Christ (which excluded both the metaphorical ideas of death—alienation from God—and eternal misery), death, in all its senses, literal and metaphorical, has been vanquished for the believer, and his physical death shall be removed by a glorious resurrection. 7. That although the Mosaic Law entered "that the offence might abound," it made no mention of eternal misery as the curse of the Law; while, nevertheless, Christ's death delivers us from that legal curse of which no mention is made by Moses. 8. That while the penalty for despising the Law of Moses was literal death, under two or three witnesses, the penalty of despising a system of mercy shall be infinitely more tremendous than that, being to suffer misery in hell throughout endless duration, so long as the Necessary Being endures; the punishment for rejecting the Divine mercy being, therefore, infinitely more terrible than that declared in the law for rejecting the Divine justice. 9. That although the major part of mankind has been altogether deprived under Divine providence of the means of grace, without which, as the Confession declares, salvation is impossible, they have been destined and absolutely foreordained,—unknown to themselves,—to an eternal existence in bliss or in "torment."—the Redemption by Christ having added, in the case of the damned and non-elect, this incalculable burden to the original curse on Adam, that their bodies shall at the last day be raised from the dead, to die a second death which signifies living for ever "in torments."

This will be admitted to be, I think, a correct interpretation of the Confession, and of the drift of Dr. Cairns' paper, which is founded upon it.

During the last thirty or forty years, among other movements, partly psychological, partly exegetical, partly theological, a very determined effort has been made in Germany, Switzerland, France, England, Americ , and in the missionary world, to substitute for the frightful tangle of Augustinian definitions just summarized, a simpler method of understanding Holy Scripture, from one end to the other, on the questions of Death, Life, and Immortality. This is known as the doctrine of Life in Christ—Dr. Cairns calls it my "system." I might as justly call the Confession his system. Both are very ancient, but we hold that one is more ancient than the other—and what has been attempted of late is only a revival and general diffusion of a canon of interpretation which is to be found just as clearly in the pages of Irenæus at the end of the second century, as Dr. Cairns' is to be found in Augustine in the fourth. We have had not a little to suffer in this enterprise from spiritual excommunication: but the movement is now so widely aided by many of the ablest scholars and theologians of Scotland, England, America, and the Continent, that the result has proved the solid grounds on which the modern witnesses built their earliest remonstrances.

This system of opinion on "the foundations of belief in human immortality" finds its basis in Divine Revelation alone. It accepts whatever partial and imperfect contributions to the hope or fear of a future existence can be offered by pagan thought, but it holds that the main object of Divine Revelation has been to make clearly known the Incarnate Word as the true author of everlasting life for sinful man—that eternal life of which the prospect was lost for the race by the sin of Adam. The narrative of that and its consequences is authenticated to us and expanded by the express words both of Christ and his apostles. The idea which simple-minded readers would gather from it is that man was condemned to absolute death for sin. But that Divine mercy has interposed for the purpose of "destroying the works of the devil" by giving us eternal life through the mediation of the "seed of the woman." As I have before explained, this system closely connects the astounding fact of the Divine incarnation with the equally astounding fact of human redemption to a life immortal and Divine; so that to attribute a "natural immortality to man's soul," is to misconceive the very chief revelation of the Gospel—which teaches us to find the immortality of both body and soul in union with the Messiah, the Divine Life-giver.

It can scarcely be denied that if the design had been, in the actual language of the Bible, with its numerous writings of many ages, from the time of Moses to St. John, 1500 or 1600 years, to teach this doctrine of an immortality coming to man not by his own nature but by the grace of God in Redemption, no different or more appropriate terminology could have been generally employed to convey that signification. First of all, the entire collection is destitute, as we have seen, of a single explicit affirmation respecting the deathless nature of the human soul, regarded as the basis of hope for immortality, such as we have heard so naturally laid down, again and again, by the eloquent writers who hold it, in this Symposium. There is not one line of argument from Genesis to Malachi, from Matthew to the Revelation, of the same sort which has filled columns after columns of the Homiletic. There is not a single Hopps, or Horder, or Cairns among the prophets of the Bible, much less one who knows, like the Catholic Bishop of Amycla, all about the "essence of the soul," as the constitution, or that our Lord's words, "His commandment is life everlasting," proves that obedience is immortality.

And why this war against life? Because men have for centuries taken to the Bible a psychological system on man's natural immortality, which has perverted and twisted out of its proper meaning all its language on the death that comes by sin, and life that comes only by regeneration of the Spirit through the incarnation of the Son of God, and includes both body and spirit in its immortalizing gift. This is to go contrary to the example of the Bible, which, as Dr. Cairns admits in one marvellously inconsistent sentence, "does not proceed in the ordinary way of extra-scriptural psychology in grounding the doctrine (of immortality) upon a clear distinction between a material and immaterial, and hence a perishable and imperishable, element in man's constitution?"

But Dr. Cairns will demand of these new "systematizers" what they make of the figurative language of the New Testament respecting death. "Let the dead bury their dead." "Thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead." "She that liveth in pleasure (ζῶσα τεθνηκεν) living is dead." "Ye being dead in (through, Revised Version) your sins, to you God hath given life again together with Christ, and raised us up with him, and made us sit together in heavenly places." Is it not clear, it will be said, that here we have the metaphorical sense of death, on which Augustinianism founds its doctrine of the Fall? My reply is:—Assuredly we have in all these cases a figurative use of the word death, but the figure is in the tense, and not in the widest meaning of the word. That is an invention of an antibiblical psychology. The figurative uses of death are common to Scripture itself, "Thou art but a dead man for Sarah, Abraham's wife." The future event is spoken of as present. "I saw the dead stand before God." The past event is spoken as present. We were "dead through trespasses and sins," that is, we were under sentence of death, of utter destruction, through our sins." And when we were thus "dead in sins" God "raised us up together with Christ, and gave us life together with him," so that the state of death was one from which Christ could be raised along with us, and the life was one which we could share with him; which would have been impossible if the death had meant what the Confession and Dr. Cairns intend by it, a state of alienation from God.

So also in Scripture a man is said to be dead to the law, dead to the world, dead to sin, the meaning being that he ceases to live in certain relations with them. When the apostles cried out, "Lord save us, we perish," they did not indicate that they were in a state of endless suffering, but in danger of losing their lives. The figure prolepsis explains every case cited by Dr. Cairns, yet leaves the radical signification of words unaffected throughout the books of Scripture. If the Bible consists of a mass of Hebrew and Greek words which are taken in unnatural senses, when treating on the most important topics, surely it is poetry to speak of it as a "Revelation."

I have now by a counter-statement sought to reply to the vigorous indictment of Dr. Cairns; and for what remains unnoticed must refer to the published works of many authors who have, of late years, defended the doctrine of human immortality through the Divine incarnation; the one form of evangelical faith which seems likely to win the sympathy of modern Europe, or antiquated Asia.

The revival of the ante-Nicene exegesis on these subjects has been attempted many times during the past fifteen centuries, but has, until lately, been time after time successfully suppressed by popular clamour, or ecclesiastical authority. Pious women are nearly all on the side of the most terrific doctrines. There is little chance, however, of a successful suppression of the present revival. Some of the very greatest men are lending their assistance to the movement—a movement which is indeed fatal, in the proportion of its success, to both Unitarianism and Universalism; but is espoused with ever-increasing energy by evangelical scholars in all parts of the world. Dr. Dorner of Berlin in his latest years in writing to M. Bysc, the French Translator of Life in Christ (without committing himself dogmatically), not only acknowledged that the work itself was "thoroughly scientific" (grundliche wissenschaftliche), but declared that its doctrine "appeared to him much preferable to the theory of the final re-establishment of all things; since, under the form given it in this volume, it recognizes much better the rights both of human liberty, and of the justice of God." Under the ægis of Dr. Dorner's name—to which might be added the names of Rothe, Gess, Bonnet, Dale, Cæsar Malan, G. E. Hudson, Baluet, Lotze, Schultz, Jonker (one of the editors of the Theologische Studien), the accomplished scholar E. Petavel, Bushnell and Honourier—all of them men of high rank in their different departments—it may perhaps be permitted to protest against the summary style of much popular English and American criticism on a doctrine which has a good right, after a long thirty years' war, to invoke at least respectful treatment from its adversaries. In every case of divided authorities it is necessary to remember that while a small minority, dissenting from a popular tenet, may be supposed individually to have studied matter under dissension, majorities are formed of persons, nine-tenths of whom have never been persuaded to examine without prejudice the evidence for either side, so that the authorities pro and con must, in the early stages of a controversy, be weighed rather than counted.—Edward White.

ABRAHAM'S BURIAL PLACE.

Hebron is doubtless the oldest city in Palestine, perhaps as old as Damascus in Syria. It was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt, we read in Numbers xiii. 22; but alas, no one will tell us when Zoan was founded. The cave of Machpelah is the principal attraction to tourists in Hebron; and yet nothing could be more inaccessible than this same cave. Backsheesh, that all conquering power, has opened the Mosque of Omar, the Coenaculum and other biblical places of interest that are in the hands of the Moslems; but this wonderful cave is forbidden to the infidel Frank, despite all solicitation. This is the more to be regretted, inasmuch as it is at once genuine, and boasts of an antiquity far out-dating the Christian era. The cave is covered by a huge mosque, 200 feet long and 115 feet broad. The foundation stones are some of them 20 feet long, and bear the ancient Jewish bevels. The cave itself, away down beneath even the basements is studiously guarded even from the indiscriminate gaze of Moslems.

The accounts published from hearsay are confused and contradictory. Sooner or later Mohammedan fanaticism must yield, and then will there be some important revelations in the way of discovered antiquities. The Jews love the very dust about this spot, and repair to the stones in the venerable walls to weep, chant, lament, and deposit written Hebrew prayers in the deep seams between the rocks, just as they do at the famous Wailing Place at Jerusalem. I secured one of these prayers as a souvenir, and then passed around to the rear of the mosque to view some subterranean cavities above and around the real Machpelah.—Palestine letter.

Plymouth, Indiana, May 12, 1886.

It will be noticed by our readers that Mr. E. White holds that the human spirit survives the stroke of the first death. He also seems to intimate the possibility, if not probability, of a trial hereafter for some portion of the race. His articles are the production of an able and well-disciplined mind. Give them a careful reading.

It was officially announced in the House of Lords on Monday that a secret agreement had been reached between the British Secretary of Foreign Affairs, the Secretary of India, and the Russian Minister at London resulted in a rearrangement perfectly satisfactory to England, Russia, and the Viceroy of India. Affairs in the Soudan seem somewhat mixed, and we wait for something definite.

For ourself we should as soon think of throwing away the Bible as of rejecting its teaching redemption through the blood of Christ. His very name Jesus, in its etymology, signifies — The-salvation-of-Jehovah. Jehovah-Salvation. Christ gave up his life not as a mere martyr but as a ransom. The propitiatory death of Jesus was the basis on which the apostles preached salvation to the world of mankind. Like the inherent nature of the Son of God the rationale of salvation through the death of this only-begotten Son of God is among the unrevealed counsels of Jehovah. That we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins, is a revealed fact, but how, or in what manner, the death of Christ has this efficacy is not formally explained in the Scriptures. It was by his own blood that Christ, our Great High Priest, entered into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. The precious blood of Christ is the blood of the everlasting covenant by which we are made perfect. Let us be very careful how we speak of the Son of God, lest we disparage his nature and character, as well as how we speak of that blood that cleanseth from all sin, lest we represent it as a common or unholy thing.

HE WILL SWALLOW UP DEATH IN VICTORY.

While it is not as those who have no hope that we sorrow for the dead in Christ, still, sadness will overwhelm the mind and tears flow from the fountains of grief when death removes from our heart-companionship the fondly cherished objects of our strongest affection leaving a dark shadow in the home-dwelling that no sunlight can ever displace, and a vacuum in the heart that nothing earthly can ever fill. Three years ago it was providentially our privilege to spend a few weeks with Bro. J. B. Cook and family in Brooklyn, N. Y., during which time the slight acquaintance formed about forty years previously was knighted into a more intimate friendship by social and Christian intercourse with that devoted family. We now learn from Bro. Cook himself that Sister Cook has fallen under the power of the last enemy. She was a person endowed with an extraordinary share of those qualities of both the head and heart that, when possessed, so ennoble and adorn any individual of the female sex. The kindness shown the writer by the deceased, as well as by the other members of the kind Christian family, left impressions on the tablets of the writer's memory that will only be obliterated by death's effacing fingers. When bidding them the last farewell a sort of solemn premonition seemed to whisper that we should meet no more on earth. In passing we may add that we called on Bro. Willard and his endeared Christian family on our homeward journey, and when the leave-taking at last came, the same premonitory assurance made the writer so certain that it was the final adieu in this world, that he noted it at the very time in his diary. The visitor is spared but Bro. Willard has reposed on the clay pillow for more than a year. In this number of our paper we record Sister Cook's obituary. She too sleeps in the dust of the earth. Her hands minister their ministrations of kindness no more. But our sorrow is not a hopeless grief. Christ has brought life and immortality to light. The day-spring from on high will soon scatter the shadows in the valley of death, and beam into the blacker midnight of the deepest tomb. Our hope and crown of rejoicing is to meet the loved and lost in resurrection life and glory beyond the grave. Then shall be brought to pass the saying—death is swallowed up in victory.

Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

THE FIRST FOUR BIBLES.

Gutenberg; Pfistery Remarks; Fust and Schoeffer.

Judging from the number of letters received containing descriptions of old Bibles, I conclude that many of our readers are especially interested in the early history of the printed Word. This encourages me to continue these notes on the very earliest printed books. Of the Gutenberg Bible, which is the first printed book, commonly called the Gutenberg Bible, I have written two articles. Its history is the history of the origin and infancy of printing. Only recently, the highest price ever paid for a printed book was given for a copy of this Bible, $16,500, at the Perkins sale in London, 1873. This was surpassed in December last at the Syston Park sale in London, when a Mentz Psalter, also called Psalterium Citeley, was sold for nearly $2000. This famous book is erroneously mentioned here, because it is a part of the Bible and was printed during the brief period between the First and Second printed Bibles. Its greater rarity gives it a greater pecuniary value than the most precious copy of the entire Scriptures. After Gutenburg had printed the first Bible, his creditor, Fust, obtained possession of all his printing materials. Fust formed a partnership with Peter Schoeffer, who became his son-in-law. Their first publication was the Mentz Psalter, Aug. 14, 1457, the first printed book with a complete date, a folio of 350 pages, with beautiful initial letters printed in two colors. This was reprinted with the same types in 1459, 1490, 1502 and 1516. The copy recently sold for nearly $20,000 is not the first edition, but the second. It is entered in the Sale Catalogue of the Syston Park Library as follows:

"Psalmorum Codex, Latin cum Hymnis, Orationc Dominica Symbolis et Notis musicis. Printed on Vellum, very fine copy, with painted capitals, in red morocco extra, borders of gold, gilt edges, by Staggemeier, folio. Moguntico, J. Fust at P. Schoiffher, 1459.

"This excessively rare edition is the second book with a date, and contains the Athanasian Creed, printed for the first time. In rarity it nearly equals that printed in 1457, of which only eight copies are known, and of this only ten, all printed on vellum. This copy sold for 3,350 francs in the MacCarthy sale, and £185 10s. in that of Sir M. Sykes."

A copy of this edition is in the British Museum, and also a copy of the first edition, printed on vellum, which is not only the first book printed with a date, but the first example of printing in colors.

Beautiful fac-similes of pages of this Psalter are in Humphreys's History of Printing, and also in the more accessible volume, Theodore L. de Vinne's "Invention of Printing."

In the Caxton Exhibition, 1877, the 1457 copy of this Psalter was lent by the Queen, and the 1459 copy by the Earl of Leicester. No copy of this book is in America. It is an interesting coincidence that the most precious devotional treasure of the church is also the most precious treasure of the bibliographer, whatever may be his faith or unbelief.

The second Bible is generally known as The Gutenberg Bible, from the place where it is believed to have been printed, or the Pfister Bible, from the name of its supposed printer; or the Bible of thirty-six lines, from the number of lines on a page. Like most of the earliest printed books, it has no title-page or date. In the Catalogue of the Caxton Exhibition the copy of this Bible, lent by Earl Spencer, is entered as follows:

"Bible (Second Latin). Gothic letter. (Hamberg: Albert Pfister, 1460?). Folio: 15¾ by 11 inches. Without title, pagination or signatures. 882 leaves: printed in double columns, 36 lines to a full column. A copy in the Paris library has the rubrication dated 1461, proving that this Bible was printed prior to that date. But the cover of the Church Register of Bamberg being composed partly of waste leaves of this Bible, and the Register beginning with 31 March, 1460, it follows that these leaves were printed prior to this latter date."

Mr. De Vinne, in his book on the "Invention of printing," gives at length the reasons for the opinion that this Bible is not the work of Pfister, but one of the earlier works of Gutenburg, and therefore not the second Bible, but the first. He says: "In nearly all the popular treatises on printing the "Bible of Forty-two Lines" is specified as the first book of Gutenberg, but it is the belief of many of the most learned bibliographers, from Zapf to Dibdin and Madden, that the Bible of thirty-six lines is the older edition." Mr. Hawkins favors this view, saying: "It seems to me that this Bible must have been produced by the same set of workmen who printed the Gutenberg Bible; many points of resemblance in each edition lead to this conclusion. I am not of those who believe that the Gutenberg Bible was the result of a first experiment. Years of patient labor must have been spent and many vexatious failures and partial successes experienced before this splendid work was produced. Might not the Bible of thirty-six lines have been produced by seven years during these years of experiment? I do not assert this, but merely suggest its probability. At all events I venture the assertion that there is no conclusive evidence that it was printed by Pfister at Bamberg or elsewhere."

Notwithstanding these well-considered views of American students of early printing, we are compelled to record this Bible as thirty-six lines as the second, as there is as yet no evidence that it was printed before 1461, the latest date assigned to the Gutenberg Bible. Of Pfister nothing is known but his name and a few books and pamphlets attributed to him. His earliest dated book is the Biblia Pauperum, 1461. Mr. De Vinne says that the profusion of wood-cuts in this and his other books indicates that he was an engraver on wood. He thinks that he bought an old font of type to use in printing the explanations of these pictures. His "Book of four stories," with his imprint, Bamberg, 1462, is printed with the types of the "Bible of thirty-six lines," and this gave the impression that he printed this Bible also. Sebastian Pfister, supposed to be his son, had a printing office at Bamberg in 1470. Although next to nothing is known of Albert Pfister, his name has been used at times as a rival to that of Gutenberg for the honor of the invention of the art of printing.

The third Bible is generally known as The Strasburg Bible, or as The Mentelin Bible, from the name of its printer. It is thus entered in the Catalogue of the Caxton Exhibition:

"Bible (Third Latin) 2 vols. (Strasburg: Jo. Mentelin, 1460 and 1461?) Folio. 15¾ by 11¾ inches. Lent by Earl Spencer. Without title-page, pagination, or signatures; 477 leaves, printed in double columns, 49 lines to a full column. The rubrics and initials are in MS. throughout. A copy of this Bible is preserved in the library of Freiburg in Brisgau, with the rubrications of the volume dated 1461, and 1461 is striking this volume the third Latin Bible."

Mr. Hawkins gives this Bible the second place, and says: "A copy of this Bible in the University Library at Freiburg, in Breisgau Baden, is in two volumes; has at the end of the first this inscription: 'Explicit psalterii 1460;' and at the end of the second, 'Explicit Apocalipsis Anno dni MCCCCLXI;' The authenticity of the inscriptions is vouched for by the fact that they were made by the same hand which rubricated every page in both volumes. Accepting these dates as made in good faith, a press must have been set up at Strasburg as early as 1460, which would entitle that city to the position, in the history of printing, which has usually been assigned to Bamberg, since the first volume of the Mentelin edition has an implied earlier date than any known copy of the so-called Bamberg Bible. I am therefore compelled to give Strasburg the second place in the chronological arrangement which I have adopted."

Lack of positive information makes abundant room for difference of opinion and arrangement. Such historical puzzles are an agreeable form of intellectual recreation. They also keep inquiring minds from those prophetic problems which lead so many uninspired men into manifest absurdities. The future never fails to make itself known in good season, but we must look after the past or it will escape us entirely.

Mentelin, the printer of this third Bible has also been named as the inventor of printing, not until long after his death, and the claim has no support from documents or records. Philip de Lignamine, of Rome, in 1474, said that Mentelin printed in Strasburg after 1458.

The fourth Bible is unique in this respect, that it is the first edition of the Bible with the date, name of printer, and place where printed. It was printed by Fust and Schoeffer, at Mentz, 1462. 2 vols. Gothic letter. Three copies of this were in the Caxton Exhibition, one on pure vellum richly illuminated in gold and colors, lent by Earl Spencer, and another equally rich lent by Earl Jersey. A third copy, on paper, was lent by Mr. Stevens. There is a copy on exhibition in the Lenox Library, marked as the first dated Bible and the sixth dated book. At the recent Syston Park Sale a copy of this Bible on vellum sold for £5,000. Before the discovery of the Gutenberg Bible this was supposed to be the first. In the year of its publication 1462, during a war between two archbishops, Mentz was besieged and captured, many of its citizens were exiled, and the art of printing was introduced into many European cities.

These first four Bibles were all in the Latin Vulgate, all large folios, all printed in the first decade of the art and probably in small editions. All books printed in the first half century of printing, that is, before 1500, are called incunabula, from the Latin word meaning cradle. Among them all none is more interesting than these four earliest Bibles.—By Rev. Dr. Prime, in the New York Observer.

No. II.

I propose to show to you by the testimony of the sacred writings that a rejection of the gospel and its lessons, is a sin.

Hence a person can be a sinner in the absence of the Ten Commandments as Adam undoubtedly was, as was the billions of the unborn, through Adam, as well as all the Gentile nations, even after the law was given to and binding on Israel. Paul positively says that the "Gentiles have not the law." Rom. ii. 14. Could they transgress a law they did not have?

I was once like you and other Sabbatarians, thought I was very wise, when I would with self complacency and egotism quote pompously, 1 Jno. iii. 4. "Sin is the transgression of the law," which of course meant the Ten Commandments, no more, and no less; and of course this always put a quietus on the subject when talking with an orthodox opponent; because they believed the same thing, minus the fourth Commandment! That 1 Jno. iii. and iv. is a climax: that it ends all controversy, i. e., that all sin is the direct transgression of the law, and that law is the Ten Commandments, is a grave mistake based upon ignorance of the sacred writings, we will now show. And in order to bring out the facts, we will ask, what is sin? (1) It is 'cliff', 'place'. (2) "A descent between Bilm and Sisel on the East of the gulf of Suez"—Young. (3) Israel journeyed to the wilderness of Sin by the direction (law) of the Lord! See Ex. xvi. 1). (4) They left the wilderness of Sin by the same authority. (See Ex. xvii. 1.) (5) But before leaving it, it is said, that they "camped in the wilderness of Sin" Num. xxxiii. 11.

This nation was a sinful nation we have every reason to believe: but to journey right into the very wilderness of Sin and to camp there! and that too, by the direction of God, is terrible! And (6) "all unrighteousness is sin." 1 Jno. v. 17; This text explains 1 Jno. iii. and iv. and (7), "the thought of foolishness is Sin." Prov. xxiv. 9. And (8) "The ploughing of the wicked is Sin!! Query. Does the Ten Commandments prohibit the wicked from plowing? We might go on, in extenso, and give instances of sins not traceable to a violation of the Ten Commandments, but we have cited more than the law required—"two or three witnesses." 1 Jno. iii. and 4; does not say that "sin is the transgression of the law—meaning the Ten Commandments." For neither phrase, 'law,' nor, 'Ten Commandments,' is found in the Greek text; and your leaders all know it: or ought to know it, at least. I will give you a word for a word translation of the text; also a rendering based on the very earliest MSS. known. One need for word translation is to read—"Every one the doing the sin also the lawlessness does; and the sin is lawlessness." Now the rendering—"Every one who practices sin, also practices iniquity; and sin is iniquity."—Dia. Now sister for conscience sake, do not ever quote 1 Jno. iii. and iv. as having any reference to the Ten Commandments; for you can readily see that it does not, any more than Sin, in Ex. xvi. 1; does; or the 'ploughing' of the wicked does.

Now we will prove that the rejection of Christ and the gospel is a sin. The Savior says, "when He (the comforter) is come He will reprove the world of sin." But you deny this and say that the law reproved the world from Adam down, by the known perpetuity, and binding obligations, of the Ten Commandments! In this you contradict the Master. "Reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." How Lord? How are you going to reprove the world of sin? by telling us that the Ten Commandments are the rule of action? that the Sabbath is the memorial of the Almighty creative power of the Father? and is still binding? O no. But, "if I had not come and spoken to them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloak for their sin." Jno. xv. 22. Ah! surely good Master you are no Sabbatarian. But you ask, how is that to reprove the world of sin? Hark! "Of sin, because they believe not in me." This caps the climax! see Jno. xvi. 9. You see dear sister, that a rejection of Jesus and the gospel is pronounced by authority, Sin. The gospel is not the ten commandments Paul, in stating some of the fundamental principles of the gospel says, moreover brethren I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which ye have received,.... By which ye are saved if ye keep" also the Sabbath! no sir. But, "keep in memory what I preached unto you." Now what did Paul preach unto you first (chief) of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins (that was imputed to me) according to the Scriptures, and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." And Peter says, "But there is no other name given under heaven whereby we can be saved but the name of Jesus." These Scriptures are plain and decisive. There is not a word of law or Sabbath in it; notwithstanding Paul knew and these were the chief, or first in importance.

You again say, Paul says, to be baptized and wash away their sins calling on the Lord, for by the law is the knowledge of sin.' Now Paul does not say any such thing; now any other inspired writer. Your above paragraph cannot be found in the Bible. You have written over sixty lines; of which the above is a sample. But here light seems to break in upon your benighted mind, which gives promise of hope. Thank God for the concession. Here it is. You say—"I admit (that) the law of God is called the law of Moses interchangably! But then as if you had felt that you had shaken off the trammels too suddenly, you add, 'but this does not destroy the force of the law'! Which law, sister? You have just admitted that they are both one! Then Moses's law is still in force; ha? Notwithstanding you have just said that it was nailed to the cross! You are as much of a Judaizer as Paul's Galatian brethren were. Read that epistle, perhaps it may cure you. Let me kindly inform you sister, that the backbone of Sabbatarianism is broken through this admission of yours. Good enough! Now interchangably means, a mutual exchange; in other words, it is a synonym, i. e., an idea expressed by a phrase or word: expressed by other words, e. g., 'fifty cents,' 'half dollar,' 'four shillings'; all mean precisely the same thing.

And thus you have admitted that, 'the law of God,' 'the law of Moses,' 'the perfect law' and imperfect law, (what ever that is)! "the moral law" the 'ten of Commandments contained in ordinances'; and "the law that is holy, just, and good," is one and the same law. This is a big concession. You are not far from the facts in this. Jesus of Nazareth is your covering for sin: not the law. May you trust fully in him that you may be made partaker of the divine nature and be one of the body to herald the saving name of Jesus to the billions of Adam's race in the ages to come, is my sincere prayer.

This is quite a long letter; but I could not help it. Oblige me by reading it candidly in the light of the Scriptures of truth; and fear not to step aside from the teachings of men: and great will be your reward when the Life-Giver comes.

Now if you have any new light to bring out on this question I should like to have you do it. I will send you a proposition, and will keep a copy; it will help you to stop this rambling. Let us be honest with each other and with the Master; for to him we standeth or falleth.

Yours as ever awaiting a reply early.

Conference Report.

The Northwestern Pa., A. C. C. met in quarterly session at Geneva, Pa., Apr. 17, first business session on the 18. The President Sr. Stoddard, being necessarily absent on account of feeble health, the duties of the office devolved on the Vice President, Bro. J. W. Niles, as did also all the speaking. Representatives were present from Edinboro, Blooming Valley, Orangeville, Meadville, Spartansburg, Tidioute, and by letter from Plum and East Branch. The session was characterized by great interest in Conference work, and great earnestness in listening to the preaching of the word.

Although this Conference has been established but a short time much has been done to awaken the people to the importance of Adventist truths within its limits, and much still remains to be done. The Conference took action in appointing a committee to solicit aid from churches or individuals by systematic contribution in support of evangelistic work, names of Committee Sr. E. G. Heard of Blooming Valley, Sr. S. A. Atwater of Edinboro, and Bro. D. W. Harroun of Geneva. Bro. M. R. Niles has spent six weeks since the annual meeting in January preaching in the eastern part of the Conference limits, and will soon visit Plum and other points for the purpose of baptism.

Our President also has been a willing worker wherever the way seemed available to preach the truth, and others also have used their gift as the Lord has given them ability, and still the cry is "come over and help us"—"and they that turn many to righteousness (shall shine) as the stars forever and ever." Conference also took action that the place for holding the next session be left to the board of managers. Adjourned to meet at the call of the chair.

Miscellaneous.

Recent deciphering of Assyrian inscriptions on the Babylonian tablets in the British Museum revealed 26 names mentioned in Genesis, and confirmed the Biblical record of the migration of Abram from Ur of the Chaldees.

G. P. Watson, in the Magazine of American History, says "that the human frame after death, even its particles of dust, remains a conductor of electricity: in the case of no other animate creature is this true." What evidence is there that this remarkable statement is correct? And if it is true, does it not prove a greater difference between the constitution of man and other animals than has been generally supposed?—N. Y. Observer.

An explorer of Chaldean records has recently sent a collection of tablets to England which proved to be the contracts of a mercantile firm for several generations. On a close examination it was found that every document was dated with the month, year, and day of the reigning sovereign, and thus a complete chronology has been secured of the kings of Nebuchadnezzar to Darius Hydaspes, one of the periods in dispute among Biblical critics.

The Jewish population of Jerusalem is constantly increasing, and now numbers 18,000. This is the largest number that has lived in the sacred city at one time since the destruction by Titus in 70 A.D. Two first blind asylum in Palestine, the land that possibly has now, and has had for centuries, the largest number of blind people proportionally in the world, has been established in Jerusalem. It is connected with the Syrian Orphans' Asylum, under charge of the German missionary, Schneller.

STENOGRAPHY AND CRYPTOGRAPHY.

At a recent meeting of the Shorthand Society in London a paper was read in support of the theory that stenography is an outcome of secret writing; that, in fact, the cipher writers in pre-stenographic times while searching for new methods of secret communication stumbled upon brief characters which could obviously be written with greater speed than those in ordinary use. Great stress was laid upon the fact that the ancient Hebrew writers were not only acquainted with the art of writing in cipher, but were alive to the importance of saving time and labor by the use of a regular system of abbreviation. On the title-pages of most of the early works upon shorthand published in England the word "secret" appears, as if mystery was one of the principal advantages connected with the knowledge of the stenographic art.

COLORADO CAÑON.

Look up again, and now gaze for six thousand feet into the air toward the heavens, and you can still see rough-edged rocks, all outlined against the sky, over a mile in height away, throwing up pinnacles, and towers, and domes, and isolated peaks, chipped and scarred, and dark, massive, and irregular. The light of day is dimmed, the place is full of loud, hoarse roars, the air is chilled, and the river, lashed into foaming fury, leaps madly along its course. Here are shadows that Rembrandt would have gloried in; here Doré might have copied nature and added to his fame. Here is the road to Dante's sombre halls. One stands within the very bowels of the earth, with all light and brightness lost to view. He sees the work of ages, the result of a mighty power. The earth is cloft in twain; it is as though a mountain, tall and strong, had been halved by some sharpened sword. Six thousand feet of stony depths! Six thousand feet beneath the light of day! There are no pleasant smiles of nature to be seen. No flowers grow, no shrubs appear, no birds are visible. Dark are the towering walls, and darker still their shadows, while the towers take on most uncouth shapes, and the river runs out of blackness to us, and into darkness from us, a puny monster in comparison with its prison, a wayward child held in stern rebuke.

From the tops of the cliffs which form the Colorado canon, the river winding at the bottom is like a strand of gold. But it needs strong nerve to look from the great height into the depths below. Drop a stone, and the splash it would make upon striking the water could not be seen. Even the noise the river makes is not audible, and the stream seems to flow noiselessly along its dark and rugged course. Turning our gaze from the canon and looking about the country, the deep rent is seen stretching away to the east and west, while in the distance are tall trees and rocks, and bare, brown hills. One questions why the canon was made and how—whether worn by the river or formed by volcanic action. But whatever the cause, it is a strange freak of nature, rivalling, with its grandeure, all other sights inviting comparison but challenging competition. All other canons of the wild Southwest, where rivers delight to wind in darkened places, sink into insignificance when compared to this of the Rio Colorado.—Cor. of St. Evening Post.

JEWS IN CENTRAL ASIA.

The Jewish Chronicle notes that among the results of recent Russian advances into the heart of Central Asia is the opening of communication with hitherto unknown Jewish congregations. Two of the most interesting of these communities are to be found at Merv and Surakhs. In both places there are Jews from Persia and Afghanistan. The Shochet at Merv originally came from Meshed (in Khorassan), where forty-five years ago the Jews were forced to embrace the religion of Islam. The spiritual head of the Jewish community is a certain Rabbi Mordecai, who is at the same time the wealthiest silk manufacturer in Merv. The congregation possesses six Scrolls of the Law and a copy of the Talmud. A school is held in the synagogue. Many of the Jewish families, who at Meshed were obliged to become Mohammedans, now reside at Merv, but they secretly observe Jewish precepts, and nearly each household has its own Shochet. The bulk of the unwilling converts made their way, under cover of the pilgrimage to Mecca, to the Holy Land. The Jews in Merv seem to be in a good position, for, with but five exceptions, all are merchants; and when three years ago a "messenger" Name Unither from Palestine, he left Merv the richer by about £200.

Editor Restitution:

I have been a reader of the paper several years, and the more I read the more I like it, it wears well. The unsettled matters in the old world Asia, Europe, and Africa, admonish us that Gentile times are fast drawing to a close, and lovers of God's kingdom, soon to be set up, should be on the watch tower, and keep his lamps trimmed and lights burning, and study to be approved by the Master when we are brought before him for examination.

Yours in the Faith.

STOP! STOP!!

And examine the label on your paper, examine your account book, and if you find you are owing for THE RESTITUTION, please send us the amount right away. Do not wait for to-morrow, but write and send the money NOW.

REMEMBER

That we will send THE RESTITUTION to the poor, at their request, so long as we can get the means to publish the paper. Let all our brethren who have means to use in sending the good news to others, send us the name of some friend or relative, and send us an extra dollar, to send the paper to them. If you cannot think of any such persons send the money, and we will apply it where it will be appreciated and return blessings on the donor.

REMEMBER

When sending your remittance that many sums of money are lost every year by the careless manner in which many send their subscriptions to newspapers; so please get a Post Office Money Order, a Bank Draft, an Express Money Order, or have your letter Registered. Do not send Bank Checks, as it costs us from twenty-five to forty cents to collect each one. If you are compelled to send postage stamps buy those of the one or two cent denominations. We do not want large ones.

A CUP OF COLD WATER.

The Lord of the harvest walked forth one day,
Where the fields were white with the ripening wheat,
Where those he had sent in the early morn,
Were reaping the grain in the noon-day heat.
He had chosen a place for each faithful one,
And bidden them work till the day was done.

Apart from the others, with troubled voice,
Spoke one who had gathered no golden grain:
"The Master has given no work to me,
And my coming hither has been in vain;
The reapers with gladness and song will come,
But no sheaves will be mine in the harvest home."

He heard the complaint, and He calmly said the same:
"Dear child, why standest thou idle here?
Go fill thy cup from the hillside streams,
And bring it those who are toiling near.
I will bless thy labor, and it shall be Kept in remembrance as done for me."

'Twas a little service, but grateful heart
Thanked God for the water so cool and clear;
And some who were fainting with toil and heat
Went forth with new strength to the work so dear;
And many a weary soul looked up,
Revived and cheered by the little cup.

Dear Lord, I have looked with an envious heart
On those who were reaping the golden grain;
I have thought in Thy work I had no part,
And mourned that my life was lived in vain;
But now Thou hast opened my eyes to see
That thou hast some little work for me.

If only this labor of love be mine—
To gladden the heart of some toiling saint
To whisper some words that will cheer the weak;
Do something to comfort the worn and faint—
Though small be the service, I will not grieve,
Content just a cup of cold water to give.

And when the Lord of the harvest shall come,
And the laborers home from the field shall call,
He will not look for my gathered sheaves;
But His loving words on my ears will fall;
"Thou gavest a cup of cold water to Me,
A heavenly home thy reward shall be."

Man's Accuser and the Plaintiff at the Great Assize, where the Final Issues of Life are to be Tried. Who It Is.

Matt. v. 25, 26, reads as follows: Be well disposed toward thy opponent quickly whilst thou art on the way along with him, lest at any time thy opponent give thee up to the judge, and the judge give thee up to his servant and thou be cast into prison.

There has been so much misapprehension and misinterpretation of this parable teaching, that I think many will be enlightened by carefully reviewing it from the Scriptural standpoint strictly.

The judge here being man's judge, must necessarily be the Christ, because we are specifically taught that "all judgment hath been committed unto the Son of man," and the rationale of it clearly explained elsewhere. "Thy opponent" here in legal phraseology, is the plaintiff against you as a defendant in a suit at law, and this may be any one whom you have wronged as tried by the standard of a law of righteousness. "The way" is the "way of life," along which we are all journeying. "Lest at any time" teaches the great truth brought out everywhere in the Scriptures, that "now is the accepted time," that one's life in every individual case is his time of probation, and that the uncertainty of life makes it imperative to do "quickly" whatever you have to do in a question of loss and gain. Your "opponent" as you learn from the preceding verse is any "brother" man whom you have injured and who has just cause of complaint against you. There is a wrong to be righted. Vows or votive offerings on the alter are not sufficient or even acceptable, unless, accompained by "restitution." Restitution must be made, and the further teaching is that it is very much easier for you to settle these things with your brother-man "now" and "on the way" by being "well disposed," by showing a spirit of fairness and equity, by conciliating and propitiating your opponent or "adversary" than by negligently or defiantly trusting to the certain and relentless grip of the law. Remember that Christ is presented to us as "The Father of the widow and the orphan," and "in that day" the widow and the orphan will be the plaintiffs in many a case against the base and the mercenary oppressor, who has neglected to avail himself of the "day of grace" and "the means of grace," and who has fallen back into the clutches of a law that knows only the cold logic of right and restitution. What does Christ say to the Jewish Pharisees, the heartless exponents of the law of Moses? "I am not going to judge you," in that day, but the law in which you trust and Moses the mediator of that law in whom you believe.

Even in human experience, men have always found that equity subserves a higher good in practical utility than law. The vital principle of grace as a remedial agency is that it saves even to the saving of life, while law, cold formal law, destroys even to the destruction of life. So Paul argues that if it had been possible to frame an abstract law of life, and formulate it in such a way as to save, God would have done it. For the law that God did frame and give was "perfect," he goes on to show, and yet that "slew" even the Christ. "For he was accounted among the transgressors" notwithstanding he was innocent. And why? That in the denouement God might humble even this perfect law when it should stand forgiven before God's greater mercy, and all that is to teach us that there is a higher utility in mercy than law as man is now constituted, that it is better to give than to receive, that it is better to remit than to exact payment, and that even an amicable settlement of differences on some basis of compromise in equity is better than legal strife.

This is the lesson of the parable, and how slow we all are to learn it. Law only necessary to settle strife. Love one another and no other law needed. If you can't love one another, do the next best thing, quietly agree to differ, and legally respect each other's differences, and your peace will begin to flow like a river, whether you be an individual or a community or a nation. In a word "be well disposed toward your opponent." Put aside all malice, and hate, and envy, and desire to injure. It is wonderful how such a spirit disarms opposition, and it is truly an obdurate enemy whom it will not ultimately win over to become a friend. Being "well-disposed toward" your opponent is very much more than becoming reconciled to or "agreeing with the same." The former implies a continuous state of goodwill or grace, which is being positively exerted toward its object, while all that is implied and the most that is implied in the latter case, is that a present difference has been removed by a present agreement, which may be vitiated to-morrow by fresh wrongdoing and injury on your part or his. But if your purpose to injure which has already asserted itself in some overt act which constituted your opponent justly your legal plaintiff, has been changed to a purpose to benefit, to love even your enemy, here is something that bids fair to end war permanently, and inaugurate peace; a peace, it is true, not such as the world giveth; for the world is unregenerate and this comes from the conduct of a regenerate heart and mind.

We conclude then, that man's accuser at the Great Assize will be the law and his brother man as a witness to the law, and plaintiff in the name of law. "Ye are my witnesses." Christ will then preside as judge de jure and de facto. The first issue to be decided will be in every case, Are you under law or under grace. Did you avail yourself of the gracious offer and become well disposed towards all men, even your opponents and enemies? If so you are under grace and inasmuch as ye remitted it shall be remitted unto you. If not, if you were revengeful, and hard-hearted, and obdurate, and purposed to exact all that the law would give you, you are under law and the law must take its course even to the requirement of the last quadrante. "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, thou shalt not come forth therefrom until thou hast paid back the last quadrante."

OUR HOPE.

The apostle Paul when brought before the Jewish council said: Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee, of the hope and the resurrection of the dead I am called in question. Acts xxiii. 6. And when brought before Felix the Roman Governor, he again says, But I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets, and have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust. Acts, xxiv, 14-15. Again. As touching the resurrection of the dead, I am called in question by you this day. It was for this hope that the Apostle Paul was "called in question" before King Agrippa, and when permitted to speak for himself, Paul stretched forth his hand and said, I think myself happy, King Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day before thee, touching all things whereof I am accused of the Jews. And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers; unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come; for which hope's sake King Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Acts xxvi. 6-7.

And for this hope, Paul was bound, and after a dangerous voyage, being shipwrecked, he reached Rome, at which place he subsequently suffered martyrdom for the hope's sake.

Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, whose hope the Lord is. Jer. xvii. 7.

Brethren, let us lay hold upon the hope set before us, which hope we have as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil. Heb. vi. 18-19. For, if in this life only, we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable.

But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that sleep. 1 Cor. xv. 19-20.

For, we shall sleep, but not forever,
Where shall be a glorious dawn;
We shall meet to part, no never,
On the resurrection morn!

And now brethren, we ought to examine ourselves and see whether we shall be accounted worthy to attain unto the resurrection of the dead, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not.

A SPRING SONG.

Violet, violet, blue and sweet,
Nestling down by the old rock's feet,
Can it be you are glad to grow,
Nobody near your grace to know?
Whispers the violet, soft as air,
"God can look at me anywhere."

Blossom white on the waiting tree,
Lest you envious your place may be,
Pitched perhaps 'mid a bird's careless nest—
A faded flower. The blossom said:
"Promise of mine may never be broken;
I am content to be his token."

Robin, sing! is your heart's delight,
What may happen before the night?
Foolish thing of such joy partounced,
Over a day, leaf-hid nest.
"Why should I not in gladness sings
I am a robin and this is spring?"

Little brook, from the ice-chain free,
Dancing off to the boundless sea,
Rippling and foaming in sheer delight,
Sparkling and clinging till out of sight.
Way should your rapture over brim?
"My cup is crystal, and full to the rim."

Heart that cannot, for care that press,
Sing with the bird, or thy Maker bless,
As the flowers may, blooming sweet
With never an eye but God's to greet
Thou beauty and freshness learn to trust!
List my thought from the earthly dust!

Robin and blossom, and violet blue,
Singing and shining with morning dew,
Have they no lesson for one like these?
God, who loves even them, will see
How thou art trying to sing his praise
Out of the gloom of thy shadowed days.

What Religion did for a Little Girl.

Religion helps children to study better and do more faithful work. A little girl of twelve was telling, in a simple way, the evidence that she was a Christian. "I did not like to study, but to play. I was idle at school, and often missed my lessons. Now, I try to learn every lesson well to please God. I was mischievous at school when the teachers were not looking at me, making fun for the children to laugh at. Now, I wish to please God by behaving well and keeping the school laws. I was selfish at home; didn't like to run errands, and was sulky when mother called me from play to help her in work. Now it is a real joy to me to help mother in any way, and show that I love her."

Such a religion is essential to the best interests and moral growth of youth, and will make life cheerful.

Triumph.

"Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that sleep."

The irrefutable fact stands forth in all its glorious majesty and infinite sweep of meaning.

The gospel records must be torn to tatters, and scattered with the rent sybilline leaves, never more to be regathered. The whole colossal fabric of Christianity must have been built upon an abyss. The head and foundation of the church must have been created by the church. A man must have been the father of his own ancestors, before this fact can be successfully denied.

Christ has risen from the dead. His own words have been justified. Christ is risen from the dead, and God has given the seal and sign manual to the Messianic mission. He has declared him to be the Son of God, with power. Christ has risen from the dead, and an unsetting sun—the new and unfailing center of attraction—has burst in glory from the darkness of the tomb.

Christ is risen, and we, too, shall rise. Every charnel house is robbed of its terrors. The sting has been plucked from death, and the grave been robbed of its victory. The darkness has forever passed. It is morning!—Bishop Fallows.

Abideth Forever.

When the great traveller, Baron Humbolt, was journeying in South America, there came a sudden stillness in the air, which seemed like a hush over all nature. But that was followed by a fearful convulsion of the earth, which made all hearts quake. And Humbolt tells us that the earthquake within his soul was as great as that in the world without. All his old ideas of the stability of the earth were destroyed in a moment. Should he fly to the hills for help? The mountains were reeling like drunken men. The houses were no refuge, for they were crumbling and falling. The trees were overthrown; and then his thoughts turned to the sea, but lo! it had fled. Ships which just before were floating securely on its surface, were now left rocking on the sands. Being thus at his wit's end, he tells us he "looked up, and observed that the heavens alone were calm and unshaken."

There are times in one's life when all earthly help seems to fail us. Beloved friends, though so near and willing, cannot take away pain and sickness, which seems to overwhelm us. Often, too, the very friends we leaned upon are taken away, and all human help is absent. Whatever the trouble, we may always look up and find help that never changes. Your kin, and loving Savior can more than make up for all your present losses and troubles. If you can see him looking down with love upon you, even pain and death will lose their terrors.

A momentary shock of an earthquake can make the strongest tremble; but in that day when "the earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard and shall be removed," how will those rejoice who can look to heaven and exclaim, "Hosannas to him that cometh."

My Dear Nephew:

You say you have carefully noticed each several point brought out in my last letter, and—while you are not altogether willing to accept without further consideration and comparison with the word of truth, neither are you willing to reject as wholly without evidence to sustain them.

Then you ask—"If he did not die in our stead, if Christ did not shed his blood that we might be cleansed thereby, what benefit to us, was either his life or death?" Let us together search patiently in the word, which is the only source of information—and see what light we can gather on this all-important subject. In doing this we must remember "God's ways are not as our ways, neither are his thoughts as our thoughts." He is All Wise, Eternal, Omnipotent,—Infinite in all his works and ways. We are but mortal, erring, frail and in all our capacities, but finite.

Just how long this earth was in process of formation we are not told. We are only told that in the beginning it was "without form and void." From that state it was brought by Almighty Power to be a suitable place for man's abode.

In Isa. xlv. 18, we are told that he formed the earth to be inhabited. Eccl. i. 4, that it (the earth) abideth forever. Ps. cxix. 8, that he established the earth and it abideth. From these, and many other passages, we see that God designed that this earth should remain forever, and we further learn that he designed that it should be inhabited, and by a race of beings possessed of both moral and intellectual characters. At his creation man was endowed with moral and intellectual faculties, but they were only given in their latent state, and required development, before either moral or intellectual character could result therefrom. By these two combined natural endowments, he was placed at the head, as ruler of this visible world. His intellectual capacity was tested when he was permitted to give names to all the vast tribes of animal life that God had formed of the dust of the earth, and vitalized by the breath of life. This intellectual test he bore well; for God approved the wisdom of his work, by saying; "whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof."

From our standpoint it would seem that the moral test presented was much less difficult. It was simply to abstain (from one tree.) But also, like so many of their sons and daughters of to-day, abstinence proved too much for them! Selfishness asserted her claim—was not denied, and all was lost. And he who was designed as ruler of this entire earth, by this one disloyal act of disobedience, was condemned by his own heart, and he sought to hide from his Benefactor, but in vain. He was soon discovered, brought to trial, confessed his crime—was judged worthy of the threatened penalty in case he disobeyed; and the sentence was pronounced, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Here closed the door of hope to man in his first estate. There was nothing inherent in his nature that could perpetuate his existence, and from the tree of life he was forever shut out for reasons before given.

We now behold all this lower world designed by its Creator to endure forever, without a ruler, all tainted by sin, under the curse, on account of man's disloyalty.

In so far as it is revealed to us, it seems to be God's way to bring the new out of the old. He always uses means to accomplish his purposes, and too, he always tests the agent he employs in the accomplishing of those purposes. He tested Noah, and found him faithfully trusting him, and laboring to obey his commands for a hundred and twenty years. He tested Abram when he called him to leave his kindred, friends and country, and go forth into the unseen, untried land of which he knew nothing. He still further tested him when he told him to offer up his only son, to whom he looked as the one in whom the promise would in some measure be fulfilled.

Indeed we find that all the faithful in every age and clime have undergone some test, meted out to each according to his measure, who seeth not as man seeth. This testing is not to make known to God what man will do: for he knew all things from the very beginning. But these are recorded for our benefit.

Adam having failed to endure the test presented him, God, who knew the end from the beginning, designed to bring a new creation out of the old, a pure and sinless, out of that which had been marred by sin. This new creation must have a head or ruler, and this head or ruler must be tested, in order to demonstrate to the world, that he was capable of enduring the test presented, and hence, worthy to receive the reward offered.

The head of the first creation—Adam, was the direct work of Jehovah. Yet God did not in his creation endow him with an immortal nature. No, he left that to be obtained by his own voluntary act, before he sinned; after he sinned it was no longer possible for him to attain to immortality, as he was immediately deprived of access to the tree of life, which was then the only source through which that priceless boon might be obtained. No sooner was the head of the first creation rejected because of unfitness to be a perpetual ruler, than the promise was given that one should yet appear, who should prove the victor, and through whom every vestage of sin's stain should be forever blotted out. This promise is recorded in Genesis iii. 15. And this victor is the only begotten Son of God. The All Wise looking down the sweep of centuries, saw at what time it was meet to manifest to the sons of man, his infinite purpose; and so we read in Gal iv. 4. When the fulness of time had come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman—made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law. Perhaps you will ask what I understand by being made of a woman. I reply, because Christ was not the seed of man, and the reason he was not the begotten son of man was, because Jehovah knew that human nature would prove too weak to develop a perfectly sinless character, and the tests of all past ages have demonstrated this same fact to us, for we read that "all have sinned." "There is none righteous, no not one." "No man liveth and sinneth not." And many more texts, testify the same solemn truth.

It was God's design to develop a new or second creation out of that which had come under the condemnation of death on account of sin. His first step in this wonderful work was to ordain a medium or channel through which a sinless immortality might be obtained by our race.

This medium in his infinite wisdom he designed should be one of the human family, in the form and fashion of a man. But inasmuch as the united forces of two sinful natures, could not produce a nature sufficiently strong to develop into a perfect character, Deity saw fit to use only the woman in bringing into the world his Son. In the case of the first Adam, Deity used the dust of earth, out of which to create him. In the case of the second Adam, Christ, he saw fit to beget in the womb of the virgin the vital principle which he ordained should develop into the head, or ruler of the second or new creation.

Although the Son of God by begettal, he was not of necessity immortal any more than Adam, who was the son of God by creation. Before Adam was placed the means attaining to an immortal rulership over earth in its Edenic state, if he by enduring the test prescribed had proved worthy of so great power. He failed, he sinned and so lost all hope, and hence the necessity of a new development.

The joys embodied in this immortal rulership was placed before the second Adam, the Christ, and we read of him, Who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despised the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of God, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, when he will return to earth, take unto him his great power and reign.

But herein centers the thought of your query. The test presented to Christ, was perfect obedience to his Father's will. According to prophecies uttered hundreds of years before his birth, he came into the world as a child. His birth was announced by the heavenly host. When but an infant of days he was acknowledged by Simeon in God's temple as the Messiah. When but twelve years of age, in that same temple he was found as a teacher and an enquirer among the wisest men of the nation. We are not told just when, at what period in his life it was revealed to him the joy that was set before him, but we have no reason to doubt that even then he well knew his Father's purpose concerning him. All through his earthly life nothing was laid to his charge save doing "good works" and claiming to be the Son of God. This last accusation he would not deny. Had he confessed to Pilate that he was the son of Joseph, and not the Son of the Blessed, he would not have been crucified. For this was the blasphemy whereof they accused him. He had prayed to his Father if it were possible to let this cup pass. Then he said, "Not my will but thine be done." It was the Father's will that his Son should develop a perfect character, and thereby be accounted worthy of a resurrection from the dead. This resurrection brought him into possession of an immortal nature, by which nature he became qualified to rule over an ever abiding earth. Not only this, but he became the source of that immortal life to all those who exercise faith in him.

Christ did not die in our stead, but because he would not deny that he was the Son of God, and our salvation rests on the same basis. If we deny this grand truth, we can have no hope of future life, for that life is made dependent on our accepting him, as the source of life immortal. He obtained a resurrection from the dead for his perfect obedience. He also received power to give eternal life to all who believe on him. Had he not obtained this power through or by his suffering and death, we could have no hope of eternal life, as it rests solely in him. Therefore you see of what benefit to us his life and death.

AUNT CARRIE.

A GRATEFUL MEMORIAL OF A LONG AND BEAUTIFUL CHRISTIAN LIFE.

With deep emotion I record the death of my dear wife—Mrs. J. B. Cook, who "fell asleep in Christ" April 28, 1885—in the 88th year of her long and very useful life.

As Miss Susan L. Huntington daughter of Hon. Hezekiah Huntington, she was converted and baptized in her 12th year. Hence, she bore the name and maintained her confession of Christ over 73 years. It was illumined with the light of God.

We were married in 1833, nearly 52 years ago, at her father's house, in Hartford, Conn. Now, in reviewing the usual "silver and golden wedding" periods, (on which we blow no trumpet) my gratitude to God, would group both "silver and golden," as the one standard of value and apply it to our wedding day, and nuptial bond, that bound us together in the blessed followship of the Christian faith and service more than half of an hundred years. Our delight in the Lord's loving will to man and earth, led us on to revel in the promises and prophesies, fulfilled and fulfilling in historic reality, till we saw the second coming of Christ the New Covenant and the crowning consummation, in the glorious apocalypse of the kingdom and age to come!

Bro. Kramer did no more than simple justice to her memory, in taking the Bible portraiture of womanhood. Prov. xxxi. 26, 28, "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in tongue was the law of kindness. She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children rise up to call her blessed, and her husband also, he praiseth her." This embraced her confession of faith in Christ, her Christian spirit—with her efficient and habitual helpfulness in domestic and social life.

This brief notice may be but a partial, yet richly deserved, tribute to a highly useful Christian life. Observe, yielding all to God in Christ is receiving all, with its hundred fold for this life; and for the world to come the assured Life Everlasting.

NORTH.—At Leslie, Mich., April 17, 1885, of consumption, F. G. North, in his seventy-third year.

Brother North was born in the state of Connecticut, where he resided until the year 1844, when he removed to Michigan, where he resided in different parts of the state until his death. He first professed Christianity under the teaching of a minister of the Disciple church, but as the truth was gradually exhumed from the debris of "man-made theology," our brother learned that there was something of God's plan of redemption besides a three-foot gospel, and when he learned and believed "the things pertaining to the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ," like those of Samaria, he was ready to obey. His was an exemplary life. As an honest man, as a neighbor and citizen, as a follower of the "meek and lowly Savior," he has left a record that is truly commendable. But his work is now ended. He died in full faith of the soon coming of his Lord and "the resurrection of the dead." He was brought to Romeo Center, Mich., for interment, where the writer spoke words of comfort from the language of Job. "If a man die shall he live again." We then laid our brother away to rest, trusting that the "Master will call him in the morning of life's harvest.

L. O. CHASE.

WHITAKER.—At Alexander, N. Y., April 2, 1885. Moses Whitaker, aged 83 years.

Another one of the old forty-three pioneers has fallen with the armor on, for he has kept the faith, expecting to receive a crown of life when Jesus comes. That blessed hope cheered him in his sickness, which was very distressing at times, and he longed for the time to come when he could rest till Jesus come, and give him an eternal life in the kingdom of God. I can praise God in the midst of deep afflictions and trials with such a blessed hope as we have of soon seeing Jesus, and living where death will be swallowed up of life, where no farewell tears will be shed nor hearts be sad, and all will be glad.

Conference Notices.

The third quarterly Conference of the church of God in Indiana will be held (D. V.) at Antioch, Marshall county, five miles south of Plymouth, and three miles north of Argos. Commencing at 10:30 o'clock, A. M., on Friday, June 12, 1885, and continue over the following Sunday. All are invited. Come and make the meeting a success.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Sec.

The Church of God at Millerton, Kan., will hold a general meeting, commencing Thursday evening, May 14, continuing over Sunday. Brother C. C. Ramsay has promised to be with us. This will be our first general gathering, and we expect to arrange for a conference, and we are desirous that the brethren and sisters living in this and adjoining counties may be with us, that our arrangements may be perfected. Now brethren and sisters all are invited. Come and let us have a joyful time together praising the Lord. We need a general waking up that we may be found at our duty when the Master calls. Millerton is on the St. Louis, Ft. Scott and Wichita R. R. 22 miles South-west of Wichita.

Brethren and sisters from abroad will find the writer and other brethren living near the station to care for them. H. W. BARNHILL, Sec.

The next annual meeting of the Michigan Church Conference will be held, the Lord willing, at the Brick School House 3¼ miles North of Mendon, St. Joseph County, commencing Thursday evening June 4, 1885, and continuing over Sunday.

All that are interested in the truth are cordially invited to attend and the brethren and sisters of Michigan are urged to make a special effort to be present at this meeting.

Let none remain away through fear of being a burden to those that entertain the conference, as arrangements will be made to provide for a large number, and all who come will receive a hearty welcome.

Mendon is on the Grand Rapids and Indiana Rail Road, twenty-one miles South of Kalamazoo. Trains will be met at the depot in Mendon on Thursday, to convey passengers to the place of meeting, all are requested to be on hand that day if possible, but any coming later will be met if they will inform the writer of the day and train on which they expect to arrive. An effort will be made to obtain a reduction in rail road fare, and those desiring the benefits of such reductions or any other information in regard to this meeting will please address the undersigned at Mendon.

By order of the Executive Board.
H. S. MILLER, Sec.

WEARY.

I am weary, O my Father,
With the conflict and the strife;
Weary with the struggling
For a higher, better life.

When I see the lives of others
So like that of thy dear Son—
Hear them say, 'mid darkest shadows,
"Not my will, but thine be done,"—

Then I think of the rebellion
In my heart on which I feed,
When I feel the path I'm treading
Leaves the sunshine all behind,—

When the way looks dark before me,
And the cross I cannot see,
How I long to drop the burden,
And from sorrow be set free!

But I know such thoughts are sinful,
For thou know'st best the way
That will lead from earth's dark shadows
To those bright realms of day.

And I have thy faithful promise,
On which only I rely;
That whatever it betide me,
"I will guide thee with mine eye."

Help me trust thee fully, Father!
Never let me lean down,
Till I, watcher, waiting, trusting,
Bring the cross and take the crown.

EXPATRIATION AND RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

Part II.—Jewish Colonies; or, "They are Nigh to Come."

In sketching the present localization of some of the scattered Jews—especially of what are commonly known as the "lost ten tribes," or Israelites proper,—I do not think it needful to discuss the theory of the Ephraimitish origin of the English nation. Suffice it to say, that no Ethnologist of any repute has sanctioned this novel theory, but they rather have shown that, as the British is eminently a mixed race, in which the Saxon element scarcely preponderates, such a descent is out of the question. This theory has evidently sprung out of those coincidences of manners and customs, to say nothing of kindred idioms which must of necessity occur if the apostle's assertion, in correspondence with the Mosaic narrative, be true, that (comp. Gen. x., and Acts xvii. 26) "God hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth."

Both prophecy and geographical facts indicate that the expatriated Jews—more especially the ten tribes—would be exiled to various countries contiguous to, or which had Assyria for a centre, and that they would there remain until the period when by Divine leadings they should again become one nationality. And then, in the Divine analogy of Ezekiel xxxvii. 7, there will be a "noise and a shaking, and the bones shall come together, bone to his bone."

In connection with this prediction of the wide dispersion of the Jews, it is remarkable how many colonies of scattered Israelites have been discovered by recent travellers, and that in far-off countries where even their existence was not formerly suspected. There are, in fact, few countries, either in Asia or Africa, where there are not Jewish colonies, and who have been planted there from time immemorial. And, though surrounded by idolaters, or by the more philosophical Buddhists, yet they have not abandoned their creed, however much it has been distorted through the lapse of centuries since the time of their expatriation; and they almost invariably expect a Deliverer or Messiah to restore them to their God-given patrimony.

From their non-possession of any of the sacred books save the Pentateuch, we are, I think, warranted in the inference that they are mainly remnants of those tribes who were transported beyond the river Euphrates by Shalmaneser. During the present century much has been done, not so much by missionaries as by travellers, to disinter the Jewish colonies in such widely separated districts of the earth, as to fulfil to the letter the numerous prophecies of their being deported to "the ends of the earth." To some of these I would more especially refer, because the very fact of their discovery proves the truth of the prophecy. Ezek. xxxvi. 8. "O ye mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are nigh to come." It also indicates the nearness of the time of their restoration.

1. Early in this century, Dr. Claudius Buchanan in his "Christian Researches," discovered in the Hindoo province of Malabar a colony of Jews. From long residence there they had become totally black. Rarely marrying outside their own race, they had that facial expression by which the Hebrews, whatever their creed or country, are detected, and which is found indelibly traced on the war triumphs of Assyria everywhere. They were proud of their Abrahamic descent, though for the most part despised by the dominant races. And even those who had lost the hope of their fathers still regarded Palestine as their Father-land. A still more recent author, Mr. J. H. Stocqueler, in his "Oriental Interpretor," says "that the Jewish colony in Malabar consists of many thousands who have dwelt there from time immemorial."

2. That most warlike race, the Afghans, who, as inhabitants of the north-western frontier, are now the sole barrier to that avowed Russian aim, the conquest of India, are also of undoubted Jewish extraction. Mr. Stocqueler intimates that "the Afghans asserts that they are descended from the Jews, and often style themselves Ben-i-Israel, or children of Israel—though they consider the term Yahoodee or Jew as one of reproach. It is certain that they have in many points a strong resemblance to the Jews, and there appears reason to believe that the tradition of their origin is not unfounded." They claim their descent from King Saul, and so are Benjamites, if their tradition is correct. Not only their literature, but many of their root words are Hebraic; and even the name of their capital, Cabul, recalls the phrase used by King Hiram 1 Kings ix. 13, to indicate his opinion of the worthless cities presented to him by Solomon. Their military skill and courage forcibly reminded us of the term so often applied in Holy Writ to the Jewish militia, "mighty men of valor." From the fact that whilst they boast of being sons of Israel, they scorn the name of Jew, we cannot but infer that they are descendants of one or more of the ten tribes, and as such have not forgotten that hereditary hatred which became a fertile source of discord—if not of war—between the Judahites and the children of Ephraim, after they escaped from the tyranny of Rehoboam.

3. There is also another large colony of Jews which has been many centuries settle in Abyssinia, known in the Bible records as Ethiopia. They answer to the name of Falashas. The celebrated Hindoo missionary, Dr. Wilson, in his "Lecture on Foreign Churches," published in 1845, whilst speaking of the Abyssinian Christians, says "that they practice circumcision, abstinence from unclean animals, the observance of the last day (or Sabbath), in addition to the Lord's Day, the wearing of a ribbon of blue as a symbol of their faith, abstinence from the sinew that shrank, and from blood, the practice of confession on the day of atonement—these customs have evidently a Jewish origin. I think it probable that the Jews in some numbers extend themselves from Egypt and Yemen to the country, before the Christian era." Many of their descendants, estimate by Dr. Wolff at 200,000, are still in Abyssinia, known by the name of Falashas." They are proud of their Abrahamic descent—practice much of the ritual of Hebraism, and regard the Pentateuch as sacred. Surrounded as they are by idolaters or Moslems, and living in the midst of pseudo-Christians who have little but the name—few of their number have been proselyted to those false creeds, and so they have for long centuries continued a united and distinct people, bound by the strong cords of their common religion. They also look forward eagerly to the time when God shall recall them to the Holy Land.

4. All Europeans who have penetrated into Central China have found many persons who boast of their Abrahamic extraction. They are, however, not so congregated together as a nationality as in the case of Afghanistan, but are scattered here and there throughout that vast empire. But this fact might have been anticipated from prophecy, which almost invariably speaks of the events of the last days as if they were actually present events. This led Isaiah—or rather the Holy Spirit, who used him as a mouthpiece—when referring to the return of his kinsmen to the land of their inheritance, to say, Isa. xlix. 11-12, "I will make all my mountains a road, and my highways shall be exalted. Behold, these shall come from far; and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim." The great Hebrew scholar, Gesenius, has given every proof that by "the land of Sinim" China is intended. D. Kadie, too, in his "Biblical Cyclopædia" on Sinim, says that "Lawson, Langles, and many other philologists, without reference to the interpretation of Scripture, understand Sinim thus, and so fortify the opinions of eminent Biblical critics. China and Sin are the same name: and through all Western Asia from time immemorial the name Sin, or Jin, or China has been applied to China."

Now the Jews in China or the land of Sinim migrated there, so distant is China from Palestine, as well as to apparently inaccessible, is a question of much interest. Probably the enigma may be solved by the light conveyed by the cuneiform inscriptions of Assyria. For many Assyrian scholars, who are also versed in the Chinese language, indicate that so many root-words of the Chinese correspond with the inscriptions of the Babylonish cylinders, that of their Assyrian origin there can be no doubt. If so, we may infer that the Chinese Jews are remnants of their ancestors, who were carried away from Palestine as captives by Shalmaneser and Nebuchadnezzar.

5. In Cochin China there is a small colony of Hebrews, who more than most Asiatic Jews, are faithful to their creed amid the prevailing Buddhism. An American Jewish magazine gave the following account of this interesting remnant in 1850 from the pen of one of their co-religionists who had visited them. He says that "There passed through the streets of Cochin more fairer of countenance than are the inhabitants of India, and with strongly marked Jewish features. These men were known as the Jerusalem or White Jews.

They occupy a quarter of the city by themselves. The part of the city which they occupy is called Jews' town, and the houses are all built alike. They number between thirty and forty families. Their synagogue, situated at the upper end of the street they occupy, is very plain. The floor is paved with china, neatly inlaid; and at one end of the room is a handsome recess, a rich curtain before it; and within, protected by folding doors, are deposited, in silver cases, five copies of the Pentateuch, written in Hebrew characters on vellum.

"Near the synagogue was a school for these Jewish families. We found about sixty children present, boys and girls. All the children were fair, with dark hair and eyes. They were comfortably clad, and with a decent reproach of cleanliness than is usually found among Hindu or Mohammedan children. All were reading the Bible in Hebrew. One little boy whom we designated came forward without hesitation, and read to us a portion from the Pentateuch; and a pretty little girl, nine years of age, read in a clear, sweet voice, the twenty-fifth Psalm. The priest in charge [illegible] the five books of Moses they were carefully instructed, but were taught little else. In family intercourse they use the language of the people among whom they dwell."

There are, in Cochin, black as well as white Jews. These black Jews occupy the lower part of Jews' town. Little is known of the early history of these Jews, but they have in their possession, engraved on copper, a grant or license from the sovereign of Malabar, bearing a date corresponding to A.D. 308.

6. Dispersed throughout the length and breadth of British India, and probably in independent Hindostan, there are large numbers who call themselves Beni-Israel, or sons of Israel. They are fairer than the Aborigines, and have the Jewish cast of countenance. They are proud of their descent, and in their dialects many Hebrew words have survived their long exile from their Fatherland. They know little or nothing of their history. But amid the scorn of Moslems and idolaters they cling tenaciously to their Abrahamic descent, and expect their recall when Messiah comes to reign as King of the Jews, and to subdue the Gentiles.

But the most remarkable discovery of scattered Israel, is that of the remnant found in the far east kingdom of Madagascar. The Rev. Henry W. Little, an eminent Malagasy missionary, in his just published work, entitled "Madagascar: its History and People," says that "There is another tribe in the South, who are called in Malagasy 'Tanala Ibraim' (sons of Abraham) many of their words are Hebrew Malagasy; and they also use some of the Hebrew letters in their writings, and retain many Jewish traditions amongst them to this day. The fact, however, that they have retained their name unchanged is perhaps the most remarkable; and that evidently points to an origin neither Polynesian nor African, but most probably Arabian or Abyssinian. The sprinkling of blood upon the doorposts and lintel of the houses, and, in some cases, suspending a spot or bunch of grass dipped in blood over the entrance—an observance now almost discontinued—has also a striking resemblance to the Great Act of the Jewish Passover."

All these facts prove the possibility of the fulfilment of the predictions respecting the restoration of the Jews in the latter days, for they exist as a distinct race in all parts of the world—even at the very "ends of the earth." From the largeness of their numbers, they also show the truth of the prevision of Ezekiel xxxvii. 10, 11: "I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel (or the Twelve Tribes)—even all of it,—and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded: and I will multiply upon you man and beast, and they shall increase and bear fruit; and I will settle you after your old estate, and will do better than unto you at the beginning."

It is in connection with this and analogous prophecies that the recent discovery of so many of the lost Ten Tribes becomes so striking. Such discovery we cannot err in inferring is the initial step in their national resuscitation and subsequent conversion (see Zech. xii. 10, 14) after an exile of about two thousand years. Well then might the pen of prophecy speak of this far-off episode in the marvellous history of the Jews as a present event, and say Ezek. xxxvi. 8. "Behold ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches and yield your fruit to my people of Israel, for they are nigh to come." Hence it only needs the Spirit of Life to breathe upon them, for the bones which are coming so fast to their fellow-bones, to be once more alive and united, and then for the Israelites to "stand up an exceeding great army." And here it may be observed that it is not supposed that at the very height of their national prosperity the united nation numbered more than 5,000,000. But, what with the known Jews and those in the outlying regions of the earth—especially those in Afghanistan—the only Israelites who exist as a distinct nationality—the present number of the chosen race cannot fall short of ten millions. It was doubtless in connection with this fact that Ezekiel was led to intimate that (Is. xxvi. 6,) "Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit."

This prediction would imply that so great will be the increase of the Jews during the millennial age, that they will overflow at least into adjacent countries if not through the wide world. In a subsequent prediction this deduction is more than warranted: for Isaiah says, liv. 2: "Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thy habitations; spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes." And why? Because "they shall break forth on the right hand and on the left; and their seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited." This prophecy is so interpreted by that illustrious Hebrew, Sir Moses Montefiore, for though he is a firm believer in the hope of his fathers, he says that in the times of the Messiah many Jews will be found honored residents in all countries of the world.

That the Israelites will far exceed in number those which occupied the Holy Land in their best days, there can be no doubt. Their future enlarged territorial possessions, even if restricted to the territories promised to Abraham, would, in fact, necessarily lead to this conclusion. For in the original covenant with Abraham, God said, Gen. xiii. 14, "Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward—for all the land which thou seest to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever." Nor was this land-gift indefinite, for God was pleased further to define the limits of this territory, for he afterwards said to Abraham, Gen. xv. 18, "Unto thy seed I have given this land—from the river of Egypt (or the Nile) unto the great river, the river Euphrates." Upwards of four hundred years after this the promise was not only renewed to Moses, but the limits of the land were still further specifically defined, Deut. ii. 24, "Every place whereon thy feet shall tread shall be yours—from the wilderness and Lebanon; from the river, the river Euphrates, unto the uttermost (or Mediterranean) sea shall your coast be." Now the Jews in their most palmy days never really possessed more than one-third of this God-given territory, as any map of the Holy Land will show. It is true that a part of the eastern boundary of the river Euphrates was made tributary to King Solomon for a short period; yet all these nations, as well as the Philistines who occupied the western boundary, were semi-independent, and not rarely secured their perfect freedom from the Jewish yoke. When, however the Jews obtain their whole inheritance from Lebanon to Egypt, and from the Euphrates to the Mediterranean, it will be so enlarged as to make the former dimensions of the Holy Land poor in comparison with this enlarged territory. And, moreover, with the curse pronounced on the earth when Adam fell removed for ever—there will be space for a vastly increased number of the godly occupants. No wonder, then, that Isaiah, when he foretold this extension of the territory and the vast increase of the population, should break forth into this exulting anthem, Isa. liv. 1-3, "Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear,—for more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife; saith Jehovah." Nay, we learn that so overcrowded shall be the Holy Land that, Is. xlix. 19-20, "it shall even be too narrow by reason of the inhabitants, and they that say again—the place is too straight for us: give place to us that we may dwell."

This narrowness even of the enlarged territory of Palestine will be rendered still more narrow by the admission of many Gentiles to the possession of portions of the land, and to all the rights of citizenship. During the Old Dispensation, Eph. xi. 12, they were not only spiritual but temporal, "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel," and could not have any part in the landed property of Israel. But under the new and broader millennial order God will direct the Jews Ezek. xlvii. 22-25, to "divide the land by lot for an inheritance unto you, and to the foreigners that sojourn among you; who shall beget children among you, and they shall be unto you as born in the country among the children of Israel! They shall have an inheritance with you among the children of Israel! and it shall come to pass that in what tribe the foreigner sojourneth, there shall ye give him his inheritance."

The present aspect of the Holy Land—its sterility and awful desolation—is such as to make skeptics deny the truth of that description of its fertility which was given by Moses about 3,500 years ago. In almost his farewell address to his kinsmen he said, Deut. viii. 7-9, "Jehovah, thy God, bringeth thee into a good land—a land of wheat, and barley, and vines, and fig trees, and pomegranates; a land of olive oil, and honey—a land where thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack anything in it; a land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig copper." But alas, the very reverse of this picture would be the true photograph of Palestine now, as it has been for long centuries.

Before, however, the apostacy of the ten tribes, and afterwards of the two tribes, the Mosaic description was true to the very letter. In the brighter part of the history of the chosen people, it would seem that the British agricultural system of rotation of crops was both unheeded and unknown. For by the sabbatical year, Lev. xxv. 2-11, as well as by the year of jubilee, the whole land was, by Divine command, uncultivated, and so it had such rest that any exhaustion of the soil was precluded. But in their general disobedience to the Divine injunctions this law was evaded, and hence God said as a penalty that "the land shall enjoy its Sabbaths." Hence the very sterility which has been used by Volney and sceptics as a proof that the Mosaic description of the fertility of Palestine prior to the national apostacy was false, is evidence that the prediction of its eventual desolation is an accomplished fact, and thus scepticism and rationalism are slain with their own weapons.

But when the period of punishment has passed away, and the Jews are again not only restored to their God-given inheritance, but have become the elect nation, the land itself will have the curse of barrenness removed. The prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Hosea, and Amos brim over with such predictions of the fertility of the Holy Land during the millennial age. But all are summed up in one jubilant Psalm, lxvii. 6, "Then shall the earth yield her increase, and God, even our own God, shall bless us." The possibility of Palestine again becoming what it was in the times of David and Solomon is even now substantiated by the discoveries of Captain Condor, R. E., the head of the "Palestine Exploration Fund." In a paper on "Ancient Palestine" in the number of the Contemporary Review for last December, he thus summarises its state after a prolonged and minute scientific survey: "What we learn from a study of the land and of history is the desolation wrought by human means. We find everywhere the spots covering the wine press, the thistles growing among the old enclosures, the terraces in ruins, the old vineyards deserted, the olive yards exterminated, and many of the ancient woods cut down." This fact of the destruction of the trees which formerly gave beauty and tended to the remarkable healthiness of the Holy Land, is referred to in Psalm lxxiv. 5-6, where we read that "A man was famous according as he lifted up axes upon the thick trees." If Lebanon has escaped as yet such destruction of its cedars, yet we learn from Isaiah that it is only deferred until the reign of Antichrist. For we read on the defeat of the future King of Babylon, Isa. xiv. 8, "The fir trees rejoice at thee, and the cedars of Lebanon, saying—Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us." Captain Condor thus proceeds: "In brief we see that poverty, and decrease of population, the decay of roads and aqueducts, the ruins of old cisterns the destruction of woods, terraces, and vineyards are the causes of the present desolation. We know also that the land is still as fertile as of old, still well watered in certain districts, still with a sufficient rainfall; and that when a just and stable government exists—as in the Lebanon—the country still flows with oil and wine. This has often been pointed out, and experience proves that given a just and strong government Palestine might become, like Southern Italy, a garden of the world!"

This monograph would not be complete if a reference to the future and final re-division of the land among the twelve tribes during the millennial age were omitted, except the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, which will continue neighbors. We gather from Ezek xlviii. 22, that the tribes will be differently located from what they were during the times of Joshua; for there will be a new distribution of the territory among the Israelites. Major Scott Phillips, in his "Resettlement of all Israel," taking this prediction as a key to the future division of Palestine—shows not only the novel localizations, but shows that the land will be equally divided between the twelve tribes. Seven will be placed north and five to the south of there built temple. And not only will the same average acreage fall to the lot of each tribe, but, instead of three of the tribes being located east and nine west of the Jordan, as formerly—each allotment will run parallel to each other, from the Western sea to the Euphrates.

All these facts—more especially the remarkable recent discovery of so many remnants of the ten lost tribes in all parts of the known world—point to definite on the present literal fulfilment of another prediction, Ps. cii. 13-14 "Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion for the time to favor her, yea, the appointed time is come; for thy servants take pleasure in her stones and favor the dust thereof"—indicate that the hour of Israel's restoration is not far off. If so, ought we not thereby to be stimulated to obey the injunction of the Most High—which is surely as binding on believers as any other of his commandments—Isa. lxii. 6-7, "Ye that are Jehovah's remembrancers give him not silence (literal) till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth!" Amen.—E. J. Hyche, in Prophetic Voice.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXIV. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 20, 1885. NO. 19.

THE RESTITUTION,

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR. Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the doing "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead of all moralities—of the righteous, and the annihilation of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as preparatory to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

ISRAEL'S DOUBLE RECOMPENSE FOR SIN.

"And first I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double, because they have defiled my land, they have filled mine inheritance with the carcasses of their detestable and abominable things." Jer. xvi. 18.

"O Lord thou knowest, remember me, and visit me.... Thy words were found and I did eat them and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart, for I am called by thy name, O Lord God of Hosts. Therefore thus saith the Lord—If thou return then will I bring thee again, and thou shalt stand before me, and if thou take out the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth—let them return unto thee; but return not thou unto them, and I will make thee unto this people a fenced brazen wall, and they shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee, for I am with thee, to save thee, and to deliver thee saith the Lord. And I will deliver thee out of the hand of the wicked, and I will redeem thee out of the land of the terrible." Jer. xv. 15-21.

"Therefore, behold the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth that brought up the children out of the land of Egypt, but the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them, and I will bring them again unto their land, that I gave unto their fathers. Behold I will send for many fishers, saith the Lord, and they shall fish them (said Jesus to his disciples "follow me and I will make you fishers of men.") And after I will send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain and from every hill and out of the holes of the rocks, (what hunting has there been throughout God's Holy word during the past forty years for his will and laws to man) for mine eyes are upon all their ways, they are not hid from my face, neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes. And first I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double because they have defiled my land, they have filled mine inheritance with the carcasses of their detestable and abominable things. O, Lord, my strength and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction. The Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say unto thee, surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit. Shall a man make gods unto himself and they are no gods. (In believing their dead are as the angels of heaven). Therefore, behold I will this once cause them to know my hand and my might, and they shall know my name is the Lord," Jer. xvi.

"Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, they shall thoroughly glean the remnant of Israel as a vine, turn back thy hand as a grape gatherer unto the baskets. To whom shall I speak and give warning that they may hear. Behold their ear is uncircumcised and they cannot hear. Behold the word of the Lord is unto them a reproach, they have no delight in it, for from the least of them, even unto the greatest of them, every one is given to covetousness, and from the prophet even unto the priest, every one dealeth falsely, they have healed also the hurt of my people slightly saying—peace, peace, when there is no peace. Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination. Nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush; therefore shall they fall at the time that I visit them, they shall be cast down saith the Lord. Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways and see and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, (I am the way, the truth, and the life. I am the resurrection and the life, says Jesus of Nazareth,) and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein. And I set watchmen over you, saying, Hearken to the voice of the trumpet; but they said, We will not hearken. Therefore, hear ye nations, and know, O congregation, what is among them. Hear, O earth, behold I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts, because, they have not hearkened unto my words nor to my law, but rejected it." Jer. vi.

"O my Lord what shall be the end of these things." And he said, Go thy way, Daniel, for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end, many shall be purified and made white and tried, but the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand.... And from the time that the daily (sacrifices) shall be taken away and the abomination that maketh desolate set up there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way till the end, for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." Dan. xii. Jesus in his interview with the disciples, when they asked him of the sign of his presence and of the end of the world, refers in his answer to Daniel, thus. "When therefore ye see the abomination of desolation which was spoken by Daniel the prophet standing in a (see margin) holy place let him that readeth understand."

In these "words" of the angel to Daniel we find that at a set time, the "abomination that maketh desolate" was to be "set up." The time to be reckoned from "the daily" being "taken away." The first time the Israelite kingdom was carried away captive, was by Shalmanezer king of Assyria, about 737 or 740 before Christ, in the sixth year of Hezekiah king of Judah. See 2 Kings xviii. 1200 years, or the first measure for sin and iniquity on Israel, from 737 before Christ, reaches to A. D., 553. A time memorable in history, as Gibbon informs us, that although the Catholic Church became victorious over Rome in 538, the Gothic power in Italy was not fully subdued (for Rome was retaken a number of times) until the closing struggle between the Goths and Catholics for that seat of empire, ended only at the death of Teias the last king of the Goths, in the final battle A. D., 553, which "ended the Gothic kingdom in Italy." The beginning of the times and laws of Papacy commenced between 538 A. D., the end of the struggle for supremacy was in 553 A. D. when papacy "the abomination that maketh desolate was set up." Thus we find that "from the time that the daily shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate be set up, there shall be one thousand two hundred and ninety days." "And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having in her hand a golden cup full of abominations, even the unclean things of her fornication, and upon her forehead a name written, Mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of the harlots and of the abominations of the earth."

"This revelation sums up the history of the double or second measure of 1290 years which lies within the "1335 days" of Daniel. This "double" recompense for sin and iniquity "in the day of affliction" reaches from 737 B. C., through the sweep of centuries down to our own times of 1848. Glorious time when the "truth as it is in Jesus" is no longer hindered from coming victoriously to the front—no longer hidden by papacy and her daughters and her abominations. "And now ye know that which restraineth to the end that he may be revealed in his own season. For the mystery of lawlessness doth already work, only there is one that restraineth now until he be taken out of the way." The man of sin, the son of perdition. The personal Antichrist, the Pope of Rome. "They went out from us but they were not of us, for if they had been of us they would have continued with us, but they went out that they might be made manifest that not all are of us." 1 John.

Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 days. Go thou thy way for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days. During Papal supremacy, the things concerning Jesus were hidden, covered, but after the second or double measure of 1290 was taken away from the 1335 days in 1848, it left a waiting time of 45 years to the end of the days, which reaches to 1888 inclusive, when Daniel and the resurrected saints will stand in their lot. "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we that are alive that remain unto the presence of the Lord shall in no wise precede them that are fallen asleep." (Observe that the wicked one—the man of sin and son of perdition was fulfilled in the natural sense,) "for that which is natural is first, afterwards that which is spiritual." In the persons of Antiochus Epiphanes (see his history in Maccabees) and Judas Iscariot, in the first measure of 1290 years). A waiting and coming time, is embraced in the last 45 of 1335 days. "For there is nothing covered but that shall be revealed, nor hid but that shall be made known." For when the double time of the abomination of desolation was fulfilled, recompense for their sin and iniquity was ended. "The Highest also hath looked on the proud times, and behold they are ended and his abominations are fulfilled." "The anger of the Lord shall not return until he have executed, and till he have performed the thoughts of his heart, in the latter days ye shall consider it perfectly."

Those who can see the fulfilment of the word of the Lord in this historic period of the church from the carrying away captive of Israel to 1843 can afford to wait in faith for the ending of the remainder of the 1335 days. "For the Lord hath redeemed Jacob and glorified himself in Israel."

Another of the "seven times" of Moses lies in these collective periods of Daniel the Prophet 1290 plus 1335 equals 2625 years, which is divisible by seven times. Observe that separately they are not.

MRS. E. K. HOLT.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD. NO. 5.

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptising them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. Teaching them to observe all things whosoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the age. These were among the last things said by the glorious Son of God before he ascended to the right hand of his Father in heaven. The language is full of power, and big with meaning. "All power is given." In this expression he acknowledges God to be the one supreme, unoriginated, all-wise, almighty, Governor of the universe. The sublimity and grandeur of the subject is too lofty, too grand and glorious, for poor fallen humanity to set forth in words appropriate to satisfy those destined to become inheritors of God's Everlasting Kingdom. Beloved, you must take the will for the deed; my poor heart is brimfull and running over with the wine of the kingdom. I want to dwell for a little while upon God the Eternal Father. Grand sublime and magnificent gift to his dear and well beloved Son, the Lord Jesus Christ the anointed one, the Savior and Redeemer of poor fallen lost humanity all power is given, in heaven and in earth, do we doubt the authority invested in the Son of God, look at his spotless life even before he was made immortal by or through a resurrection out from among the dead ones. A careful study of his spotless holy life for the three years he sojourned in mortal flesh will be both profitable and instructive; but after his death, burial and resurrection he becomes the glorified Son of God, invested with full power to carry out and complete the scheme of redemption and salvation. Hear the word of inspiration, eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive of those things God has prepared for them that love him. Take for example his manner of life while he sojourned among us, it was pure devotedness to his Father's will; best of all he backs up by his manner of life just what he teaches; take the subject of prayer, which he gave in the form of our Lord's prayer, his practice is perfectly consistent and is in strict harmony with his teaching; when the redemption of the world weighed him down with tremendous force, as his habit was, he would resort to some lonely silent grove and spend whole nights in praying to God his Father. Cold midnight and the mountain air witnessed the fervor of his prayer. He fully demonstrated the power and authority that God his Heavenly Father had given him, not only in his manner of life as our great exemplar, but in the works he did in performing miracles of a noted and extraordinary character.

Well might the scribes and the people exclaim we never saw it on this wise. Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptising them in the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. These words were originally addressed to his Disciples, and through them to his church during the times of the Gentiles. They are words of authority, (not arbitrarily so) but in the way of a command as a general would give the command to his army. "Teach or make Disciples of all nations." The Disciple must be first taught, or instructed, in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ; and then upon an intelligent faith, be baptised or immersed in water, in the name of the Holy Ones for the remission of sin. How egregiously do men blunder, men of learning, men of deep research; they will with the Scriptures open before them, with the great Teacher's positive words and examples so oft repeated; take an infant, sprinkle a few drops of water on it, and call it baptism, truly the apostasy has done its dreadful work! Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world.

Here the Disciple is taught a lesson of strict observance of unfailing faithfulness to his Lord and Master, not in one or two things, but in every thing whatsoever he has said or commanded. This is a cheerful task when our hearts and our hands are in the work, from what we know of his blessed ruling, it will be a most blessed state when he reigns in glory as King supreme over a regenerated and a redeemed world. When there will be none to molest or make afraid in all God's holy mountain. Blessed be God's holy name and let all the people say Amen.

The war cloud is looming high. There shall be wars and rumors of wars, see that ye be not troubled, the Master has given us timely warning, plain and clear, of all that has transpired and is to transpire, even up to the very close of the gospel age. As a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. The day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night, but brethren, ye are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief in the night. Ye are all the children of light and of the day. Amen. And the kingdom and the dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him. What a magnificent gift, alone worthy of the God of heaven. Under what everlasting obligations are we poor worms of the earth for such unbounded love to the God of heaven, and what matchless infinite grace to our Lord Jesus Christ for the great plan of salvation and redemption. How egregiously has orthodoxy blundered in affirming that the kingdom is a myth set up in men's hearts. It far out blunders poor Pat after he had read the narrative of Jonah and the whale, he exclaimed, What a big man Jonah must have been to have swallowed the whale, (forgive the irony) yet the blunder is no greater, coming as it does from the great and renowned men and literati of this gospel age. But great men are not always wise. Writing or speaking of or upon the kingdom of God we are lost in wonder and astonishment. It is a part of God's great and sublime plan of the universe, after it was made. Infinite wisdom preconceived it very grand. After men had sinned and ruined himself and his race and brought death and the curse into the world, and there was no possible way for escape, see the unbounded love of our Divine Father in the gift of his dear and well beloved Son; and also the love and unbounded goodness in the gift of himself to redeem and restore the race of man and the planet back to its original glory! I told you when I began that my pen and ability as a finite mortal was inadequate to such a task. It will take men immortalized with a body made like unto the most glorious body of the Son of God, and that to all eternity to tell the story of redeeming love.

NEWEL BOND.

All hail earth's coming kingdom Lord,
Beaming with glory from afar,
Blest harbinger of endless day,
He is the bright and morning star.

His mark and mission to the world,
Clothed with majestic royal power
To raise the dead, remove the curse,
All things restore, "its victory's hour.

Gird up your loins, don the white robes,
Go forth, take each his gambeau bright,
To meet the Bridegroom, king and Lord,
Behold he comes in robes of light.

Rise the righteous quick and dead,
Away to meet him in the air,
All robed in garments white and clean,
The marriage festival to share.

Oh, glad and joyful happy day,
That ushers in Messiah's reign,
To fill the world with joy and peace,
With glory, glory, in his train.

All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Monarchs and kings before him fall,
Bring forth the many star-gem crowns,
And crown him King and Lord of all.

Editor Restitution:

I am glad to tell you that Baltimore just at this time is having a revival such as no city in America ever had before. How I do wish that every reader of THE RESTITUTION could be present to enjoy the sweet refreshing shower. If they never shouted hallelujah before, I think they would have to do it now.

It is so unlike all other revivals I ever witnessed, everything is still as a grave-yard. No crying, no laughing, nor "front bench" births, I should say miscarriages. Henry Varley of London, an eminent Evangelist, is conducting the meeting. "Bring your Bibles with you, dear friends," is all he asks us to do. Mr. Moody use to say, "Bring Gospel Hymns."

The meetings are held in the hall of the Y. M. C. A. Building which has seats for about 1200, nearly every seat is taken at each meeting.

I suppose all the churches are represented. I said it was a revival and it is: a revival of the great central truth, or golden text, of both the Old and New Testaments, namely:—the personal reign of our Lord Jesus on the earth. This is the subject he is examining now, and I assure you he is handling it as a master workman.

My very heart burns while he opens—makes plain, God's wonderful words of life. What an advantage it is to be familiar with the word. He appears to know when to give canister, or grape, solid shot, and bombshell.

"Come and reign over us blessed Lord Jesus, earth's groaning millions are longing for deliverance. Our present rulers only waste and destroy us. Prince of Peace, oh, come and give us rest. We wait for thee. We long for thee. Our rulers in church and state have gone astray. Christian nations, (so called) are now preparing to murder each other. Oh, come and give our earth rest, and reign thyself King of kings and Lord of lords." These are some of the petitions he employs in his prayers.

He has certainly exercised a great deal of wisdom in obtaining an audience. Truth sowers would do well to imitate him. When he first came to the city some three weeks ago, he gave Bible readings in the Y. M. C. A. Building on popular themes, preached in several churches, avoiding carefully in his speech everything that would offend the "holy willies." After securing the friendship of the church people, and the free use of the Y. M. C. A. Hall, he had no trouble in drawing the people to hear him on the Second Coming. I have never met his peer on the subject he is now examining, viz., Life only in Christ, the personal return of our Lord and kindred topics. He says that missionary and church societies are very much given to misrepresent, exaggerate their success. "I defy any of you" said he to-day, "to point me to one single place where Jesus has been universally accepted."

The church, he claims, has been a failure in the work of casting the evil spirit out of the children of men. Our Lord will have to do upon his return, for the world what he did for the lunatic boy after coming down from the Mount of Transfiguration,—command that earth's suffering ones be brought to him. See Matt. xvii. 14-20 inclusive. This case Mr. Varley claims, typifies the impotency of the church when the Son of Man shall come in his kingdom.

"Then came the disciples to Jesus apart, saying why could not we cast him out? And Jesus said unto them, because of your unbelief." Don't this shed some light on the question? "When the Son of Man cometh will he find faith on the earth?"

ISAAC MCCURRY.

P. S.—Since writing the above, Mr. Varley of London, England, has closed his mission at the Y. M. C. A. Hall.

I made it my business to hear him through. While he is in harmony with the word on the second coming, he proved himself no exception to Paul's assertion, viz.—"Now we know but in part, etc." I think his attempts to solve, explain every thing, which is to attend our Lord's coming is just where he errs. For instance, a person in the audience inquired where the soul went to between death and resurrection. Mr. Varley answerd promptly, "To Paradise." Quoting the words, "this day shalt thou be with me in Paradise."

I met him to-day in the office of the Y. M. C. A. and questioned him in the presence of several gentlemen relative to the landing known as Abraham's bosom, the thief's Paradise, etc. I asked him if he believed in praying to "Holy Mother," "certainly not," said he. Well said I, is it right to pray to Abraham? "Thank you," said he, "he should have prayed to God." He confessed openly that I had given him a new thought. Although he is considerably mixed, he works in notwithstanding a great deal of solid truth. Orthodoxy gave him a one hundred dollar collection, at the close of the meeting. Had he given them the wheat by itself, they might not have done so well. I find people generally like a little chaff with the wheat. They want a little sugar coating. Their spiritual stomach is so very weak it is a hard matter to get truth pills to stay down.

Editor Restitution:

Perhaps the readers of your most valuable paper would like to hear from the church at this place (Salem, Ohio,) and as I have been thinking for some time of writing to THE RESTITUTION I will now try to do so. I will say then in the first place, that we still exist, a little band of believers, looking for that blessed hope which is an anchor to our souls, namely the coming of the Lord Jesus, and the establisment of his kingdom. What else, brethren have we to look forward to. We see the kingdoms of this world are beginning to tremble, and soon they will fall to rise no more. Oh, that we were more zealous in the cause of Christ, and less interested in the affairs of this world. For the cause of Christ should be our cause, and our hope should be centered therein. It makes but little difference if we are poor in this world's goods, if we are only rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom. Then all things are ours, and we are Christ's, and Christ is God's. May we then as the children of God use this world as not abusing it. May we be a separate people, not desirous to pattern after the world, for if we love the world, the love of God is not in us. Costly raiment, high living, and pride in all its forms, should be avoided, and having food and raiment we should therewith be content. Our treasures are in heaven from whence we look for the Savior, who shall change our vile bodies, and fashion them like unto his own. Then shall we be satisfied, when we awake in his likeness. We meet every first day of the week to break bread and read the word of life (except when the weather and roads are bad, for we are few in number and very much scattered) death is fast thining our ranks. Since we commenced our meetings here (about fifteen years ago) six of our number have fallen victims to the enemy. Two of them within the last year, Sister Emma J. Barber who died April 8th, 1884, and sister Emma V. Barber died March 20th, 1885. This dear sister is the faith, and also according to the flesh, was taken very suddenly from among us, being sick only six days. She died of pneumonia. Her age being fifty-six years. No doubt but many of the readers of THE RESTITUTION will remember our sister, as she was personally acquainted with many of the brethren, having visited the church at Philadelphia, and formed an acquaintance with brethren elsewhere. Sister Emma left one son and one daughter, having buried her eldest daughter twelve years ago, (a member of the church of Christ also) she also leaves three brothers and five sisters, and a number of very dear friends who will deeply feel her loss. Our sister was among the first in this place to understand the Gospel of the kingdom. And the first to make known her views. She was always of a religious turn of mind, and in her earlier years joined the Methodists. But being one of those persons who investigate for themselves, she could not remain with them, she saw that baptism was not a form, but was a command, and essential to our salvation. She next joined the Disciples as they were clear on the subject of baptism, and much farther advanced in the knowledge of the Scriptures than the Methodists. But it was not long until she saw that instead of the church being the kingdom (as the Disciple church believes) that the kingdom was something promised as a reward to the faithful church. Many long and earnest conversations were held upon this subject by sister Emma and myself, (the writer being a member of the Disciple church at that time also) the conclusion we came to was this: That to have a valid baptism, we should at least understand the first principles of the doctrines of Christ, which is the knowledge of his future kingdom and reign on the throne of David. Therefore we were baptised believing that it was well pleasing in the sight of God. She remained faithful until the end of her life. Through all of her trials she never denied her Lord. Her understanding of the Scriptures was plain and her conversational powers good. God only knows how we shall miss her both in the church and elsewhere, for she was a woman full of good deeds, and sympathised with all conditions of humanity. Being of a very forgiving and cheerful nature her views of the salvation of the race were broad. Bro. Elton of Cleveland, preached her funeral discourse, his subject being death, a very appropriate subject for the occasion, and he did his subject justice showing the state of man in death and proving by the Scriptures that our sister would sleep until he should come who has power to awake her. We return our heartfelt thanks to Bro. Elton for his kindness in coming to us in our sorrow, as it would have been very hard for us to place our sister away without some words of comfort spoken from the word of God. May we all meet in the kingdom of God. Your sister in Christ.

"To us There is One God."

That there is an Infinite Being the evidence in the world without and the evidence from the thinking personality within us is, in our day, too overwhelming to admit of anything like reasonable doubt. Two propositions, the one from James Martineau and the other from Descartes, seem sufficient to establish in a thinking mind the existence of such a being. "You will get out of your atoms by evolution," says Martineau, "exactly so much, and no more, as you put into them by hypothesis." Back of all that has been evolved in the physical universe there is, therefore, something greater than all that has been evolved, and something that had put into the universe all that has been evolved. "I am sure that I am a thinker," says Descartes, "but outside of me there must be a thinker who has made me a thinker: for a thinker cannot come from what does not think." Therefore that which is back of all evolution, giving it whatever of substance and efficiency it has, and that which is the Supreme Thinker and the author of all other thinkers, certainly fulfill together the conditions of a Supreme Being, and, therefore, prove the existence of a Supreme Being.—*Prof. L. S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, May 20, 1885.

We clip the following from the Chicago Evening Journal of May 16, 1885. It will be obvious to our readers that England would hazard almost every interest in her East Indian possessions by engaging in war with Russia in Central Asia. Mr. Gladstone has evinced rare political sagacity in his endeavors to maintain peace. It is doubtful, however, whether any arrangement that may be made will amount to more than a temporary suspension of hostilities. Diplomacy will never settle the Oriental question. Neither will the arbitrament of the sword give the final solution. Divine intervention alone will end the strife of nations over this apple of discord.

"The Russians have at the present moment 120,000 men between the Caspian Sea and Herat. According to the best military estimate, Russia's position is practically unassailable, and it would be madness for an Anglo-Indian army of less than 250,000 men to attempt operating in Central Asia against Russia. The following plan of operations in Central Asia has been drawn up by General Gourko, and could have been put into execution in the event of war.

1. The principles of the campaign would be those of the Moscow campaign of 1812 against Napoleon.

2. The Russian commander would strictly avoid any general engagement until the Anglo-Indian army was drawn in the interior at least 600 miles beyond Cadahar.

3. Three Russian corps d'armees, each 30,000 strong would await the Anglo-Indian advance in strongly defensive positions echeloned along the Koushik and the Murghab rivers.

4. Twenty-five thousand Cossacks, at the first sign of a British advance, would swarm through Afghinistan, arouse the whole country, proclaim Ayoub Khan as Ameer and harass British communications, burning supplies, raiding around the British army, stampeding the camp-followers, etc., but avoiding any serious engagement.

5. A corps of observation of 25,000 men and 15,000 Cossacks to be stationed at Chikishlar, on the Caspian, ready to march straight to Teheran the instant the Shah of Persia should show the slightest sign of aiding the English.

6. When the Anglo-Indian army had been drawn far into the interior, worn out by the difficult country, and worried night and day by the Cossacks, it would be attacked simultaneously by 60,000 men forming the three Russian corps d'armees.

7. In case of a British defeat the Russian advance would be followed by the immediate construction of railways made very slowly but very surely."

RESURRECTION GLORY.

He shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe. 1 Thess. i. 10.

Eh vast sore sternuere, literally—In all the believing, i. e., In all the believers. This is a remarkable statement. For its illustration and explanation we direct attention to other expressions of this same apostle. But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory even as by the Spirit of the Lord. 2 Cor. iii. 18. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. 1 Cor. xv. 49. Christ's image will be manifested in all the children of the resurrection,—that resurrection out from dead ones—for they are the children of God. Luke xx. 35, 36. We will be like him. 1 Jno. iii. 2. In mental and moral perfection there shall be such a transformation by the renewal of our mind that we shall be "all glorious within." No perversity in the will, no blind stupidity in the intellect, and no taint of evil in the heart. A divinity of light and a divinity of holiness permeating the whole being. The body, too, will be transfigured into a perfect similitude of the glorified body of Jesus. So then it appears that it is the Christ-likeness that will be the special object of admiration. Each saint will see in each other saint a counterpart resemblance of the glorified Lord—the resemblance so perfect that Jesus is seen in each and all.

To see Jesus as he is; to be like him; and to be with him forever, is salvation perfected. Then, dear Christian brethren of the household of faith, be patient a little while longer. We speak to those that have not denied the faith; to those who have not wickedly departed from God; to those that have not become a shame and a disgrace to the Christian name; to those that suffer the mocking, scoffing, and ridicule of a heartless world for the sake of Christ and his truth to those that know the supercilious scorn that wounds, and the envenomed rage of the tongue that transfixes the very soul. You may be the poor of this world; your bread may be the bread of sorrow, and your cup may be filled with the bitter water of affliction; your home may be the hut of cheerless poverty; you may be pining away with the wastings of disease; but be resigned a few more days. Your Lord is coming in a little while to make you equal with the angels; to give you to eat of the tree of life that grows in the Paradise of God. Yes, endure a short time longer. The heart-aches will soon be exchanged for the unalloyed ecstasies of the deathless existence. Your affectionate hearts may be wrung with anguish now; but they will soon beat and be thrilled with endless raptures. A crown of glory will soon encircle your now throbbing temples. Among those that have a name to live, and are dead, you may be as few as the names in Sardis; yet O, defile not your Christian garments. One day you will walk with Christ in the white robes of everlasting wear.

In these days of peril and apostasy, of prayerless, Christless, ill-loss living and acting, let patience have its perfect work; repose yourselves on the unseen everlasting arms of the Omnipotent God, for he careth for you. The Lord cometh, and you shall be changed into the glorious likeness of the Son of God himself. The Christ-image is the supreme out-blooming of all beauty and glory. In his person it is the admiration of all the heavenly orders. To be in his likeness will be the unspeakable glory of his redeemed church. Paul knew what the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus meant; Phil. iii. 14: Paul knew what an eternal weight of glory inexpressible even in the interwoven hyperboles of his untranslatable Greek—signified, 2 Cor. iv. 17, and he ran for the prize, lived for that resurrection, and died in rapt anticipation of being like the Lord and forever with the Lord. O, brethren dear, the Lord is soon coming, not only to be glorified and admired by all that believe but also to be glorified and admired in all the believing. Be faithful, be watchful, be prayerful a little while longer, and you will be made like him when he comes.

Literary Notices.

Hebraica. No. 4. of Vol. I. has come to hand. It contains a fac simile of the cuneiform inscription, as inscribed on the Cylinder of Nebuchadnezzar, now on exhibition in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, with a transliteration and translation. This number also contains the Syriac Version of the Apocryphal Epistle of King Abgar to Jesus, and Jesus' reply, with translations. Other learned articles carry the mind of the reader back to the days of old antiquity.

Literary Life. No. 3, of Vol. III. of this Illustrated Magazine has been sent to our address. The First Paper is, "Chicago Illustrated," in which a very interesting account of the first settlement and subsequent growth of the Garden City is given. It is published by the Elder Publishing Co., 364 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., at $1.00 a year. Single copy 10 cts.

The Anti-Infidel Library. Nos. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 of this Serial just received. This periodical is published by Elder H. L. Hastings; at 47 Cornhill, Boston Mass., at $1.00 a year, and is richly worth the price. Our limits do not permit us extended a notice for this week as we would like to give our readers. In our infidel age these pamphlets ought to be widely circulated.

Good Words. No. 3, Vol. I., the number for April of the current year, is before us. This is a quarterly of eight pages published by The Association for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge at the small price of—Five cents a year. It may be had by addressing the Secretary, John Donaldson, 656 Halsey Street, Brooklyn, N. Y. We commend this as an excellent practical religious Serial both for reading and general distribution.

The Revised Old Testament.

LONDON, May 16.—Copies of the revised version of the Old Testament were given to the newspapers at midnight last night. The revision is the most important event in the history of the English Bible since the publication of the King James translation in 1611, and presents the results of the combined labor of a large number of the best Hebraists and Biblical scholars of England and the United States, most of them professors of Hebrew in universities and seminaries. The revised Old Testament is almost exactly the same length as the old one. There are important alterations in the arrangement of chapters. Verses are printed in paragraphs so as to keep the consecutive sense. Lines are not divided into verses. Several passages are printed like prose. The Psalms are divided into five books.

Selections.

JESUS—LORD OF ALL.

"God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name, which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."—PHIL. II. 9-11.

"He is Lord of all."—Acts x. 36.

"For this end Jesus died, and rose, and revived, that He might be Lord, both of the dead and living."—Rom. xiv. 9.

These are high claims for Jesus; and all the more remarkable when we remember the circumstances in which they were made. Let us remember that at this time Jesus was, in the eyes of the world, but a poor, despised malefactor; born in obscurity, and surrounded by those who are reckoned as of small account in the world's esteem, during all the time of his sojourning on earth; the promulgator of doctrines which had not, hitherto, taken any remarkable hold on the minds of men; and whose reputation, judged by the ordinary standards of human probabilities, was extremely likely to be confined to the little circle in which he labored. He had none of those fortuitous circumstances that often conspire to give a man a hold on the affections of his fellows, even when there might be little else to support him. No popular wave of enthusiasm was evoked to carry him forward in the eyes of men. No wide spread movement which, by lending himself to, might be instrumental in securing the good graces of the people. On the contrary, in addition to the obscurity of his birth and the ignominy of his death, the hold which he might have had upon the good wishes of his own people, who were undoubtedly looking for the appearing of their long promised Deliverer, he entirely ignored and set aside by an attitude hostile to their expectations; and, now he is removed from the scene of his labors, he was in the eyes of men simply dead; and, doubtless, soon to be forgotten.

It is because of these circumstances that the words of the Apostle appear in all their striking force. This despised Nazarene—this man of whom the world was not worthy—whom not even his own people cared anything for—whose teachings were regarded as the ravings of a man beside himself,—it is of him the Apostle speaks when he says that God had given him a name above every name—above all counsellors, teachers, kings and potentates; priests and philanthropists—all who ever dwelt on earth, or who shall ever dwell there; and not only so, but even all things in the heavens as well. Those angelic beings who wait upon the word of God and do his pleasure, unfallen and holy though they be, are subordinate to him. Their knees must bow, and their tongues confess, even as all upon the earth and under the earth must confess, the supreme Majesty of the Name of Jesus.

There is nothing that shows the divine origin of the mission of the Son of Man in greater force than does this consideration. It is not simply the exaltation of the name of Jesus that is here intended. There is that, but there is more. It is the acknowledging that he is Lord. It is not simply that men and angels should unite in adoration of the merits of him who has done a mighty work on earth, but it is that they agree in acknowledging his claims on their homage and service; and it is that they regard him as their Lord. And this is just carrying out in the ages to come among the hosts of heaven, as well as among those who dwell on the earth, that same acknowledgment which was made by his disciples when he was still with them. Not only was Jesus called "Lord," by his disciples; He also spoke of himself to them in like manner.

You will remember that on the occasion of his washing his disciples' feet, he said—"If I, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, even so should ye wash one another's feet." Here we see the readiness, if I might so express it, of Jesus to be so regarded by his disciples. But in numberless others we see how spontaneously they admitted, and even rejoiced in so acknowledging him. So numerous are the instances of this, and so striking are they in their obvious meaning, that we are forced to conclude that, whether the disciples understood it or not, there was a significance in the words a meaning, which would afterwards be revealed to them, and which would have its weight with them, and its instruction for all who would come after. I am of that opinion that Jesus taught his disciples to call him Lord, and that they used the term while ignorant of its full significance. The idea embodied in it was a common enough one in their day, and it would not be without its influence. There were masters and slaves, where the master had all manner of jurisdiction over the servant, and therefore the term would be so far understood; and the character of him who claimed to be their Lord was such as to evoke nothing but pleasure in being regarded as his servants. It was part of the mission of Jesus to so reveal himself; and it was a part of the ignorance and impiety of those who heard him to misunderstand him. He came as the Redeemer, but how few there were that understood or believed him as such! He was to suffer and die, a ransom for many. This he sought to make them understand, yet, it was not till after he had been exalted that their eyes were opened to this truth. And so with the term Lord; it was not until after his ascension that they became enlightened as to its full significance. Like as it was with the truths concerning his death, so was it with this. These were some of the matters upon which the Spirit of truth was to enlighten them, and bring them to their remembrance.

Then it was that the importance of the suffering and death of their Lord builded in their minds, and found utterance in their lives. Then they saw more clearly how necessary it was for the Christ to suffer, and the bearing these sufferings had upon the salvation of the race. And so, following as a natural consequence, comes the full force of this word they had so often used as a designation, but now laden with a significance they had never suspected. And so we find Peter on the day of Pentecost testifying—"Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ."

Henceforth not a designation merely, but a doctrine is contained in the term. There were lords many, and gods many; and to say of any one that God had made him Lord and Christ, would bring home a truth which, though not fully apprehended then, would still be felt. Remember how Jesus, by the question he put to the Jews on this matter, greatly confounded them:—"If Christ be David's Son, why then does David call him Lord?" We can understand it, but it is easily seen how it must have puzzled these Israelites who had not our advantages. And if there were any in that audience which listened to Peter's discourse, who had also heard our Lord's question, we need not wonder at the exclamation that followed Peter's address:—"Men and brethren, what shall we do?" For the reference to that Psalm (cx.) would of itself bring home to their minds reflections of a most disquieting sort. They had put Jesus to death; certain rumors were abroad of his resurrection and ascension to heaven; while on earth he had told them David's Son was also David's Lord; and would sit on God's right hand; and now they hear these disciples boldly affirm that God had so raised him up, and declared him to be both Lord and Christ. I say, in the minds of such persons, there could be room for nothing but fear. They knew what was implied in the term Christ, they also know what was meant by the term Lord. They knew of the exhortation in the 2nd Psalm—"Kiss the Son lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way when his anger is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him." And again—"The Lord at Thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath." In a word, they were well acquainted with the work which the Lord would perform when he came; a blessing to his own, but a scourge to those who were his enemies. Indeed, so numerous are the Scriptures that treat of the work and mission of the Lord, that a Jew, to be ignorant of them, would show himself to be equally ignorant regarding the work and mission of the Messiah, for the names are interchangeable in the Scriptures. What the Lord is to do, the Messiah would accomplish. But these things do not come to us in the same manner. There is a sense in which we regard Jesus as our Lord which these Israelites were strangers to.

We are just now to obtain a seat at the King's table; we are privileged guests. He is not to us the King clothed in dreadful majesty, whose presence none can seek and live. We have learned to call him friend. We have learned to love him, because we know that he loves us. He has not been revealed to us simply as Lord; he is known to us as Jesus our Lord. We have found a place in his heart of hearts. Being a partaker of our nature, we know that he, therefrom, is acquainted with our sorrows, and sympathises with our griefs. In the gentlest way he seeks our love, he presents to us his bleeding wounds, received on our account, and asks if we cannot believe in his love for us, and so we are led to his feet as willing subjects, as loving disciples. To him we willingly and joyfully bow the knee and own him Lord.

But the question occurs:—Does he only become our Lord when we are willing to acknowledge him? Is it only by a mental effort that this position is arrived at? Has the world no relationship to Christ in this sense until it becomes converted to him? The entire scope of revelation forbids such a conclusion.

There are servants who knew their Lord's will and did it not; and there are servants who know not their Lord's will; there are faithful and there are rebellious servants; those who are willing, and those who are not willing to have this man to reign over them. Jesus claims our obedience as something he has a right to expect. This seems to me to lie at the foundation of the scheme of the world's redemption. If the unconverted are under no jurisdiction, then they are not amenable to punishment. If our lives are our own, then we may live as we please!

It may be a mystery to us how the Lord will govern the world; and what are those measures he will take to make every knee bow to him, and every tongue confess him Lord. But is is to be. And one great reason for his interest in us is the fact that we are his. He has redeemed us by his blood. And if we are brought to acknowledge him now, and others only when he comes, some obtaining a greater wealth of Blessing, yet it is all to the glory of God the Father. How often do we read such language as "Submit yourselves, therefore, to him:"—"Present yourselves to him a living sacrifice, which is your reasonable service." And the reason is added—"For ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price, therefore glorify God in your body and spirit which are his." This is true, whether we recognize it or not. That offering which has brought us so cheerfully to his feet in humble loving submission, was made for all; he died for all. We were as much bought by his blood before we recognized it as we are now. He died for the whole world, and therefore his Lordship over it.

In Ephesians i. 9; we read:—"God having made known to us the mystery of his will, which he hath purposed in himself, that he might gather in one all things in Christ, and hath given us the Holy Spirit of promise—the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession." That Holy Spirit was given as the earnest of something to be possessed hereafter, when that which had been purchased should be redeemed. Can we be in doubt as to what this redemption is? We have been purchased by his blood, but that possession is still in the hands of the enemy. But the time is coming when the language of Hosea shall be verified; "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plague. O grave, I will be thy destruction." Hosea xiii. 14.

It is for this coming time we are waiting. Who can look abroad and say the world has no need of a Deliverer? or who can say, in the face of what we know this book to proclaim, that the world has not been promised one? or who can say that the work of the Christ is finished? That which has been done is, indeed, most blessed and glorious; but how far short it comes of that which has been promised! The result of transgression fell not upon the race only, but upon the earth as well. And the blessing of the second Adam shall be as embracing. The coming time of blessing shall be a jubilee for all creation. The whole creation groans now, but it shall be delivered when the great redemption comes. Then death itself will die. Now we have sorrow and vexation of spirit, but then, the Lord shall wipe away tears from off all faces.

In virtue, then, of that Lordship which he has obtained over all by the sacrifice of himself, he has the right to govern the world. And he shall reign till all enemies are put under his feet. He comes with life and blessing to the faithful, but with judgment upon the ungodly. He will save the poor and needy, but the proud he will know afar off. We need this coming One; for if he come not to perform all these things promised, there will be force and point to the objector's taunt—"All things continue as they were from the beginning." All things wait that literal personal coming of the Lord. The fathers wait for it whose dust mixes with the kindred earth resting in hope. Israel awaits it. They continue a people without a home until God brings them again to the Land which he has sworn shall be theirs for ever. And the church waits; for the cry of its martyred children has gone up—"Lord, how long?" and we live in hope of the time when faith shall give place to sight. Faith shall always be the inheritance of his people. And shall see his glory! Such is our hope, brethren, let us cherish it, even though the darkness grows thick and dense around us. Then—

"With that blessed hope before us,
Let no harp remain unstrung.
Let the mighty advent chorus
Onward roll from tongue to tongue.
Christ is coming!
Come, Lord Jesus, quickly come!"

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

An Interesting Session of the International Institute.

The usual fortnightly meeting of this society was held on Wednesday evening, May 6, in the Y. M. C. A. building. The members elected were: Fred Bishop, Akron, O.; John H. O'Mara, New Lisbon, O.; George Leach, Riverside, Cal., and Charles de Medici, New York. Communications were read from J. H. Weldon, Killmallock, Ireland, on "The Reverse of the Seal of the United States;" from Joseph Baxendell, astronomer, England, on "The Prophetical Indications of the Great Pyramid as Exemplified by Modern Historical Events;" from Theodore Faber of Brooklyn, on his "Value of "Pi," from J. R. Skinner and Henry Pierrepont, and from Alfred E. Watkins, the engineer who proposes to explore the pyramid by means of diamond drills.

Mr. Latimer illustrated by blackboard diagrams a portion of the work of Mr. Courtenay, "The Two Witnesses—the Bible and the Great Pyramid." The author of the pamphlet finds, in the dimensions of the grand gallery of the great pyramid, a record of lunar periods and a repetition of the omnibus 666 of prophecy. Then, counting a pyramid inch for a year, he discovers the lines and intersections of lines which exactly mark the dates of the momentous events in history corresponding with the prophetic periods of Daniel's prophecy; also other lines and intersections of lines which, reasoning from analogy, must indicate the termination of the unfulfilled periods of Daniel and Revelation.

In his introduction he says: "During the rainy season of 1879 I was stationed at Alibag, a little town on the western seaboard of the Bombay presidency. The rain fell so constantly that there was no inducement to leave the house. The society of the station consisted of four Europeans. Under these circumstances I was led by a pamphlet I found lying on the collector's shelves to the study of the prophetic Scriptures. The Bible forthwith became a new book to me; my eyes were opened to the coming glories of the Messiah's reign on earth; and from prophecies fulfilled to the letter in the past I learned to venerate the literal words of Scripture. In the following December I met at Lahore a gentleman. He put into my hands "Our Inheritance in the Great Pyramids," with an earnest request that I would devote myself to the task of proving that the great pyramid is, in its prophetic portions, in perfect harmony with the book of Daniel and the revelation of St. John. Many persons are under the impression that numbers may be manipulated to any extent and made to prove anything; probably if they themselves made the attempt they would change their opinions. My experience certainly does not confirm their view. My discovery of the prophetic periods of Daniel was not made till many months had elapsed, and from July, 1880, until the latter part of 1884 I was quite unable to detect any agreement between those periods and the chronological measures of the pyramid. Often after covering pages with calculations have I cast them aside to utter dissatisfaction, and thought for the moment that this great pyramid was a mere will-o'-the-wisp to lure men into endless quagmires of unprofitable speculation. But lately a study of the measures most neglected, namely, of levels, has led me to the true solution."

The author then shows the correlation between various historical dates and events and the measures of the pyramid. Upon these Mr. Latimer commented.

Mr. Edward Hine then gave a short address on the identity. He congratulated the Institute on its existence and the work it was accomplishing. He said that he had no fear that the French metric system could ever be adopted by the Anglo-Saxon race. The fact that they were Israel rendered it impossible. The perfect and just weight and measure were only given to one people on the face of the earth, and the possession of those weights and measures by our race was one proof of our identity with Israel. But one proof was not sufficient, and the speaker pointed out many facts showing the identity of the race. He believed the separation of America from England was a fulfilment of prophecy, and stated that he thought there must be a mark to testify to that separation in the pyramid.

At the conclusion of the address a vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Hine for his instructive remarks. The meeting then adjourned for two weeks.

OBITUARY.

NICHOLS.—At Springville, N. Y., April 23, 1885, of consumption, Charles H. Nichols, aged 40 years, one month, and twenty days.

Brother Nichols was born in Concord, Erie Co., N. Y., where he has always lived with the exception of about four years. While west, he formed the acquaintance of his surviving wife, Miss Abbie E. Stiles, to whom he was married Oct. 18, 1871. He leaves two children, Bernard S. and Clara M. In Nov. 1883, finding his health failing, he with his family went to Minneapolis, Minn., but receiving no permanent benefit came back to this place in July, 1884, where he continued to go down slowly but surely with that dread disease, consumption, though all that was possible was done to avert it. In July, 1874, he made a public profession of Christianity, and was baptized by brother J. T. Ongley, of Pennsylvania. His faith was a firm belief in the soon coming of the Lord to establish his kingdom on the earth, and eternal life only to be obtained through Christ and the resurrection. A consistent Christian, quiet and unassuming, yet always following the "Golden Rule," honorable and upright in all his business relations, a good neighbor, a kind and affectionate husband and father. He was a great sufferer during the time of his sickness, yet bore it with remarkable patience.

Funeral services were held at the Free Baptist Church at Morton's Corners, N. Y., April 25, 1885. A large assembly of relatives and friends were addressed by the writer from the words found in 1 Cor. xv. 21, 22.

Editor Restitution:

While searching and reading the pages of your much esteemed paper, THE RESTITUTION, I am caused to wonder what has become of the brethren with whom I used to associate, and dearly love yet. I am living where the gospel seldom ever sounds. I have been here about five months, and have not found but one man that claims to belong to the Church of God, without an extra given name. I would be pleased to hear from some of my dear brethren, that I am personally acquainted with, either by letter or through THE RESTITUTION. May God speed the time when we will no longer wonder where the brethren are, but can all say we are at home sweet home, is the prayer of your waiting brother. W. A. HOLLIDAY.

VERNON, TEXAS.

Editor Restitution:

I cannot think of doing without THE RESTITUTION, as time bears us on and we near the grave, the word "restitution" becomes more and more dear to us. As your paper has so much to say about the "Restitution" which God has promised (which is our hope) we love to read THE RESTITUTION about the restitution, and think on the good time coming. Now as the Fort Worth & Denver R. R. is complete to within fifteen miles of Vernon, we hope some of the preaching brethren will come this way. Though a very weak stick, I have not been entirely idle. I have done some private talking and distributed some papers and tracts. I have been instrumental in turning one man's feet from Babylon towards the city of the Great King. If you would give us a good piece on re-baptism it might prove a blessing, as he loves to read THE RESTITUTION.

Yours in the one faith.

BENJ. ACKLEY.

Every human soul has the germ of some flower within; and they would open if they could only find sunshine and free air to expand in. I always told you that not having enough sunshine was what ailed the world. Make the people happy, and there will not be half the quarreling or a tenth part of the wickedness there is.—Lydia Maria Child.

Remarks.

An explanation of Eph. vi. 11, 12, is asked for by a brother.

A brother wants some one to write comments on the International Sunday School lessons for THE RESTITUTION. Will some one of our brethren undertake this work.

Will some one of our preaching brethren who can go to Noblesville, Ind., correspond with G. W. Bennett, of that place.

HOPE.

(Translated from the German of Schiller.)

Much men talk and dream,
Of better days to come,
Toward happy, golden aims,
They look, they chase, they run.
The world will old be, and will again be young,
Yet still they hope some better lot, may by and by be won.

Hope, guides man on through life,
And flatters still the boy:
Her fascinating face,
The crowds of youth decoy!
When aged men their weary course, have finished in the grave,
She will not then be buried there, a chained and helpless slave,
But planted on above the mound, her odorous branches wave.

Hope, is no fancy vain,
An empty, flattering thing,
Produced in thoughtless brain
Of fools, that prate and sing.
Each beat of heart the truth declares,
That we to better things are born,
And what the inner voice lays bare,
Deceives us not of brighter morn.

TYPES AND SHADOWS OF THE LAW. WHAT ARE THEY?

For the law, having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offer year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect. Heb. x. 1.

We have been studying some of the types and shadows of those good things to come, and which have come since those types were given, and are ready to exclaim, how wonderful are the ways of the Lord. Let us notice just three feasts, recorded in Lev. xiii, and we will be convinced at once that the law was indeed a shadow of good things to come. These are called the Lord's feasts. The first is the passover given at the time of the Lord's slaying the first born of Egypt, and passing over the first born of Israel. The Israelites were to slay a lamb of the first year, without blemish, and eat it in their houses with the doors closed, and to eat it all up. What they did not eat they were to burn, and not leave any until the morning. The Israelites were to keep this throughout their generation, or age of the world. Now let us notice the types and shadows. The lamb of the first year was typical of the first government that God had over the children of men—without blemish. It was to be perfect, to represent the perfection of Christ—eat it in their houses, showing that it was to Israel alone they were to eat it, or burn it all up, showing that when the true Lamb come they would not have a particle of use for this type any longer. Now when Christ, the true Lamb came, he was perfect; he kept the whole law, which no other had done. The Jews sought every occasion to condemn him by saying he did not keep the law, but were not successful: he kept it to the last, and ate with his disciples the passover on the very night he was crucified, which was the last act of the law he was allowed to perform, and he was ready then to be offered; and when he was offered he said it was finished—that age or dispensation. In Gal. iii, Paul says the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, but after Christ came we were no longer under the schoolmaster; so when Christ came he finished the law, or that age of the world, he being the Lamb slain in the mind of the Lord from the foundation of the world, to redeem it and typified by the lamb slain at the passover, the blood of which, when rightly applied on the door post, redeemed the first born of Israel, God's people, from death; his blood redeeming all the world, when rightly applied, from death. So his death finished that age of the world with all of its types and shadows pertaining to his crucifixion. Paul testifies to this in Heb. ix. 20. He says, But now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. So when he was slain he ended that age of the world, or that world, as Paul expresses it. So after he ate the last passover supper we hear him saying in giving his chosen the cup, which was to represent his blood, after he was offered, "This is the New Testament in my blood," So if his sacrifice of himself was the end of the world that then was, and he gave this cup as a New Testament in regard to a new covenant or age, we must have new institutions—a new government.

This brings us to the second feast of the same chapter, which is a sheaf of first fruits. They—the Israelites—were to celebrate this feast on the day after the Sabbath. They were not to touch a green ear or any part of the crop until this feast was kept, and it was to be celebrated with bread and wine. Now let us see how applicable this is to the New Testament, an age that commences with the resurrection of our Savior. 1 Cor. xv. 20. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." What could have been more appropriate than a sheaf of first fruits? It was, and is, the support of life or the life-giving principle by which we are supported, the fruit or crop of the earth. Then Christ, the first fruits, is our support, life, or life-giver. Had he not been raised we could never have had hope of eternal life. This feast was to be celebrated on the day after the Sabbath. Christ rose on the day after the Sabbath, so now we begin to realise or understand, something about this New Testament, and why he gave bread and wine to be kept in commemoration of it, and why the apostles took it on the first day of the week. They know and understand why they are not to touch a green ear of the new crop until this sheaf was offered—they could not commence the gospel until Christ's resurrection. They could not understand until now all about his crucifixion, although he had taught them these things must be, yet they did not fully realize, nor do they yet, but they understand enough as to what the first offering meant, and that it was celebrated on the day after the Sabbath, and what the Lord meant when he instituted the last supper, and supped with them, telling them it was the New Testament in his blood. They also knew that a testament was not in force as long as the testator liveth, but on the very day of this offering we find them assembled, and on three successive first days after his resurrection. The Lord recognized and approved this by appearing with them and was known of them at one time by breaking bread, and saying, Peace be unto you. This was the beginning of the new world, or age. From this time we need no more burnt offerings for sin, but were to have new ordinances altogether, Christ having fulfilled to the letter the law by it's bringing us to him, and it would have left us still without God and without hope if it had not been for these two incidents, represented by the sheaf of first fruits and the harvest feast which occurred just fifty days later.

Now we come to this third or harvest feast which seems to represent both the Pentecost and the real harvest at the time of the end of this gospel age of the world. Commencing with the offering of the sheaf, in the first instance they were to lay off just fifty days, and then they were to have another feast of first fruits. It was to be the day after the Sabbath. Now from the resurrection just fifty days, the apostles receive the Holy Ghost, and it is also on the first day, or day after the Sabbath. Now they are made to realize their part in this harvest feast, they understand that through their teaching that this harvest is to be made ready for the sickle at the true harvest, or end of the age, and they go forth proclaiming the glad tidings of the New Testament, and as many as believed their word were baptized, and continued steadfastly in the apostle's doctrine, and fellowship, and in breaking bread, this being the ordinance instituted in remembrance of the sheaf of first fruits, and by the Lord himself. Paul says he failed not to declare the whole counsel of God, and in 1 Cor. xi. he relates the manner that the bread and wine were given, and should be taken, and says the Lord gave it to them after he supped, and said, "As often as ye do this you do show the Lord's death till he comes." No wonder we find them assembled on the first day, no wonder Paul tarries seven days to break bread with the brethren on the first day, and exhorts them not to forsake the assembling of themselves together. No wonder, I say, when the first day is the harbinger of so many good things, the sheaf of first fruits was offered on that day. Christ arose from the dead on that day, met with his disciples on three successive first days after his resurrection, ascended on that day. The harvest feast was just fifty days after the sheaf of first fruits. Just fifty days after the resurrection was Pentecost, all on the first day, and as there two feasts of first fruits, one when the first sheaf is offered, the other at the full harvest, may we not confidently expect the Lord to come on the first day to make a full harvest of this age or generation? And, brethren of the Abrahamic faith, methinks it will be a great day of rejoicing, if we are together on that day celebrating the feast of first fruits, in remembrance of the True Lamb that appeared once in the end of the world, gave himself to die for us, and left us this New Testament in his blood, telling us as often as we take it we show his death till he comes. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

Your somewhat humorous reply is received, contents scrutinized closely. The death struggles are plainly discernable. You, like other law disciples, die hard; but you must succumb. Paul died hard, but he finally died. "Beware of dogs, beware evil workers, beware of the concision, (that is, beware of the Jews), "For," says Paul, "We are the circumcision, which worship in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, (not Moses), and have no confidence in the flesh: (keeping the law). Though I might also have confidence in the flesh (by keeping the law)—If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh (the law), I more. Circumcised the eighth day of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law (of Ten Commandments?), a Pharisee, concerning zeal, persecuting the church touching the righteousness which is of the law blameless. But what things were gain to me (by keeping the law), those I counted loss for Christ....and be found in him; not having mine own righteousness which is of the law." This law here spoken of, is no doubt the law written in a book and put in the side of the ark; the one that we have now. The one that Christ, and all the apostles quoted from. The one that Christ referred to when he said, "Moses wrote of me,"—"Ye have Moses and the prophets"—and beginning at Moses, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself,"—"That all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses and in the prophets and in the Psalms concerning me." No reference any where, in all his teachings, to the law written on stone, that was put in the ark; and lost six-hundred years before. No matter, there was nothing in that law concerning him. If there had been, he certainly would have referred to it. It was like the material on which it was written: unyielding; no mercy; no love; not even referring to the world's ransom. No wonder that it was entombed in the center of the ark! It never was designed to be molested. Not so with the book of the law; it was put where it was easy of access—in the side of the ark! The people wanted that: it pointed to the Redeemer of the world!

There is no command any where, to any people, to keep the law written on stone: but a constant appeal to "the law of Moses," to "Moses and the prophets," to "the book of the law," and when referring to the same thing; "the law," "the law of the Lord," "the law of God," "a ready scribe in the law of Moses, which the Lord God of heaven had given," "a scribe of the Words or the Commandments of the Lord." "To bring the book of the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel; so they read in the law of God distinctly and gave the sense;" "and they stood up in their place, and read in the book of the law of the Lord their God one-fourth part of a day." Surely it would not take so long to read the Ten Commandments? "Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him, in Horeb, for all Israel." Now don't harp so much about two, three, four laws. Learn to divide the word of truth aright. You see that Bible phraseology is "the law," "the law," "the law," not ceremonial law, and sacrificial law, and carnal law, and moral law, etc., which is all nonsense. "The book of the law" comprehends, and contains all the law that was given to any people, revealed to us, from Adam the first to Adam the second. Paul distinctly says that it was only imposed on Israel till the time of reformation—till Christ should be born, and that since he has been born that they (not you) are no longer under the law." Was Paul mistaken? and you right? You state, "that you do not expect justification by keeping the law"! Why then are you any better off than I, or any one else, that does not keep it? Show me your faith without works, and I will show you my faith by my works." You say that you expect justification through the atoning blood of Christ. So do I. Therefore do not trust the law. My faith can be seen and read of men; yours likewise. My faith corresponds with my works, yours does not. I tell you that I am on the road to Chicago; you tell me that I am travelling in the wrong direction. You know the way perfectly, having been there several times: I never was there; but a friend of mine has directed me. You also are a friend of mine. Now heretofore I have had perfect confidence in you both for veracity. But here I am in a dilemma! But you reason with me; and finally I am, I say, persuaded that you are right and that my other friend is wrong. So I start on, but do not change my course! Which one do you think that I had faith in? Make your own application. Jesus reproved some in his day "ye say and do not." And Malachi says, ye "have wearied the Lord with your words."

Now Paul says of himself; "For I through the law am dead to the law," now what law does he refer to? You and I are agreed, that it is the book of the law; and that same book of the law, calls it "the law of God," therefore, Paul was dead to the law of God! Escape from this conclusion is impossible. "Go thou and do likewise," i. e. "become dead to the law by the body of Christ." Paul continues:—"I am crucified with Christ." Crucify, means death. Mark! he does not say that he is crucified to Christ. If he did, he would then sustain the same relation to Christ that he did to the law. "but with Christ." "Nevertheless," he says, "I live, and yet not I but Christ liveth in me." Dead to the law, and dead with Christ: and yet alive! How is that? Let him answer: and mark well his answer. "Yet not I"—as touching the law, a Pharisee; having mine own righteousness which is of the law'. No; it is not, that Paul, that liveth. No, that Paul, died "when on his way to Damascus; when the commandment came." "But Christ liveth in me." How is that possible Paul? surely thou art beside thyself! Please explain. "The life I now live in the flesh I live"—in obedience to the Ten Commandments!—No, no. "I live by the faith of the Son of God"....."I do not frustrate (defeat) the grace (favor) of God."

Now mark; "For if righteousness"—justice, virtue, holiness, is the definition of righteousness—then we will read it thusly:—"For if justice, virtue, and holiness, come by the law, then Christ died in vain!" Does not this truth startle you? and discover to you that, that righteousness which is of the law is self righteousness? If not, then hear the conclusion. "But that no man (the human race) is justified by the law in the sight of God is evident." Why Paul? Because "the just"—virtuous and holy,—"shall live by faith. And the law (of God) is not of Faith." This had ought to startle you! "Tell me," says Paul, "ye that desire to be under the law," do you not hear the law; for it is written.... these are the two covenants." What are the two covenants? The Ten Commandment are one. Proof. "And he declared unto you his covenant which he commanded you to perform; even Ten Commandments;" this was made at Horeb; see Malichi, iv. 4. How dare you say in the fear of God and in the love of the truth, that the Ten Commandments is not the covenant—and is not, synecdochically speaking, the first covenant that God made with Israel? And spoken of here by Paul, as "Hagar" allegorically? i. e. by parable, a figure of speech.

If the first covenant, as you say, "was wholly and solely written in a book and deposited in the side of the ark;" which of course is the Old Testament; "was all nailed to the cross—done away," as you assert! where then is our Scriptures that are able to make us wise unto salvation?

Editor Restitution:

I have been a reader of THE RESTITUTION ever since it born the name of THE RESTITUTION, and I must truly say that it suits my taste better than any other religious journal with which I am acquainted. I see by the last paper, May 6, that Bro. C. C. Ramsay has not found things very agreeable to his taste in Kansas. Well it is not very agreeable I admit. But, Bro. Ramsay, have you forgotten what the apostle said to the elders of the church at Ephesus? For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also some of your own selves shall men arise speaking perverse things. Indeed so anxious was the great apostle for their eternal welfare that he ceased not to warn them night and day for the space of three years, while the dew drops of affection trickled from his eyes, and at last he commended them to God and the word of his grace, which was able to build them up and give them an inheritance among the sanctified ones, and after showing them all things necessary he kneeled down and prayed with them all, and the result was it caused them to weep, while they fell upon his neck and kissed him. Glorious meeting, glorious parting. It is astonishing that such men will abandon the glorious hope. But, alas, the weakness of poor human nature. Bro. Ramsay keep up good courage, you know that our Savior said, Fear not little flock for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Yes the kingdom will soon come with all its honors and glories. Then we shall see the King in his beauty, and we shall be satisfied when we shall awake in his likeness, all past disappointments, cares, anxieties, aches, and pains will cease, and that too for ever; when we shall meet on the sunny banks of sweet deliverance, to bask for ever under the vitalizing rays of the Sun of Righteousness. Brethren cheer up, do all you can for the paper, trust in God, keep yourselves in the love of God. We ask it for Jesus sake. Amen.

Just a short report of Evangelical work, for the encouragement of the brethren in Michigan. Wife and I began meetings at Fishers, Dec. 21, holding in all twenty-one meetings. Result, a good substantial Church organized, three baptized, and several others have expressed a wish to put on Christ by baptism in the near future. At Hesperia we held several meetings, baptized two with four additions to the Church, making in all, a membership of thirty-eight. While we were there, the dear friends, as a token of their respect for us, presented us with two beautiful bed-quilts, and a number of other beautiful and substantial gifts. The cause is in a flourishing condition, and best of all, each Church sustain with interest their prayer meetings and Sunday schools. May God help each individual member of his most glorious ones, to work diligently, that we may each of us have a home in his kingdom is our prayer.

THE NEW OLD TESTAMENT.

NEW HAVEN, May 10.—Yale College, which furnished from its faculty the President of the Board of Revisers of the Bible, the Rev. Dr. George E. Day, the eminent Hebrew scholar, is much interested in the appearance of the revised version of the Old Testament, which is promised to Americans on the 19th inst. Prof. Day is enthusiastic over the volume, and believes that it will take the place of the Old or King James version.

"I do not," he said, "expect the present generation, and more especially elderly people, to give up their old Bibles. To them it would seem a sacrilege, perhaps, and, while they would have nothing to unlearn, the new book might never seem natural to them. But it is the coming generation which will adopt the revised version. Our young ministers will go out from Yale and from Andover thoroughly versed in and governed by it, and its dissemination throughout the land will be so noted that not many years hence the new Bible will seem as old to the average persons as the King James version does now. The new version, complete as it will be presented, with the New Testament, is, I hold, one of the marked events in the history of our world."

Prof. Day then spoke of the labors of the undertaking, which, he said, had been done by bibliophiles free of charge, because it had been said that the gospel should be free. As to the cause which led to the revision, he said that in the 270 years which have elapsed since the former revision of the Bible, known as the King James version, much additional light has been gained, and manuscript evidence has been multiplied many fold. On the other hand, the editors of the King James version possessed only a small number of inferior and comparatively modern manuscripts, and those imperfectly collated. It was by reason of this increased knowledge that the revision has been made, and consequently of May 6, 1870, the Convocation of Canterbury appointed a committee of Biblical scholars of the Church of England to revise for public use the authorized version of the Bible, giving the committee power to associate with them scholars of other denominations. In 1871, by invitation of the English revisers, a similar American committee was formed, composed of distinguished scholars of all the Evangelical denominations, and divided like the English Committee, into two companies—one for the Old Testament and one for the New. On the American side were such men as Prof. Day, T. D. Woolsey, Chancellor Howard Crosby, D. D., the Rev. Dr. Chambers of New York, Profs. Kranth and Hare of Philadelphia, Profs. Greene and Aiken of Princeton, and Prof. W. Henry Green, D. D., LL. D. The two international committees have been engaged in one and the same work. The labors of the English Committee have been submitted to the American Committee, and vice versa. No changes have been made, except by a two-thirds vote. The active members of the English Committee have numbered fifty-two, of the American Committee twenty-seven.

Prof. Day emphasized the point that, as the new Bible was the outcome of researches of the very highest knowledge in restoring the Scriptures to their textual purity, to the unlearned even more than to the learned will the new version be profitable. The meaning of the Word would be made clearer, and skepticism will become disarmed. The changes made are not fundamental. They touch nothing which is essential to Christianity. It is a new revision, and not a new translation. In concluding, Prof. Day said that another point which could not be brought out too strongly was that the Bible reading public, while it might miss some of the beautifully flowing and favorite passages of the old English version in the revised version, should recollect that all rhetorical considerations should be put aside for the one thing of importance—that of having the truth and the whole truth. He did not know whether the clergy of New Haven used the revised New Testament, but he did not think one of them durst preach contrary to the sense of the text of that volume. He was sure they used it for reference constantly.

DEATH.

"On this side, and on that, men see their friends
Drop off like leaves in autumn; yet launch out
Into fantastic schemes, which the long livers
In the world's halls and endergo'ate days,
Could scarce have hitherto for.—Fools that we are Never to think of death and ourselves
At the same time; as if to learn to die
Were no concern of ours.—Oh! more than foolish
For creatures of a day in gamesome mood,
To frolic on eternity's dread brink
Unapprehensive; when for aught we know
The very first swell in surge shall sweep us in."

Thus warns Robert Blair (born at Edinburgh about 1700; died at Athelstaneford 1740). How it speaks home of our understanding. Like the Florentine funeral which is always conducted at night, so that no one will be shocked during the day, with sunshine and light and gaiety, all about them, with a thought of the inevitable doom of all, we, too, put aside the thought of death. We say it is a long way off for us, and we must prepare to live; by-and-by will be time enough to prepare to die. We plan and strive, and hope, and fear, and at last, as we think we can begin to live comfortably, we hear the dread summons—"Thou fool, this day is thy life required of thee." Let us always be prepared for death, for then we will be living a right life. Let us ever be able to say "Merciful Father, we are in thy keeping. Thou hast given life, and thou also canst take away; therefore Thy will not mine be done." To-day we live, to-morrow we die. "Nay, as long as the body lasts, which groans in receiving pain, and exults in inflicting it, which throbs, and loves, and hates, and pities, and struggles through life's few short hours. Nay, not so long. Minutes. Less than these, a breath. In the swift radiation of a star, that which was animated by these passions and conditions is cold and dead and useless to itself for evermore. Farewell to it. Truly "we are such stuff as dreams are made of and our little life is rounded with a sleep." Aye, aye, but this dream will become a living reality to God's chosen few. The future life is to that of the present time, a grand, sublime, and perfect Ideal. "Eye hath not seen or ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for thim that love him." It is something away, above, and beyond us in our lowly flesh-burdened condition of the present life. We must work up to it, prepare for it, and not drag it down and make it part and parcel in all the sordid cares of the life around us. There could be no wordy strifes and contentions, if the truth were ever exalted to its proper position. The Bible is full of beautiful imagery—eloquence, pathos, poetry. Facts—truths are not presented naked, so as to startle and shock the mind, but on the contrary are clothed in raiment of light. Let us try to imitate the Bible characters in this. Let us raise our thoughts, our actions, our very selves above this life of death around us, up to accordance with life everlasting. If we be "pilgrims and strangers," then we have just so much part in this present life as will fit us for the next—no more. Let us pause and choose. Shall we strive for the pleasures and profits of this life—bound our ambitions, aspirations and hopes within this present life which ends in hopeless, irretrievable death? or if it be necessary shall we deny ourselves to the extent of becoming outcasts as it were, and soar so far above the cares and evils that environ us, that death would become a thing desirable, that seemingly we might the sooner reap the fruition of our hope. Pause and choose.

Conference Notices.

The Second Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in the Abrahamic Faith, will be held, the Lord willing, at the Jameson school house, one and one-half miles east of Fisher's Station, commencing Friday evening, June 12, and continuing over Sunday. All lovers of Bible truth are cordially invited to attend. Brother A. M. Smith of Otsego, and other preaching brethren are expected. Those coming by rail on the G. R. & I. R. R., will inquire for W. W. Jameson. Teams will be in waiting at the depot at Fisher's Station on Friday and Saturday. By order of Executive Board.

M. A. WOODWARD, Sec.

The third quarterly Conference of the church of God in Indiana will be held (D. V.) at Antioch, Marshall county, five miles south of Plymouth, and three miles north of Argos. Commencing at 10:30 o'clock, A. M., on Friday, June 12, 1885, and continue over the following Sunday. All are invited. Come and make the meeting a success.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Sec.

The next annual meeting of the Michigan Church Conference will be held, the Lord willing, at the Brick School House 3½ miles North of Mendon, St. Joseph County, commencing Thursday evening June 4, 1885, and continuing over Sunday.

All that are interested in the truth are cordially invited to attend and the brethren and sisters of Michigan are urged to make a special effort to be present at this meeting.

Let none remain away through fear of being a burden to those that entertain the conference, as arrangements will be made to provide for a large number, and all who come will receive a hearty welcome.

Mendon is on the Grand Rapids and Indiana Rail Road, twenty-one miles South of Kalamazoo. Trains will be met at the depot in Mendon on Thursday, to convey passengers to the place of meeting, all are requested to be on hand that day if possible, but any coming later will be met if they will inform the writer of the day and train on which they expect to arrive. An effort will be made to obtain a reduction in rail road fare, and those desiring the benefits of such reductions or any other information in regard to this meeting will please address the undersigned at Mendon.

By order of the Executive Board.

H. S. MILLER, Sec.

The April number of of Hebraica closed the first volume. The Managing Editor feels warranted in continuing its publication. The first number of Volume II. will be issued October 1st. This postponement (from July) is made, in order that the subscription-years of the Old Testament Student and Hebraica may be the same; the new volume of the former beginning in September, that of he latter in October. It is hoped that the friends of Semitic study in America will manifest, in a practical manner, their interest in this undertaking. With the support which it ought to receive, Hebraica will grow more and more valuable. Shall it not receive this support? For such help as may be rendered by those interested in its success, the Editor and Publisher will be greatly obliged. It is understood that subscriptions already paid are extended in accordance with the new arrangement. William R. Harper, Managing Editor, Morgan Park, Ill.

REMEMBER

That we will send THE RESTITUTION to the poor, at their request, so long as we can get the means to publish the paper. Let all our brethren who have means to use in sending the good news to others, send us the name of some friend or relative, and send us an extra dollar, to send the paper to them. If you cannot think of any such persons send the money, and we will apply it where it will be appreciated and return blessings on the donor.

REMEMBER

When sending your remittance that many sums of money are lost every year by the careless manner in which many send their subscriptions to newspapers; so please get a Post Office Money Order, a Bank Draft, an Express Money Order, or have your letter Registered. Do not send Bank Checks, as it costs us from twenty-five to forty cents to collect each one. If you are compelled to send postage stamps buy those of the one, or two cent denominations. We do not want large ones.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Agent.

The Church of God at Cleveland, O., will hold meetings at 10:30 a. m. every Sunday (D. V.) in Bland and Heller's Block, Room 20, 476½ Ontario Street, Corner of Bolivar, north of Central Market. Seats free. Brethren from abroad or like faith and all searchers after truth are welcome

The Church of God, meets regularly for worship and public instruction, in the things pertaining to the "Kingdom of God, and name of Jesus Christ," at American Hall, 176 Grand St., Brooklyn, E. D., New York, at 10:30 a. m., for conference, "breaking of bread and prayers" and 7:30 p. m. to "preach the word."

A LITTLE WHILE.

"He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Rev. xxii. 20.

"Quickly," beloved I know thine heart is beating
With deep emotions to behold my face;
But for "a little while" will thou not spend the tidings
Of the sweet message of my love and grace?

Fear not, beloved, mine eye is ever watching;
Thy tears are numbered in my deep, deep love;
Thy weary sighs, and all thine heart's sad yearnings,
Are recorded by me in heaven above.

Trust, then, beloved, I know the world frowns coldly;
But this must only thrice more meet me,
Earth's broken links make heaven's affections stronger;
The cross will make the crown more bright for thee.

Look up, beloved; lend firmly on the following;
Then canst not sink beneath life's troubled sea.
Look not than shalt thou learn the needful lesson,
How my own hand hath planned thy path for thee.

Rest, rest, beloved, thy head upon my bosom,
Lean on my arm and tell thy griefs to me:
My heart is thine in all the full perfection
Of its pitying tone else could give to thee.

Weep not, beloved, because thou yet must tarry;
Will thou not serve me heart and hand mean while?
Some I are around thee glue in lonely sorrow;
Comfort thou not give one kindly look or smile?

Go forth, beloved! Life's journey is short;
Crowned hearts throng most bless the path below;
Fond hopes once cherished, now by death destroyed,
Know'st thou not a balm to soothe their woe?

Yes, yes, beloved, I read thee right; it's glad answer:
Yes, thou will do the work of love for me.
"A little while," and earth's sad scenes of sorrow
Shall change to glory bright, prepared for thee.

Then, then, beloved, heaven's courts shall ring
Triumphant "hallelujahs" thou shalt raise;
There shalt thou gaze upon my face, and utter,
"Knowing as known," pour forth thine endless praise.

A Letter from Bro. Macsillamani to Bro. Leclar, of Mauch Chunk, Pa.

NAGERCOIL, Jan. 22, 1885.

Bro. Leclar:

Your kind letter of November 23, 1884, and the packet of papers including the tracts "The Warning" and "Christ's Kingdom," were waiting my arrival and return from Madras, where I had been on a visit to Bro. J. Spence, and other Christian brethren, and especially to proclaim in distant towns and villages, the glorious truths of the gospel, most graciously revealed to me, and widely to circulate the "Advent and Life" publications both Tamil and English in other places where they have not been sent hitherto. The Holy Spirit has enabled me to preach successfully the most precious truths "Life and Immortality only in Christ," "the personal coming of the Lord to reign in his kingdom on earth," etc., among the Christians of different denominations, and heathens. I have every hope that the truths we now advocate will soon spread and find toleration among other sectarians who so much stand against us at present. I reached home on the evening of the 8th inst., in good health and strength, and had a safe and happy meeting with my dear family and flock after a separation of six weeks. During this short period I travelled upwards of eleven hundred miles by rail, transit and other ways, and visited several important places such as Palamcottah, Tanjore, Madras, Jalarpet, Erode, Tuchinopolly, Streumgum, Dindigul, etc., and proclaimed the glorious doctrines of the true gospel of Christ. One of the main objects of my travelling among the strangers in distant places was to be acquainted with Christian friends and chiefly with Mission native agents who would become helpers in circulating our publications.

Thanks be to God that I have, during this preaching tour, got acquainted with friends in not fewer than ten Protestant Missionary Societies in Tamil country who have most willingly consented to circulate the Life and Advent publications in their localities. Now I am glad to state that I am thus enabled to circulate all over South India and Ceylon, our Tamil publications and the English pamphlets and tracts which are sent to my address by my Christian brethren in America and England, while I myself reside at Nagercoil or in any corner of the earth where God will appoint to me as my field of personal labor. The subject of our "Tamil Bible Banner" monthly, published under the auspices of the Bible Banner Association in Philadelphia, Pa., America, "The Tamil Quarterly Journal of Prophecy" edited under the auspices of "The World's Crisis" Association in Boston, and Rev. I. C. Wellcome's Tamil tracts, was brought to the notice of the people wherever I went, and there was a general expression of sympathy and desire to get and read our publications.

I regret very much that I have not been able to write to you on a few occasions, I remember I have received your papers and packets of tracts. I well recollect that I have once received three dozens of the copies of your valuable pamphlet "Christ's Kingdom" and a few copies of the tract "The Warning" which were duly distributed by me and sent to different places in South India and Ceylon, to be freely circulated among the English speaking communities there. Again, I am to thank you for the packet which contained thirty-two copies of the newly published paper "Words of Truth," Vol. I. No. 1, most of which have been sent out for distribution. I feel thankful to you because you thus encourage me in the Lord's work by sending your publications.

No doubt the vernacular versions of some of your tracts and especially Christ's Kingdom" will do much good among my countrymen who do not understand English.

THE RESTITUTION regularly comes to my hands. I derive much interest and instruction by reading it. Please give my hearty thanks to the Christian brethren who support this valuable journal, and to Brother S. A. Chaplin, its able Editor. The accompanying copy of my report will show what kind of work I do for the spread of the gospel of my Divine Redeemer's kingdom, for the speedy coming of which I always pray. The glorious coming of our Lord is the object of my constant heart desire and request. Let us work while it is day, night comes when no one can work. The most noble work is that which is done for the glory of our Divine Master, and for the spread of the truth relating to his coming kingdom. I thank God that he has enlightened my mind and sent me as a chosen vessel to co-operate as a fellow laborer with such excellent men like yourself, and other American brethren. I am amidst the enemies of truth like a brush amidst a flame of burning fire. They are not sleeping, but continue to publish scandals and misrepresentations against me. As a fact of instance, I give you the following paragraph which has appeared in a local newspaper, "Cochin Argus" January 8, 1885:—"A pastor and a catechist have become the leading advocates of a doctrine called "conditional Immortality" in these quarters, teaching and preaching that the souls of unbelievers are annihilated at death, and the spirits of the good enter into a profound slumber till the resurrection day. This is a pernicious and groundless teaching indeed. It is a pity that they preach in such an ambiguous style that the illiterate and uninitiated are led astray to believe that there is no soul, no heaven, no hell, etc. The consequence of the teaching is of course fatal. We should think the Travancore District Committee will open their eyes and see the effects of Rev. C. Macsillamani's teaching. We hear that Mr. Macsillamani is gone to Madras to suggest to make Nagercoil his headquarters in South Travancore."

I fondly hope you will continue to encourage me in my feeble labors, carried on for the spread of the kingdom in this most benighted heathen land, and help me in publishing our very instructive and interesting tracts, which I hope will do immense good among Sectarian Christians as well as among the heathen. Please remember me in your prayers, that God may help me to stand steadfast unto the end, fighting the good fight of faith. God has blessed me with a family of nine children and wife, and provides most mercifully our daily necessities of life. We remember you and other brethren and sisters in Christ in America in our family prayers regularly kept morning and evening. Please will you inform me something concerning yourself, family, and the Church which you belong to.

We do not know each other face to face, but we do know the same precious Savior, whom we serve in this world and together will praise him in his coming kingdom. May the Lord bless you abundantly and make you a blessing to many is my daily prayer. With my best Christian regards to yourself and friends, I remain your brother in Christ.

C. MACSILLAMANI.

REPORT.

It is now two years since the first number of the Tamil Bible Banner was printed and sent out. This was the first tract ever published in Tamil if not in all the vernaculars of India on the life and advent subjects. Since 31 tracts on these gospel themes have been prepared and of them 30,500 copies of 2,612,200 pages were published and extensively circulated. The expense on their publication has been defrayed by those two venerable servants of God, Col. Armstrong and J. Spence Esq., of Madras, under the patronage of the "Bible Banner" Association in Philadelphia, U. S. A. A few of Eld. I. C. Wellcome's excellent tracts have been rendered into Tamil and Telugu and published with the money he had sent for the object. Some of our other Tamil tracts have been printed and published in Telugu for the benefit of the numerous population who speak that language. I was happy to receive 17,000 copies of English pamphlets, tracts, papers, etc., of 224,575 pages from the life and advent believers in America and England for free circulation. Most of them were sent by Bro. I. C. Wellcome of Yarmouth and the Advent Christian Publishing Society in Boston, U. S. A. Many together with the vernacular publications which I regularly receive from Bro. J. Spence have been given away and despatched by mail and express to be freely circulated in other places of South India and Ceylon. In the west they are circulated as far as Trevandrum, Quilon, Cottayam, Tellicherry, Dotacommand, Coimbatore, and to eastward they are sent to Palamcottah, Sivagiri, Christianpettah, Madura, Dendigal, Salem, Toreand, Vellore, Tanjore, Hydrabad and to different places in Ceylon. The expenses of mailing these publications have been defrayed by help rendered by Bro. J. Spence and another friend in Australia whose name and address is until now an entire mystery to me. A Christian sister in America helped me with her mite a one dollar bill the value of which was paid by an American gentleman who resides in Travancore. This amicable friend has also promised to pay me the value of any American dollar bill that I would send him. Wherever these tracts were sent they have produced much excitement among the people. They are very eagerly read by all especially by the Christians. They have been really proved to be the Divine means of bringing many into the knowledge of the glorious doctrines of the true gospel of Christ. Both by means of our preaching and the literature we publish the long entertained faith of many has been shaken, with the false traditional theology in regard to the nature of man, his future destiny and the kingdom of God. Many are induced anxiously to search the Scriptures for obtaining more light on these important themes. Truth of what I have stated above may clearly be proved by reading the following few extracts quoted from letters received from friends who help me as tract distributer, "I received the favor again of your letter and the first supply of books. I distributed them here to Christians and some to heathen friends. They received joyfully and read them diligently. God's kingdom is at hand. The Savior's coming is daily drawing nigh. Our Lord's personal appearance is clearly taught in many of these pamphlets. They are I see prepared by able and noble hands. We all send plenty thanks for them. In the Reading Memorial Hall we meet every Sunday and talk on these subjects and discuss upon their topics." Please occasionally if not regularly send me these tracts and advent papers, as my mind is more attached now to these subjects and is quite willing to devote its leisure on such divine thoughts." "Thanks for the papers and tracts you sent me. Though the American writers in the advent of our Lord seem rather sentimental yet I admire their thorough acquaintance with the Bible. I shall devote more time and then express my opinion on the subjects." "A small packet of the American publications I sent through a friend to Mrs. Ferguson (mother of Mr. Harold Ferguson, Guardian of the Royal Princes) and she reads them, and some I hear she has sent to Major Kitchen's house (Commanding officer), so that it gets into European circles also." I was reading that pamphlet containing the two lectures on the "mortality of the soul." It has quite unsettled my attitude to the doctrine in question. They open quite a new and yet a Scriptural doctrine. "I am glad that the tracts are progressing in circulation among educated men, and that friends are interested in such readings, and they begin to talk to other leading men about such topics."

We have translated some of the valuable life and Advent tracts and pamphlets, and got them in Tamil manuscripts and continue to translate others. Want of funds makes us delay their publication and therefore I appeal to all sympathising Christian friends into whose hands this report may happen to fall, to help us in our labor for the glory of our Heavenly Master whose advent I believe is soon approaching.

My Christian Brethren and Sisters in America, England, etc., have during the two last years kindly given me a large share of their love and benevolence and by means of their prayers, books, tracts, and papers, and money helped me a good deal in my work, and made me more useful than I could otherwise be. So I tender my hearty thanks to them and prayer to the Almighty Father to reward them for this Christian generosity. Especially my deep thanks are due to Bro. J. Spence and Col. Armstrong of Madras for their constant concern and help.

That our Almighty God may abundantly bless the seed of truths and render it powerful to put down all the strongholds of Satan is my humble and earnest prayer. Our monthly, the Bible Banner and some other tracts have been published in Tamil and Telugu. I am now trying to get them put into Malayalam for the benefit of the numerous people who speak that language, 100 miles along the western coast. This is the language of the inhabitants of Travancore Cochin the Malabar districts, among whom there are more than 400,000 Syrian Christians, and numerous Roman Catholic and Protestant churches.

Readers God is blessing our work here, may he stir your hearts there to be inclined to help us.

C. MACSILLAMANI.

Beloved Brethren:—

It is with pleasure that I take my pen for the purpose of communicating a few words of comfort to the loved ones of earth—the purchase of the Redeemer's blood—who are sighing for Beulah's blissful plains. Be of good cheer, for ye are loved by God, your Father, beloved by his Son, your Elder Brother; beloved by angels which encircle the throne of the Omnipotent Deity! Be not dismayed whilst surrounded by such an array of strength; though earth and all its powers may oppose, you have naught to fear whilst you tread the pilgrim's path, marked out by the Son of the Father's love, who was himself "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief,"—grief in part caused by those of his own household!

Hark, ye spotless ones! Remember it was the joy which the Father set before him, that enabled him to endure the cross, and all the scoffs and contumely that an apostate and rebellious people were capable of heaping upon him. Glory be to his name, that we have the same joy set before us, which is earth restored and peopled exclusively with the elect—the family of God, sinless and immortal, to comfort console, sustain and compel us to quicken our steps, whilst walking through sorrow's vale, for the Highlands of Glory!

O, ye priceless gems! upon whose minds has been stamped the impress of our Divine Redeemer, lift up your heads, for your redemption is at hand! Soon he will sound his mighty trumpet, louder than the peals of ten thousand thunders, shaking the beauty kingdoms of earth from sea to seat

Hark, don't you hear the rumbling of his chariot wheels, as they roll in majestic splendor down the burning path-way of the heavens? O, listen, ye jewels of a Redeemer's purchase, to that sweet music which is now sounding through the air! Behold him as he vacates his Father's throne, and steps into the car of glory, whose wheels roll in fire, clothed with the glory of the Father, and accompanied by thousands of angels! Before him the pestilence goeth forth, and burning coals at his feet. He drives asunder the nations, and the everlasting mountains are scattered, and the perpetual hills bow at his presence! His glory covers the heavens, the earth is full of his praise.

Sunday School Lesson.

The following lesson was prepared by Brother William Mills, of Andover, Dakota, and used in his class Sunday, March 22, 1885.

What is the reward of the righteous? Where will they receive their reward, on earth or in heaven?

Ans. Heb. 9, 24. You can no more go where Christ is than the children of Israel could go into the Most Holy Place where the High Priest went once a year. See St. John 7, 33, 34; 8, 21; 13, 33.

So our reward must be on earth then. Prov. 10, 30; 11, 31; Psalms 37, 11, 29, 34; Daniel 7, 27; Matt. 5, 5; Rev. 5, 9, 10.

When will we receive our reward, at death or the resurrection?

Ans. Matt. 13, 40-43; 16 27; 22, 30; 25, 31-34; 2 Tim. 4, 1; 1 Peter 4, 5.

What will be our reward?

Ans. Matt. 10, 28; Mark 10, 30; Luke 18, 30; 20, 35, 36; 22, 29, 30; St. John 5, 28; 17, 17-21; Col. 3, 4; 2 Tim. 4, 8; 1 Peter 1, 3-5, 13; 5, 4; 1 John 3, 2; 1 Cor. 6, 1-5; Phil. 3, 20, 21; Rev. 3, 12, 21; 20. 6; St. John 14, 3.

What is the place Christ has gone to prepare?

Ans. Heb. 11, 10; Rev. 3, 12; 21, 2-3, 10.

Will they ever have free access to the tree of life which Adam was driven from?

Ans. Rev. 2, 7; 22, 2, 12-14.

Gifts for the King.

The wise may bring their learning,
The rich may bring their wealth,
And some may bring their greatness,
And some may bring strength and health.
We too would bring our treasures
To offer to the King;
We have no wealth or learning:
What shall we children bring?

We'll bring him hearts that love Him,
We'll bring him thankful praise,
And young souls quickly striving
To walk in holy ways:
And these shall be the treasures
We offer to the King,
And these are gifts that even
The poor, a child may bring.

We'll bring the little deeds
We have to do each day:
We'll try our best to speak true
At home, at school, at play;
And bring the little sacrifice
We make for love of Him;
Yes, these a child may bring.

The Marys of the Bible.

Miriam (from the Hebrew) the name of the sister of Aaron and Moses is the same as Mary (from the Greek) in the New Testament. Six persons of this name are mentioned in the New Testament. Dr. Young specifies seven, but a collation of texts shows that "Mary the (wife) of Cleophas" and "Mary the mother of James and Joses" are the same (Matt. xxvii. 56; Mark xv. 40; John xix. 25. Jesus after his resurrection "appeared first to Mary Magdalene;" and this, so far as we have any evidence, was the first human name pronounced by our risen Lord (Mark xvi. 9; John xx. 11-16. The last time Mary the mother of Jesus is mentioned is in Acts i. 13, 14; and it is pleasant to think that the last place we find her is in a prayer meeting.

Over eighteen years ago we wrote the following verses for a Sunday-school concert in Waterloo, P. Q., Canada, and give them here now, thinking that while the Marys among the readers of the Herald may be interested in them it might be that some Sunday-school teachers would be glad to get them to work into a concert exercise. Seven little girls could take it—one of them bearing the name of Mary, to whom could be assigned the last verse.

Among Judea's vine-clad hills
In older time a virgin dwelt;
As mother of our blessed Lord
No tongue can tell the joy she felt:
Her name was Mary.—Luke i. 30, 31.

In Bethany two sisters lived
Who with the Savior loved to meet;
But one especially desired
To sit with reverence at his feet:
Her name was Mary.—Luke x. 39.

When on the cross the Savior hung,
Among the mourners gathered there
The wife of Cleophas was one
Who rales to Heaven an earnest prayer:
Her name was Mary.—John xix. 25.

When on the tiled,—the appointed day—
The Savior from the tomb went free,
One who was first beside the cross
Was first our risen Lord to see;
Her name was Mary.—Mark xvi. 9.

When up to heaven our Lord had gone
And men went forth to "preach the word,"
Among the "helpers" in this work
Was one who labored in the Lord:
Her name was Mary.—Rom. xvi. 6.

When Peter from the prison went—
Delivered by an angel's hand,—
The house of one he quickly sought
Who entertained a praying band;
Her name was Mary.—Acts xii. 12.

And when our Lord in glory comes
As King of kings and Judge of men,
I know of one who hopes to stand
Among those holy women then!
Her name is Mary.

Dear Children:

The beautiful spring has come unfolding to us nature's lovely children each dressed in a different hue. The pure snowdrop, buttercup, daisy, and the sweet modest violet whose delicious fragrance whispers to every admirer, seek no further, though its dwelling is in the shade, it sips the early dew, and feeding long on the sparkling drops, its perfume ever abideth, even when decay has thrown its last shadow over it. Nature has not given this little flower a brilliant dress, but not the less beautiful is it, for purple suggests royalty. Dear children, "consider there for they toil not, neither do they spin, think how they grow" for Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Only a short time since they were hid in the cold clods of the earth until the ruler of the day with his bright beams of light and warmth loosed the bands of darkness, and bid them spring forth. What a wonderful restoration this is; and yet these are only the offspring of nature. They are frail, and will perish, when the bleak wind passes over them they are gone. God in his wonderful wisdom created the earth to be a mother to feed and nourish them for a season. But there are dwellers in the dust of the earth who are God's precious children, his beloved to whom he giveth sleep: and if they sleep they do well, because their flesh is resting in hope that they might attain unto the resurrection from among dead ones. The sweet singer of Israel sang, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness," and he whose name signifies "one who weeps", said, "oh that my words were now written! Oh that they were printed in a book! that they were graven with an iron pen, and lead in the rock for ever! For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, and though after my skin worms destroy this body yet in my flesh shall I see God. Whom I shall see for myself and mine eyes shall behold, and not another, though my reins within me are consumed with earnest desire for that day. When he uttered these words he did not think God would cause them to be written in his precious book of life, and his name to be kept in sweet remembrance for ever.

This dear weeping one with others are gone to ashes, or dust, but the Sun of righteousness will soon arise, the great Ruler of the day, for which all other days were made, he will give them beauty for ashes, they shall weep no more, for sorrow and sighing shall flee away, the oil of joy shall they receive for the spirit of heaviness. Beautiful, indeed, will these glorious children of the resurrection be, their faces will shine like the sun; their raiment white and glistening. Their feet will be powerful, able to stand on the tempestuous ocean. When they touch a barren spot it will blossom like the rose they will be like the Lord Jesus, and can die no more. All that Jesus did, they will be given the power to do, because they have been faithful over that which is least. God will make them rulers over much. Some will rule five great cities, others ten, and will be made higher than any King or Emperor on the earth. Can you imagine, dear children, such are hid in the cold clods of the earth; but they live in God's memory! they are not dead to him: he knows where to find them, God never sleeps, therefore he never forgets them. He loves them dearer than ever mother could love you, and the precious ones know nothing about how long they are taking rest in sleep. Soon they will hear the sweet whisper, "The Master is come and calleth for thee," then they will look into their little narrow dusty beds and sing. "Death you once stung me, but where is now thy sting? grave you once held me with your iron bars but where is now thy victory?" This is the beautiful spring of a new creation, for which all who love the Lord Jesus are waiting. These of whom I have been writing were once children like you, but, "remembered their Creator in the days of their youth," seeking the Lord early they found him, and when sin presented itself to them they would say, shall I do this great wickedness, and sin against my God? and constantly their earnest prayer would be, "Search me, O God, and know my heart, try me and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me and lead me into the way everlasting."

Dear children, treasure these things in your hearts, and God give you understanding is the prayer of,

Your affectionate Teacher,

E. COFFMAN.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR
Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENT:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end it establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead, the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked (eternal life only through Christ), and many other kindred truths. Also a yearly bible of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Salvation.—What it is, and who it is What Saves and How.

The salvation of the gospel is from sin and from the penalty of sin, namely death. Under the figure of the generative process according to the flesh, the inordinate desire is spoken of the conception of that desire as the begetting of sin, and "when sin has had its perfect work it bringeth forth death." The perfect work or the completed work analogously corresponds in its time period to the "carrying period" in natural generation, and is the allotted time and space given for repentance and "doing the first works" which lead to the opposite result, or life when grace shall have done its perfect work and shall have brought forth from the dead state or death or from among the dead. The first begetting is spoken of as being from below and from the earth and earthy, the second as being from above, and from heaven and heavenly. The earth and all that belongs to it is spoken of as under the blight of sin, and all its products partake of the effects of this blight. If not actually dead they are under the death blight and on the way to death and corruption.

The begetting spiritual or the begetting from above thus referred to is God's work and the person thus begotten has no more to do with it than he had to do with his begetting according to the flesh. It is true that he is begotten by the word of truth addressed to his heart and mind, but he is no more responsible for its finding lodgement there, for the preparation for it, and for all the vital processes that result in incipient life than the babe has for its incipient life, or the germinal plant springing from its seed source. When the regenerate person looks up to God and asks "what will thou have me to do," he has already been begotten as much as the plant-germ has begun its organic life when it first begins its struggle upward to the light and its source the sun.

Its growth, the germ-growth, from that point on depends upon whether its look and struggle upward is continued or not, and just so with the person who has been spiritually begotten or regenerated. The important difference between the animate and inanimate analogy at this point is that from this point on the spiritual animate growth and struggle becomes a conscious growth and struggle, while that cannot be affirmed of the inanimate, although implied in Christ's language of the mustard-plant-growth where he says "If ye had faith as a grain of the mustard-plant, etc.," which if it teaches nothing else confirms what I have been saying of the analogy between the two forms of the generative origin and growth.

The presumption then is that the new spiritual life, whether instinctively like the plant or rationally in consciousness of this new state of existence (for faith is a hypostasis or actual state of existence) will struggle and bend all its energies to reach the maturity of growth that will enable it to use its sun of righteousness face to face, and rejoice with the same unspeakable joy of fruition. If then we be on the way to salvation we have first been regenerated or rebegotten "by the word of God unto a living (not lively) hope, and not of ourselves. It is the grace of God" that does it, and are in the condition or hypostasis called faith, and being sentient, reasoning beings, are conscious of the dual struggle we are waging so clearly and wonderfully delineated by the master pen of Paul—the old corruption within which the new germ-life awoke, and by which it must necessarily be environed, and which in some way fosters the growth of the new life spiritual as the rotting seed does its new life during the germinative and formative period, before it reaches its organic perfection—a struggle against those corrupting environments of the flesh, a struggle which gives us a root downward to nourish and sustain the groping struggle upward, "For we walk by faith and not by sight"—a struggle that if victorious, asserts its victory in making this very corruption of earth the nutriting aliment in the alchemy of God to nourish a life that shall ultimately lay a testative hold upon the earth with its regenerate root, assimilating and utilizing all its natural diversity of good stored away latent by the divine hand and divine thoughtfulness for such a day, to make fruit for this same life in the upper air of the coming heavenly kingdom.

But this struggle implies a mastery, not a sudden and spasmodic mastery for the moment, but such a mastery as we see exemplified in the self-assertion of the germinal life, a concentration first of all the vital forces at the germ-center, preparatory to the bursting of its integument that environ it, and so we find in the Scriptural order of things the first step forward in the divine life after the assertion of the good purpose to repentance to be the attaining of a mastery over ourselves; and in doing this the regenerated, repentant faithful person becomes in the Scriptural nomenclature "a king of righteousness." But this is a life struggle, and is no more decided than is the struggle of the germinal life until it comes forth from its clay environments into the full light of day. "In the day of God" he that overcometh will see the King in his glory, will come forth in organic beauty from among his dead, clay environments, to rejoice in the effulgence of "The sun of righteousness," and bear fruit to the glory of God, and right at this point in the struggle for the mastery comes in the necessity for tribulation. Tribulation in one word embodies and expresses all the opposing forces that lead to disintegration and corruption and is as necessary to the vitality of the germinal spiritual growth as the opposing forces that lead to corruption are to the germinal seed vitality. Hear Paul on this question. "Thou thought: [illegible] that which thou sowest does not make life (live) unless it shall have died." "And God giveth it a body even as he will and to each one his own body." Tribulation then is part of God's good purpose, to give you an "expedaument," being worked out in the inscrutable alchemy of his special providence. Let us be satisfied therefore to be growing in grace, "Knowing that tribulation worketh patient endurance, and patient endurance approved value (God's approval namely) and approved value hope, and a hope that doth not make ashamed, because the love of God is being shed abroad with our hearts through Holy Spirit that hath been given us."

Then God is the author of our salvation: Christ, "the last Adam," by a generic spiritual process analagous to the first Adamic one, becomes the genuine father as well as the legal elder brother; and the spiritual begetting or "the begetting from above" having occurred, "the carrying period" begins with its trials and tribulations and dangers, actual death and corruption corresponding to the analogous changes of the seed growth; "the resurrection" or "the re-awaking" of the dead or "from among the dead," according as the first or second resurrection is spoken of, being the birth of the spirit or the bringing forth into the full consciousness of the "day of God" and all its spiritual environments, when "we shall know as we are known, and see as we are seen."

CHAS. GARDNER.

SAVING FAITH.—NO I.

The natural dispositions of Hope and Trust cannot be allowed to hold the place of the One Faith and the One Hope of the Gospel.

These dispositions exist among all nations, and are inherent in man, irrespective of his knowledge. They are possessed by the ignorant Lap or degraded Hottentot, as well as by the best educated Briton. The devotee that kneels before the Pope or Grand Lama, or that prostrates himself before the shrine of a wooden god, and the Fakir who endures the most prolonged and excruciating tortures, or his brother that casts himself beneath the wheels of Juggernaut, have as unfaltering a faith as a Daniel who knows that his God is able to deliver him from the mouth of the lions, or a Stephen who beholds the Son of Man standing at the right hand of God. The hope of a Job or a Paul is equaled in sincerity and strength by the Roman Catholic's hope of escape unearthed from the fires of purgatory, or the Buddhist's hope of attaining to eternal annihilation. A mother's love is proverbial in every country, and the sincerity of Mohammedans and Pagans has made the Christian blush and own that superstition is as powerful as faith. Yet would you say of a man noted for faith, hope, and love, and sincerity, but a heathen, that his salvation was as certain as it would be if he should become a Christian in deed and in truth? If it were so, the Gospel would not be to him the power of God unto salvation, for his salvation would be certain before he heard the gospel, and altogether independent of whether there was a gospel or not. These qualities would be to him a Savior, rendering Christ's work unnecessary for him. But however loving and confiding and sincere men may be, they are naturally "altogether unprofitable." Naturally "there is none righteous, no, not one;" and without righteousness there can be no eternal salvation.

In what respect, reader, does your position and mine differ from that of the parties whose faith, and hope, and love, and sincerity we have just regarded as unable to save them? If in aught it differ, it cannot arise from our natural dispositions; for our dispositions will no more originate and accomplish our salvation than theirs will save them. By nature we are the children of wrath, even as they are. In our flesh there is no good thing which can be to us a savor to life everlasting. In what does your position and mine differ from theirs? In no respect whatever, unless in this, that their faith and hope are staid on vanities that cannot help them, while the Word which the Almighty has sent forth for salvation has reached our ears, and been most lovingly and sincerely laid hold on by us with our heart and with our whole soul. Is there this difference? Are we quite sure that we do believe the Word which God has sent forth for salvation, and are we trusting in it only? Or are we trusting in the words of man, or leaning on the goodness of our intentions; or our dispositions, or our works? or is our faith and conduct fashioned after the example of the multitude, or of our forefathers, because we suppose our forefathers and the multitude cannot be wrong? For us, at all events, there is only one way of salvation, and that is to believe what God requires us to believe, and to do whatever he requires at our hands; and there is only one way to ascertain what we must believe and do, and that is to hearken to those who have been sent into the world as his ambassadors to declare the way of salvation. Our fathers may be right, and our countrymen may be right, and our minister or our pastor may be right; but we know the apostles must be right, because God bore them witness, and to them, therefore, we shall listen as to the bearers of God's words. Is not this true wisdom? Our teachers, and co-religionists and forefathers, may be all good men, but they are not infallible any more than the Pope of Rome is, nor than we are; so that for ourselves to begin with, we will make sure, as far as we can, that our faith is "the faith delivered to the saints," knowing that by it we shall be saved, even as they.

There is a variety of ways of attaining this desirable assurance. We may study the revelations God has made, in the order in which they were delivered, and observe the development of the revelation of God's purpose from the foundation of the world. This is the natural way, and therefore the best, although it is very laborious. Another way is to seize upon a Scriptural summary of the faith preached for obedience in all the world, and submit it to a careful and candid scrutiny, in order that we may rightly comprehend the details of which it is the sum.

I promise to take the latter course, because it enables ordinary Bible readers to arrive sooner at results, having direct reference to their own position.

I.—THE FAITH PREACHED FOR OBEDIENCE UNTO SALVATION.

Paul wrote to the Romans i. 13-15; that he desired to have fruit at Rome, and that, with that view, he was ready to preach the gospel there, as he had done in other parts of Asia and Europe. Two or three years afterwards, when he arrived at Rome, what did he preach? He sent for the Jews, Acts xxviii. 23; and "expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses and the Prophets, from morning till evening." We may therefore take this as a summary of the faith preached for the salvation of the Jews; and from the succeeding verses in the same chapter, we are shut up to the conclusion that the same words of salvation were preached to the Gentiles, for "Paul abode in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him" (verse 31). This is the Word of salvation which, being sent first to the Jew and second to the Gentile, must be heard by them with their ears, and understood with their hearts, in order that they may be converted and healed by God (verse 26-28).

We notice that this is the last account set down, in the Scriptures, of what was made known, by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, to all nations for the obedience of faith Rom. xvi. 26; and while doing so, we think it would be wrong to overlook the fact, that the very same words are used to record what was preached to the Samaritans, on the first occasion on which the gospel was preached to any not of the house of Israel. Philip went down to Samaria, and preached Christ unto them Acts viii. 5; and verse 12; "when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptised both men and women."

If, then, we would be on a level with the believing Jews and Gentiles of Rome and of Samaria, we must believe the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, and, like the Samaritans, we must then be baptized "both men and women." What these "things" are, we will come to by and by; but, whatever they may be, we must believe them, in order that we may be converted and healed by God. Paul was sent to the Gentiles to "open their eyes, to turn them from darkness unto light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them that are sanctified" Acts xxvi. 18; and the way in which he did this in Rome, was by "preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ." From these testimonies we draw this conclusion, and set it down as sound doctrine, not to be gainsayed, nor evaded, nor neglected, that faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, is required in us that God may heal us,—that we may receive the forgiveness of sins and an inheritance among the sanctified. We must hear and believe the things concerning the name of the Lord: we must hear and believe the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ, and not omit the things concerning the kingdom of God.

Before going farther, we are reminded, that while the world was divided into two great classes—Jews and Gentiles—John, the preparer of the way of the Lord, had made and baptized Disciples among the Jews; and it may be interesting and profitable to notice what they believed, as John's disciples, and what they had further to believe and do, in order that they might become Christians.

John the Baptist preached saying, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven (or of God) is at hand" Matt. iii., adding that they should believe on him who should come after him, John i. 27; Acts xix. 4. Paul met about twelve of these disciples at Ephesus, and told them that he who should come is Christ Jesus, and when they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. The plan of conversion is obvious. They believed the kingdom of God, and had repented because of its being at hand, and they are waiting for him who should come. To this knowledge and faith is added the conviction that the coming One is Christ Jesus, and that salvation is to be found in his name, and then they are baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus. They are then in Christ, and their faith is the very same as we preached in Samaria and Rome, "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ." Thus in a third way do we arrive at the conclusion that in this phrase we have a true divinely inspired summary of Christian faith.

Do the terms aptly express our faith? If an inspired man were to write down shortly the essence of our faith, would he—could he—use the same words as expressive of it? Is there a body that adopts, as its creed, "We believe the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ?" If so, where is it? I am not charging error upon the creeds of the various religious communities of the present day. It is one thing to denounce error, and another to uphold the truth. More negation must of necessity be unsatisfactory; and if it were possible for a man to have unmasked, and gloried in the unmasking, of all the errors and shams and falsehoods in the world, yet might that man lack one thing—the knowledge of the truth which alone can save. Therefore, I do not seek to detect or expose errors in the creeds of the religious communities; but I point out, as a matter to be mourned and grieved over, and deplored and striven against, that the faith of the religious communities of the present day falls short—lamentably short—of the faith of the Romans and Samaritans and Ephesians already mentioned.

INFLUENCE.

If all the flowers in earthly bowers
Should die, and never bloom again,
Would not more sweetness yet remain
Than if there never had been flowers?

How many gentle, lovely lives,
And fragrant deeds that earth has known,
Were never writ in ink of stone;
And yet, their sweetness still survives!

—James Burbank.

A True Story.

"Oh, nurse, nurse!" cried a bright little girl, dressed in exquisite taste and simplicity, as they passed a high gate over which the flowers hung, "look, what lovely flowers!" and the blue-eyed child pointed to a bunch of roses, which filled the air with their fragrance.

"They are lovely, indeed," said the nurse; "but have you not flowers enough in the garden at home?"

"But I would so like to have that beautiful bunch," she exclaimed, so earnestly, that her eyes half filled with tears.

It was in the morning hour. The walk along the Ramsgate hills was the child's daily exercise. Each day she saw the beautiful roses, and each day she was sorely tempted to pluck them, but she knew they were not hers. They belonged to some one else.

"If you please, ma'am," said a voice beside her; and the gardener appeared at the gate. "I heard the little miss ask for the flowers, and I'll be after asking the master to let me give them to her."

"Oh, thank you," said the nurse. "That's very kind of you."

Lest the gardener might forget, that very day the child's mother wrote a note to the gentlemen who lived in the villa with the lovely garden, asking that her little girl might have a few roses. And the next morning the child entered the gate, and was allowed to pluck as many roses and violets as she liked. How happy she was as she darted around the flowery paths with a bird's joyousness, and what happy words fell from her lips!

Many, many years have passed since then. The gentlemen who let the child gather his roses is now Sir Moses Montefiore, and the child is—Queen Victoria! And when last year the baronet entered upon his one hundredth year, she and her eldest son, the Prince of Wales, were among the first to send him their kindly greetings. She had not forgotten that bunch of roses.

Dear Children:

You are daily before my imagination, and I feel a desire to nourish you with the word of life, as a tender mother would with food. For it is written, "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." I have written much about the friend of God, who is called the father of the faithful, but in this, I want to tell you something of peculiar interest about his nephew, whose name signifies "Hidden or wrapt up." After the death of his father he used to sojourn with his uncle, they both possessed a great number of cattle which caused strife among their herdsmen, this became a trial to the friend of God, and he said to his nephew, "Let no strife I pray thee be between us, for we are brethren, separate thyself from me. If thou take the left then I will go to the right, and his nephew looked toward the plain, which signifies "judgment," and seeing it was well watered everywhere, even as the garden of the Lord, he pitched his tent toward a city which name signifies "their secret." He had not dwelt there long, before himself, and all he possessed were taken captive by a king, whose name signifies, "A generation of bondage." When the tidings reached his dear uncle, he went with haste to rescue him, and returned as a mighty conqueror. On a certain day, just as the shadows of evening were falling, two angels came to the gate of the city, where the nephew of the friend of God was sitting. He entreated them to stay all night, which after some hesitation they did. I think at first he hardly recognized them as angels, but the wickedness of that place was great, which caused them to manifest their power in striking some of the inhabitants with blindness. The angels then told him, they were sent to destroy the city, and inquired, 'Hast thou any here besides?' Son-in-law, and thy sons, and thy daughters, and whatsoever thou hast in the city, bring out of this place, and he hastened to tell his daughters, and their husbands, but he seemed as one that mocked, they did not believe a word he said. And when the morning arose, the angels hastened him, saying, Arise, take thy wife, and thy two daughters, lest thou be consumed, and while he lingered, the angels laid hold upon his hand, and upon the hand of his wife, and upon the hand of his two daughters, the Lord being merciful unto him, and the angels brought him forth, and set him without the city, and said, escape for thy life, look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain, escape to the mountains, lest thou be consumed. And he said, Oh not so my Lord. Behold thou hast magnified thy mercy to me in saving my life, and I cannot escape to the mountains lest some evil take me, and I die, behold this city is near to flee unto, oh let me escape thither, and I shall live. And the angel said, See, I have accepted thee concerning this thing also, I will not overthrow this city for the which thou hast spoken. The sun was risen upon the earth, and no doubt those in the city who had been warned to flee, thought they were secure from all evil, and perhaps laughed at the folly of their father in coming at night to disturb them from their slumber. But as soon as the three had entered the spared city, which signifies, "Little," the Lord rained from heaven brimstone and fire, destroying utterly, four cities of the plain, 'each having a king,' and everything which grew upon the earth. And although the loving hand of the angel had grasped the hand of his wife, and his fostering care had shielded her from the destruction to come on the cities, yet she was not saved, because she had no faith in the word of the Lord, which said, "Look not behind thee," scarcely had the tender hand of the angel left her, when she became a pillar of salt, a monument on which many generations gazed. "Narrow is the way that leadeth unto life and few there be that find it." Children beloved, there is only way, and that is, to harken and obey—I want now to draw the contrast between the father of the faithful, and his nephew. The angels first visited the friend of God, and told him of the destruction of the cities as a secret, saying, shall I hide from my friend the thing which I do, for I know him, that he will command his children, and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, but to his nephew, it was a word of warning, flee for thy life, and it is written, God remembered his friend, and for his sake, delivered his nephew. Had he chosen the quietude of the plains of Mamre, instead of the confusion and sin of a city life, his righteous soul would not have been grieved daily in hearing, and seeing their unlawful deeds. He did not respect the word of the Lord, as his dear uncle, or he would have fled to the mountain as the angel told him. No, my children, like poor, frail human nature he wanted his own way, and even prayed for it, and where did it bring him? right in the midst of a fiery plain. How much better for him had he hearkened, and obeyed, then he could have looked down upon the destruction and rejoiced in the great salvation. No doubt fear tormented him while in the city, even as it did before entering it, for we read after the destruction, he no longer remained there, but dwelt in the mountain. If he had been like his dear uncle, who rose early to obey the word of the Lord, even though it was to sacrifice his only son, he did not linger, thinking must I lose all, neither did he desire his own way, but like our blessed Lord his action proved "not my will, but thine be done." When the angel told him they were going to destroy the cities of the plain, he did not even plead for the nephew, but only for those whom the Lord called righteous, he stood before the Lord, as their intercessor. He first said, if there be fifty, will thou also destroy, and not spare the place for the fifty righteous therein, that be far from the Lord, to slay the righteous with the wicked. Shall not the judge of all the earth do right? and the Lord said, I spare it for fifty righteous. He again entreated the Lord, saying, if there lack five of the fifty, will thou destroy it for lack of five, and the Lord said, I will not destroy it if there be forty-five righteous. Then again he said, if forty be found there, and the Lord said, I will save it for forty's sake. Still he continued to plead, oh let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak. If thirty be found there, and he said "I will not do it if thirty righteous be found there, then he said if twenty be found there, and the Lord said, I will not destroy it for twenty's sake, and again he said, Oh let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak but this once, if ten shall be found, and the Lord said I will not destroy it for ten's sake. Think of it, dear children, in five cities not ten righteous to be found, only one, and he saved so as by fire. "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where will the wicked and the ungodly appear." God has made his Word more honorable than all his great, and fearful name, and we cannot grieve the Lord more than by casting his words behind us. How very precious a righteous one is in his sight, "Every Word of God is pure," and the entrance of it giveth light, before you read it, pray this little prayer, O Lord, open thou mine eyes that I may behold wonderful things out of thy law.

Your affectionate Teacher.

Sunday School Lesson.

The following lesson was prepared by Brother William Mills, of Andover, Dakota, and used in his class, Sunday, March 15, 1885.

How are we saved by the gospel?

Ans. Mark 16. 15, 16, You will notice that you have got to believe in the promise and kingdom of Christ, and the resurrection, and the truth, before you are a fit subject to be baptized into Christ. You must believe the one gospel. Gal. 1. 6-9. The one faith. Eph. 4. 5; 2 Tim. 4. 1-4. Not be baptized and believe afterward. You cannot find it so stated. The apostles preached the whole gospel truth, and those believing were baptized into Christ. Acts 2. 37-41; 8. 12. You must be born of water. Jno. 3. 5: See the following; Acts 22. 16; Rom. 6. 3-7; 1 Cor. 6. 11; Gal. 3. 27; Eph. 5. 26-27; Col. 2. 12-14; Titus 3. 5; Heb. 10. 22; 1 Peter 1. 22, 23; 3. 21; Acts 3. 19, 21.

What is our duty after being baptised into Christ?

Ans. Matt. 10. 22; 24. 13; 1 Cor. 15. 1-2; 2 Peter 1. 4-11.

If we willingly give way to a sinful life after being baptized into Christ what then?

Ans. Heb. 6. 1-6; 10. 26-29; 2 Pet. 2. 20-22.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, May 27, 1885.

IN response to the requests of some of our brethren we are giving in successive numbers of our paper, some articles on the different translations of the Bible in the past centuries. Several of these communications are, as will be noticed, from the New York Observer, though some are from other sources.

A PRINTED treatise on "Saving Faith," has been sent by Bro. J. Cameron, of Edinburgh, Scotland. Owing to the vague, loose, and indefinite beliefs that have found place in the world, the close and pointed teachings of the writer of this article will probably be very opportune. The faith as once for all delivered to the saints is not a matter of secondary importance. The length of the treatise compels us to divide it into several parts. While contending for the faith, let us not lose sight of those Scriptures that enjoin upon us holiness of life and godly conversation.

THE New York Independent, of May 21, has devoted 24 columns to the discussion of the Revision of the Old Testament. There are five separate articles, of which we have copied the first, "The Revised Version of the Old Testament,"—into our paper for this week, and which was written by Robert Payne Smith, D. D., Dean of Canterbury. The second article, "How the Revision was made," is by Prof. Geo. E. Day, D. D., Secretary of the American company of Revisers. The third, "The Basis of the Original Text of the Old Testament," is by Prof. Howard Osgood, D. D. The fourth, "How the Revision improves important passages," is by Prof. John DeWitt, D. D. The fifth, and last, "The General Results of the Revision," is by Talbot W. Chambers, D. D. This number of the Independent is particularly valuable, as these articles embody a large amount of critical and special information in regard to the changes of words and expressions, as differing from the Common Version. We give our readers, as a specimen, a single chapter as it occurs in the Revision. Genesis i.

Literary Notices.

The Old Testament Student—The May number of this serial has come to hand. Like the different numbers of preceding volumes its articles are devoted to the discussion and elucidation of Old Testament subjects and themes. It is published at Morgan Park, Ill., $1.50 a year in advance.

The Genuine and the Counterfeit, the Real Foundation of Christianity.—This is a tract of 21 pages, clearly setting forth the truth that the foundation of Christianity was laid by Jehovah in that remarkable promise, or prediction, Gen. iii. 15; and that all the creeds of Heathen Mythology are so many perversions of this text by fleshly-minded idolators. Briefly and perspicuously is the foundation truth of redemption set forth that the promised seed of the woman is also the Son of God. This tract is written and published by our well-known and beloved Sister in the faith—Mrs. Carrie Williams. Price five cents each, or six copies 25 cts. Address the authoress 1021 N. 16th Street, St. Joseph, Mo.

SUBTLE ARGUMENTS EVASIONS OF TRUTH.

To all who "are taught of God," baptism has a meaning which the example and command of Christ confirms; then, as the Lord's Supper shows his death till he comes, so both his death burial and resurrection are embraced in the ordinance of baptism, Rom. vi. 3-5; Col. ii. 12. Yet it is argued and applied in disregard of all these facts.

This illustrates the course of some who evade "the record that God has given of his Son," Matt. i. Luke i.

Thus, the exaltation of Christ is made to turn on the reward for his obedience, rather than on his Sonship, etc., Eph. ii. 5, 21. Such ignore the facts that all "the many sons that he is bringing to glory," are rewarded on the one principle "of grace, not of works." Their "calling to begin with is altogether of God." Then their position and opportunity (as with the nation of Israel—and Peter, Paul and others of the blessed twelve) was of God; and so this call prompted their obedience. Yet "it is a righteous thing with God" to reward diligence and devotedness. In all this, however, Jesus has the pre-eminence, Col. i. 18.

Again—It is argued that we are made partakers of the Divine nature by a resurrection, and that "Divine and immortal" are synonymous,—all to evade the "record" of miraculous birth! This subtlety ignores the primal fact that Adam was made in the image and likeness of God, (likest image, or exactest likeness,) and yet was placed on probation. It ignores the fact, also, that the apostles and saints have been "begotten again and so partaking of Divine nature by the incorruptible seed,—"preparatory to the resurrection!" Nay more, this after the example or on the principle that Christ was conceived of the Holy Ghost,—for God sent forth his Son made of woman! Gal. iv. 4; Gen. iii. 15.

The engrafted word—the immortal seed—was the graft, or seed in the saints that assured the fruits of the spirit in obedience, and this obedience assures and pledges their first resurrection! "Hereby we know that we dwell in him and he in us; because he hath given us of his Spirit," 1 John iv. 13-16. All Bibles affirm this; for those in Christ partake of his anointing (his nature,) 1 John ii. 24-27; while yet they await the resurrection at the seventh trumpet. "For as in Adam all die, so those in Christ (partaking his nature) shall be made alive," 1 Cor. xv. 21-23; Col. iii. 14.

Note 1. The apostleship of St. Matthew is historical. He was sent forth by our Lord Jesus—as Jesus himself had been sent of God, as my Father hath sent me, (said he) even so send I you—receive ye the Holy Ghost, John xx. 19-23; Mat. xxviii. 18-20; Acts i. 2.

His commission thus sustains his testimony. It is concurrent with the time fulfilled, Mar. i. 14; Dan. ix. 24-27; and the preaching of "repentance for the kingdom is at hand." The events foregoing, attending and following, were dispensational—of Divine ordering from Moses to Messiah! The whole weight of John the Baptist's ministry centers in, "Behold the Lamb of God!" The angel anthem also, and the prophetic spirit, announcing God's "salvation" in Jesus, Luke i. and ii.

"The (Logos) word was made flesh! He beheld his glory, (nothing of Joseph here) the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth," John i. 14-18.

The centre and crown of all this age of God's wonders, was "Emanuel—Jesus."

II. Observe, that other special events by St. Paul, James, Jude, and John, are unquestioned, and yet none are made the pivot of the ages, like the birth and life of Jesus—"the only begotten Son of God."

III. The record of creation finds its counterpart in the order of nature, even now, after 6000 years! The four great Gentile empires of prophecy, fill out their corresponding place in history, and so "the record, God has given of his Son," answers, so far, to his name and fame, "from the rising to the setting sun," Psa. lxxii. 15-20; Mal. i. 11.

IV. Faith alone is available or rational in regard to the doctrine of creation, providence, or grace. As to providence and this life, even infidelity swears so far, and works on the line of orthodoxy. Wrong doing is damned, well doing is commended, and the fruits and harvests of earth are sought on the line of creation and providence. Nay, more, the life and immortality brought to light in the gospel would never have reached the head and heart of humanity had it not been revealed, provided for, and enforced, by the undoubted, unnumbered and memorialized miracles that God wrought out into the head and heart, mind and language of Jew and Gentile! So much had been gained, preparatory to the first advent of Jesus. By him the profound realities of priesthood, sacrifice, expiation and the resurrection of the just were brought to light in the Gospel."

Note. These terms of "Grace and truth" and the hope they inspire, belong only to the gospel in association with Jesus—named by the angel before his birth. Then the angel anthem and restitution of all things spoken comes in on that line, Luke ii. 1-5; Acts iii. 21.

V. H. L. Hastings to arrest unbelief, says that "true song is the gift of God—that the morning stars sang together at creation. Israel celebrated their deliverance in song; and the conversion of a sinner awakens song in earth and heaven, Luke xv. 1-7.

Then, to arrest the infidel, he puts his erring sentiment in a song.

"All hail the mighty Monkey!
All hail the ancient plant!
From which, by evolution,
I guess I growed a branch!

"Ascending from our moleak god,
A lowly path we travel,
Our course commencing in the mud,
Must end down in the gravel."

We are authorized to answer some according to their folly, Prov. xxvi. 3-5.

Let us all chime in with the mean and music of the angels and sing one song—"The song of salvation" by Jesus—the only begotten Son of the Father in truth and love, 1 John iii. Amen and Amen.

Lovingly for truth and grace by "Jesus the Son of the Highest," Luke i. 31-35.

Editor Restitution;

A little more good news to strengthen the blessed cause of truth, through the dear RESTITUTION. May 24, I reviewed a Sabbath brother, Elder Smith, of Grandville. He had been preaching on the Law question at Fisher for about three Sundays, and this was the second time I had reviewed him, and have every reason to think there need be no more said on the question, as the people seemed well satisfied with the evidence produced from God's word. After the sermon an intelligent lady arose and with tears acknowledged her former love and reverence for the Sabbath, but said she had heard enough evidence to satisfy her. She had been for seven years walking in terrible darkness and under bondage to the law, and thanked God the veil was at last taken from her eyes, and with all love and charity for her Sabbath brethren should pray God to help them seek and see the light as it is in the gospel of Christ Jesus. After services we went to the water, and after kneeling in prayer, we assisted sister Jameson and Sister Martin to put on Christ by baptism, and so our hearts again rejoice in being able to further his cause. The church in Fisher rejoices in the addition of two more to their number, and the angels rejoice that two more are safely sheltered in the fold, and may God help them and us to ever be found faithful, is our prayer.

Selections.

THE FIRST CHAPTER OF GENESIS.

The following is the first chapter of Genesis according to the Revised Version. The notation of the verses follows that of the authorized version for the sake of comparison, though the new version will be printed in paragraphs with the verse numbers in the margin:

1. In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.

2. And the earth was waste, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.

3. And God said: Let there be light: and there was light.

4. And God saw the light that it was good; and God divided the light from the darkness.

5. And God called the light day and the darkness he called night. And there was evening and there was morning, one day.

6. And God said, let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters.

7. And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament, and it was so.

8. And God called the firmament heaven; and there was evening and there was morning, a second day.

9. And God said, Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear: and it was so.

10. And God called the dry land earth; and the gathering together of the waters called He Seas: and God saw that it was good.

11. And God said, Let the earth put forth grass, herb yielding seed and fruit tree bearing fruit after its kind, wherein is the seed thereof, upon the earth; and it was so.

12. And the earth brought forth grass, herb yielding seed after its kind, and tree bearing fruit, wherein is the seed thereof after its kind: and God saw that it was good.

13. And there was evening and there was morning, a third day.

14. And God said: Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years.

15. And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth: and it was so.

16. And God made the two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night; he made the stars also.

17. And God set them in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth.

18. And to rule over the day and over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness: and God saw that it was good.

19. And there was evening and there was morning, a fourth day.

20. And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and let fowl fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven.

21. And God created the great sea monsters, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kinds, and every winged fowl after its kind: and God saw that it was good.

22. And God blessed them saying, be fruitful and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas, and let fowl multiply in the earth.

23. And there was evening and there was morning, a fifth day.

24. And God said: Let the earth bring forth the living creature after its kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after its kind; and it was so.

25. And God made the beast of the earth after its kind, and the cattle after their kind, and everything that creepeth upon the ground after its kind; and God saw that it was good.

26. And God said: Let us make man in our own image after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

27. And God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him, male and female created he them.

28. And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth and subdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.

29. And God said, Behold I have given you every herb yielding seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat.

30. And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to everything that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life, I have given every green herb for meat: and it was good.

31. And God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was good. And there was evening and there was morning, the sixth day.—New York Observer.

Sermon by Geo. R. Kramer, Pastor of the Church of the Blessed Hope, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye do show the Lord's death till he come."

The Lord's Supper is pre-eminently an exhibition of the death of Christ. "Before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth crucified among you." All who look see the death of Christ. The Church sees it. "This do in remembrance of me." But this is not all.

You remember I told you to keep before you the death of Christ, and to keep before God the death of Christ. Look at the rainbow on the cloud, who looks upon it and remembers the covenant? God himself. "I will look upon it that I may remember the everlasting covenant." Who saw the blood at the passover? "When I see the blood I will pass over you." Is not "Christ our Passover crucified for us?" And "as often as we eat this bread and drink this cup," to whom do "we show the Lord's death?"

The Supper of the Lord shows the death of Jesus to God.

When Christians come together on the Lord's day should they not come to take the Lord's Supper?

Do we come to hear preaching? or to worship God?

Is not the essential element of worship the recognition of the atonement? We have "boldness to enter the holiest through the blood of Jesus."

Is not the table of the Lord the visible center of Christian worship? And is not every Christian a priest? "An holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ." It is all through Jesus—and commencing every Lord's day service should we not show to God the Father the death of his Son?

The purpose of a Christian assembly is to worship God. Preaching is an instrument to this end. He who magnifies the instrumentality at the expense of the end, not only fails to see the glorious privilege of a meeting together of the children of God; but does not honor the Father. Again he who to magnify the end would do away with the preaching of the word underrates the God-given instrumentality not only for the salvation of the sinner, but for the leading of the Church nearer to God, that they all may understand him more and thus in a greater degree worship him.....The word of God preached is the food of the Church. "Feed the flock of God."

Look at the early Church. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them." "They came together to break bread." Is not this the very thought the apostle brings before us in 1 Cor. xi. when rebuking the members of that church for not seeing this to be the object of their gathering, and so making a carnal feast of it? Does not this rebuke prove that the table of the Lord was there when they met? "When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's Supper, for in eating every one taketh before others his own supper, and one is hungry and another is drunken."

As to the practice of the early church Justin Martyr says: "And on the day called Sunday all who live in cities or in the country gather to one place and the memoirs of the apostles, or the writings of the prophets are read as long as time permits, then when the reader has ceased, the president verbally instructs and exhorts to the imitation of these good things; when we all rise together and pray, and as we before said, when our prayer is ended bread and wine and water are brought and the president in like manner offers prayers and thanksgiving according to his ability, and the people assent, Amen; and there is a distribution to each and a participation of that over which thanks have been given, and to those who are absent a portion is sent by the deacons."

Should we not commence our service on the Lord's day by showing to God the Father the death of his Son? And failing to do this do we not fail in having the great objective and visible element in Christian worship? Can a monthly communion meet the demand?

If it be objected that God can see the death of his Son without this, we reply that he could remember the covenant after the flood without the bow and yet he put it in the cloud and said, "I will look upon it." And so in the holy communion he looks upon the bread and wine, and sees in it, when we come together, the death of his Son, and we are "accepted in the beloved." There must be a deep meaning in the Lord's Supper.

And why "till he come?" Because then salvation will be consummated, which we now have by promise. The communion is an evidence that we are not actually redeemed—that we are not glorified—until the coming of the Lord. Salvation is deliverance from the grave—the realization of promised immortality, so that we can sing with triumph, "death is swallowed up in victory," and "thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." We have this victory through Jesus Christ because he "died for our sins," and until we realize this victory in the resurrection morning, we show this death of Christ to God by the bread and wine. God sees us take the flesh of his Son and drink his blood, and thus drink to immortal life, when he sees us around this table. He sees the bow and he sees the blood, and "remembers the everlasting covenant," and "passes over us." This picture we must keep before God until Jesus comes, and we are made like him and presented in the consummate radiance of redemption before God the Father, "faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy."

Now we are in a state of mortality, and corruptible, and are "saved by hope;" and until this hope is consummated we keep before God the death of Christ. Our present state is in the shadow—the valley of the shadow of death.

Tennyson gives a true picture of all the pretension of poor mortality:

"Dust all our frames and gilded dust, one price
Looks only for a moment whole and sound,
Like that long-haired lady of the king
Found lying in his arms and ornaments,
Whither a touch of light, and air from heaven,
Slipped into ashes, and was seen no more."

But though everything fails, the Christian has the hope of immortality, of perennial glory in Christ. What a hope is ours! Sir Walter Scott in Rokeby sings in sadness and triumph as he views present desolation and future grandeur:

"Nor seal for God, nor love for man
Gives mortal monuments a date
Beyond the powers of time to shake,
The towers must share the builder's doom:
Ruin is theirs and his a tomb.
But better boon benignant heaven
To Faith and Charity has given;
And bids the Christian hope sublime,
Transcend the bounds of Fate and Time."

Jesus is coming—the Supper of the Lord is one of the evidences that he who "sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty," "shall come again." What a blessed event that will be. "The days are going by;" "salvation is nearer than when we believed;" "yet a little while, and he that shall come will come and will not tarry."

Brethren in Christ, only we believe we have life and this because he "died for our sins," and this life we believe we shall receive when he comes, by translation or resurrection; "when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality." Then let us in our Christian worship, until that time of the second advent of our blessed Redeemer, show to God the Father the death of his beloved Son. Let us come to this table with a deeper appreciation than ever of the words of the Master: "This is my body which is given for you, this do in remembrance of me." "This cup is the new testament in my blood which is shed for you."—Bible Banner.

THE ORIGINAL BIBLE.

The preservation of the Scriptures rests upon the basis of history. The inspired writings of the New Testament have come down in a form so close to the original Greek autographs that there is hardly a part in the entire text but which may be regarded as certain, and the entire Bible has been preserved in such integrity that no serious variation is found in the work. In the first ages of the church the translation of the Scriptures followed quickly upon the introduction. The earliest known translation of any portion of the Scriptures in the Anglo-Saxon was in the seventh century. Portions of the Psalms and the gospels were made in the next three centuries. The history of the English Bible properly begins with John Wycliffe, who was born in the year 1324. Educated in Oxford, he rapidly won distinction as a scholar. The great reformer had, a century and a half before the time of Luther, grasped the long-buried principles of primitive Christianity. At Oxford he imbued with his own spirit scores of young men, who went forth to preach the message of truth. Compelled to leave Oxford, he applied himself to the work of preaching, and the estimates he puts upon the Bible may be seen from a single passage from one of his sermons. He says: "All truth is contained in the Scripture; we should admit of no conclusion not approved there. There is no court beside the court of heaven. We learn more from the Bible than from anything else." Wycliffe knew that the revival of religion that he so longed for depended upon the translation of the Scriptures, and to this end he worked incessantly. In 1380 he finished his work, and the people were ready to receive it, and so great was the demand for it that the scribes could not copy it fast enough to meet the demand. Before his death Wycliffe had translated the entire Bible.

As time went on great changes took place in England, due to this translation. Upward of 107 copies of this work are now extant. In the sixteenth century the art of printing was discovered, and all the opposition of the monks and the more ignorant clergy could not stop it. With the dissemination of the classics and Oriental learning, with this new scholarship scholars began to be dissatisfied with the Latin Vulgate, and as the reform spread the desire for another translation grew.

In 1523, nearly a century and a half after the publication of Wycliffe's Bible, William Tyndall began his great work. To do this work he was obliged to leave his country, and he suffered poverty and exile, the bitter loss of friends. But while in this exile he achieved his work, and after his death even his enemies were forced to admire it. In 1524 he published a translation of Matthew, and at Worms, the following year, were issued two editions of the entire New Testament. Six thousand copies were quickly struck off and as rapidly found their way into England, where efforts were made to destroy them. In the meanwhile, Tyndall went on with his work, and in 1530 he issued the "Pentateuch". Tyndall's translation was the first English version. It was eighty years after the publication of Tyndall's version to the completion of what is now known as the King James version. In almost every step of the English history the Bible was prominent, and Tyndall's work was read during the reign of Henry VIII.

The next translation referred to is that by Miles Coverdale, who made a translation under royal patronage. He was a man of considerable ability, but a man of different mold to Tyndall. The work was printed in Zurich in 1535, and was the first complete translation of the English Bible. But the authorities were not yet satisfied, so a further revision was made in 1538, which is known as "Matthew's Bible," and is a combination of Coverdale's and Tyndall's. This Bible was ordered to be set up in the churches in every parish. At this time the demand for the Bible was very great. No less than thirty-nine editions were issued in seventeen years, and the effects of the circulation of this large number of books had a wonderful effect on the people. The sufferings of many who made these several translations, as well as those who read the Bible wherever to be found in England, were very great, and these persecutions led to the exile of many learned men from England, who sought refuge in Geneva, and who made the translation known as the Geneva Bible. This translation gave birth to the great Puritan party, and which was brought to America by the first of the Puritans. The publication of this translation led to a new translation which was known as the Bishop's Bible, which in turn was followed by the Douay Bible, issued by the Catholics in 1609. In 1607 a new version was begun under royal patronage, and in 1611 it was finished. This version was established as the standard version of all the sects common to the English-speaking race. This is now known as the King James version.—Evening Journal.

LONDON, May 25.—Yesterday being the anniversary of the fall of the Commune, the Communists of Paris, France, attempted to hold a demonstration at the tombs of their comrades in the Pere La Chaise Cemetery. The police ordered the Communists to surrender their red flag. The latter refused, and fighting ensued. The police drew their swords and drove the rabble against a pile of stones. The rioters used the stones, and one of the policemen was knocked senseless and another's jaw was broken. The officers, with fixed bayonets, then charged the mob, wounding ten persons seriously. The police were unusually severe, showing no quarter. Thirty rioters were arrested.

PARIS, May 25.—The police expect and are prepared for a renewal of the Communists riot at the Pere la Chaise Cemetery to-day or to-morrow. The Communist papers cry for vengeance upon the police and troops for attacking and bayoneting the people who attempted yesterday to make a demonstration at the graves of the Communists at the cemetery. These journals, in order to incite the mob, falsely assert that the soldiers, during yesterday's riot shot four Communists dead. Threats are make to attack the authorities with arms and bayonets.

A soldier who was at the fall of Khartoum has reached London. At the time of the fall the city was on the verge of a famine, he reports, and, on entering, the enemy massacred about 18,000 people. General Gordon was one among the number, and his head was cut off and carried in barbaric triumph and exultation to the Mahdi himself, who received it with eager satisfaction.

Seven deaths occurred at Plymouth, Pa., in the twenty-four hours ending Sunday evening, and a number of new cases were reported. The hopeful feeling caused by the small death-roll of Thursday and Friday has again given way to despondency, the people seeing no end to the plague. There are now forty-four patients in the hospital, and more will be placed there as soon as accommodations can be furnished.

Karl Granville declares that if Turkey refuses to occupy some of the Red Sea ports England will be compelled to make arrangements for the occupation of the places by some civilized power.

The expulsion from their provinces of the Russian Poles of Germany, at Russia's request, is described as being attended by cruel and heartrending incidents. Eight thousand have already been arrested and conducted to the German frontier by Prussian troops.

THE CHOLERA IN FRANCE AND SPAIN.

Several cases of cholera have appeared at Marseilles, France, and fears of an epidemic are entertained.

The latest report from Alcira, Spain shows that during the first half of May there were seventy-one "suspicious" cases in a population of 16,000, and of those thirty died, fifteen recovered and twenty-six remain ill. Five thousand four hundred persons have been inoculated, and of these but seven have had cholera attacks. These seven persons were, however, taken ill within thirteen days of their inoculation, or before the virus had full time to act its part, and no deaths of inoculated patients have yet occurred.

A dispatch from Rome says the Technical Committee of the International Sanitary Conference has adopted a resolution declaring land quarantine useless.

A TERRIBLE PLOT.

Our Hebraic contemporary the Hazefyra of Warsaw, Russian Poland, in a recent issue says that the farmers in and around the town of Cieshanows, conceived a terrible plot by forming a conclave and at a given moment to murder all the Jews their fellow citizens living there. The town and district comprises about 6,000 inhabitants of which nearly half of that number are Jews. Through some tell tale the plot was discovered and with the timely intervention of the police and military force the terrible catastrophe was happily averted.—The Occident.

THE TEMPLE.

To build a temple for the Lord
King Solomon began;
Each stone was cut, each beam was hewn,
To Heaven's appointed plan.

And when from the dusty quarries,
The ponderous ashlers came,
And from the shades of Lebanon
The fragrant cedar beams,

They fitted each into its place,
As if a hand divine,
Had drawn and cut each polished face,
By compass, square, and line.

And the king near Succoth cast,
Two pillars tall and fair,
And brought them to the temple gate,
And set them firmly there.

And when the temple stands complete,
The bending nations bring,
Their wealth and homage to the feet,
Of Israel's wondrous king.

Another temple shall arise,
Of measures vast and grand;
Its living stones are uniting,
Each by the King's command.

In forest glades, and mountain glens,
He marshals beams and stones,
And in the busy cities
He polishes the living stones.

Fierce furnace fires, and low clay beds,
Bright pillars shall deliver;
They shall stand within the temple,
And go out no more forever.

THE REVISED VERSION OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

While the Revised Version of the Old Testament apparently excites far less interest than that of the New, which appeared in 1881, it is, nevertheless, a work of great importance, and the public will be anxious to know something of its history, and of the manner in which the Revisers have carried on their labors. It was upon June 30th, 1870, that the English Company assembled for the first time, and on May 20th, 1884, they put the last hand to their undertaking. The interval since that date has been used by the presses of Oxford and Cambridge, who are the owners of the copyright, in preparing the various editions now offered to the public.

Of those who met upon the first occasion only fifteen now remain, ten having been removed by death, and two by resignation. At first it was the custom of the company to fill up vacancies by election; but, after the sale of the copyright to the universities, legal difficulties have prevented this, and no new member has been appointed since October, 1875. Among those removed by death have been the Bishops of Llandaff (Dr. Oliphant) and of St. David's (Dr. Thirlwall), Professor Selwyn and Professor Cheney, the editor of the London Times. The Company has met eighty-five times, either in the Jerusalem Chamber or the Library of Westminster Abbey, and has spent on its work no less than 792 days, sitting on each day from eleven to five o'clock. And it has gone over the Old Testament three times, so that it has spared no pains or trouble.

On the first occasion, after prayers, the Hebrew was read verse by verse, and next the suggestions of the absent members followed by discussion; and any proposal which obtained the votes of a majority was admitted into the first and confidential Revise. This formed the basis of consideration when the company was going through the Old Testament the second time, and nothing was now allowed to remain which did not obtain a majority of two-thirds. On this occasion the company had the benefit of the notes of the American Company, to whom the first Revise had been confidentially communicated. As a rule their observations were very judicious, and so strongly conservative as often to have caused the English company to retrace its steps, and restore the rendering of the Authorized Version. Nevertheless, were it possible to publish this first and confidential Revise, it would be found to contain a large number of scholarly suggestions, of great value to the student, though they failed to obtain the majority necessary for their retention. Finally, there was a third group of sessions for the consideration of reserved points, and of suggestions and objections made by the members in writing.

But, confining ourselves to the published result, it will be asked, What are the solid gains? Of course it is something that the old version has undergone this examination, so that the vast mass which remains unchanged has its authority confirmed. But besides this, Is the Old Testament more plain to the English reader? Or must he still go to his dictionary and grammar to be able to judge of its meaning? Now, while the Hebrew scholar will still understand his Bible more thoroughly than one who does not know Hebrew, it becomes in the Revised Version more intelligible to the ordinary reader. The Prophetical Books especially are made easy to understand, while, previously it was often difficult, even with the utmost attention, to follow their meaning. Upon this point it is impossible to do more than select one or two matters which may serve to illustrate it.

Thus the Revisers have been very careful to retain in their version the marked distinction observed in the original between the Jews and the nations not included in the covenant. The distinction is made in a very simple way, by always speaking of the Jews in the singular, and of the heathen in the plural number. When St. Paul, in Acts xxii. 21, said 'amos, peoples, instead of 'amo, the people, the populace was convulsed with rage. The amose were regarded by them with the same contempt as that which the Chinese feel for the "outside barbarians." Undoubtedly there is a want of euphony in the plural peoples, and as it is used only twice in the Authorized Version its sound is new to our ears, but the distinction is of vital importance for the intelligent reading of the Old Testament; and the observance of it in the Revised Version will be a great boon to the myriads who are interested in the study of prophecy in connection with the fortunes of Israel.

Let us take a few examples. In Isa. viii. 9, we read: "Associate yourselves, O, ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces." Naturally it would be assumed that this referred to the Jewish people, who in verse six are described as refusing the softly flowing waters of Siloam. But not it is the peoples. God is long-suffering, and will not let the unbelieving nations destroy his Church, even though it be wayward, and sorely try his patience.

In Isa. xiv. 6, the king of Babylon, "who smote the people with a continual stroke," is generally supposed to have incurred his fate, because of his enmity to the Jews, and so is held up as a warning to persecutors. This is quite wrong. Those whom he smote were the peoples, Gentile nations with whom he was perpetually at war, and whose name may be read in the cuneiform inscriptions as crushed again and again by the Assyrians. And the warning belongs to all who delight in war. It has no special reference to an Antiochus Epiphanes, but belongs to the Cæsars and conquerors who smite the nations of the earth with perpetual war.

And, not to dwell upon this point too long, we often find promises for us Gentiles where it seemed before as if the Jews only were intended. Thus, in the Old Version, in Isa. lxii. 10, we read: "Prepare ye the way of people . . . . lift up a standard for the people." Both would equally be taken to refer to the return of the Israelites from Babylon. This is not the case. The Revised Version is: "Lift up an ensign for the peoples." The purpose for which Judah returns is far larger than anything connected with the temporal fortunes of the chosen race. She returns that she may lift up him, who if he be lifted up will draw all men unto him.

Another very important subject of inquiry is the nature of the light thrown, in the Old Testament, upon the state of the soul after death. Now, in the Authorized Version, we find such passages as: "The wicked shall be turned into hell." Ps. ix. 17. The thoughtful reader, who bears in mind the remarkable reticence of the Old Testament upon the future life, cannot help being puzzled at so very plain a statement. But the Revisers render, "The wicked shall return to Sheol;" it being their rule to retain the Hebrew word Sheol in the poetical books. But, in Gen. xxxvii. 35, where it first occurs, they explain sheol as meaning "the abode of the dead." The word "return" may suggest the thought that Sheol was the abode not merely of the dead, but of souls before their union with the body; but there is little proof of this Platonic view elsewhere. The verse, however, does not refer to retribution in a future life, but to premature death in this as the punishment of sin.

So, in Ps. xvi. 10, we read in the Revised Version: "The soul of God's Holy One is not left to Sheol." It is not abandoned to, or permitted to remain in, the abode of the dead, but is delivered before corruption has time to begin. In Ps. lv. 16, the Authorized Version has: "Let them go down quick into Hell;" the Revised: "Let them go down alive into the pit." And, generally, the word "Hell," which, etymologically, means the cavern, or hollow vault under the earth, but which has acquired a very stern meaning since the revision of 1611, disappears. The only place where it remains, is Isaiah xiv. 9. It there so plainly means only hades, the abode of the shades of the departed, that the Revisers have left it, rather than alter a classical passage. Possibly, also, they bore in mind the use of the word "hell" for hades in the Apostles' Creed, and were not sorry that it should be left in the one place where it still retained the meaning usual in 1611.

But many, no doubt, will turn eagerly to Job xix. 25, to see what the Revisers have done with that emphatic testimony to the resurrection. It is, moreover, a passage dear to millions, because of the place which it holds in the Burial Service of the English Church. But it is one confessedly difficult, and several very important words, though, worms, and body are in Italics, and were added by King James's translators. Omit them, and what remains is, "And after my skin destroy this, yet in my flesh shall I see God," while in the margin they place as the more literal rendering, "Yet out of my flesh shall I see God."

The trouble which the Revisers have taken with this passage is shown by the alternative renderings placed in the margin. That which they have put into the text is as follows:

> "And after my skin hath been thus destroyed,
> Yet from my flesh shall I see God."

In the margin they give "without," in place of "from," which is virtually the rendering of the margin of the Authorized Version.

The passage remains one of marvelous fullness of teaching, but it loses its special application to the resurrection of the body. Job protests his firm conviction in the coming of a Redeemer for his deliverance, and that he shall be manifested at the last day upon the earth. But in the allusion to his skin, he refers to the leprosy that was consuming his flesh. Even if it be incurable, and destroy the last particle of his body, it will not even then destroy all. "From, or without his flesh he will see God." It is a strong expression of faith in a personal God, in a power of seeing God after death has destroyed the eye of the body, and in a close relation between the soul after death and God, its vindicator. There is more than this. There is the belief in an Incarnation, and the personal appearance of God upon earth.

The more exact translation of passages such as this leaves the doctrine of a future life where it was. In the Old Testament there is ever a hope, a longing, reaching onwards, and finally finding full utterance in passages such as Dan. xii. 2; but still so undefined that St. Paul could say that "Christ brought light and immortality to light by his gospel." 2 Tim. i. 10.

The Messianic passages remain virtually unchanged. The promise made to Eve still gives us a summary of the whole gospel. In Jacob's blessing we read:

> "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah,
> Nor the ruler's staff from between his feet,
> Until Shiloh come."

In Isaiah vii. 14, the revisers retain "virgin" as the rendering of 'almah, though in Gen. xxiv. 43, they translate it "maiden." The names of the Immanuel remain unchanged, but in Isa. ix. 6, in obedience to the Massorah, the highest Jewish authority, they omit the negative, or, to speak more correctly, render it by "their."

> "Thou hast multiplied the nation
> Thou hast increased their joy."

In verse five the old rendering was:

> "For every battle of the warriors is with confused noise and garments rolled in blood:
> But this shall be for burning and fuel of fire."

Words of singular felicity of language, but hopelessly wrong. How is Messiah's battle to be for burning and fuel of fire? The Revised Version is as follows:

> "For all the armor of the armed men in the tumult and the garments rolled in blood;
> Shall be even for burning, for fuel of fire."

In the margin it is pointed out that the Hebrew literally means: "Every boot of the booted warrior." The prophet's allusion is to the custom of burning, after a victory, the blood-stained tokens of the fight; and his teaching, that human strife must cease and the world put away its engines of carnage before the coming of the Prince of Peace.

In Isaiah liii. and Jer. xxiii. 5-8, the changes are slight; but there is one alteration which suggests one or two remarks. It is well known that the Hebrew language has but one word, eretz, for the larger meaning earth or world, and the smaller meaning land or territory. The translation must depend, therefore; upon the context. In Jer. xxiii. 5, the Revisers render: "He shall execute judgment and justice in the land." They probably considered that the use of "Judah and Israel," in verse 6, limits the application to the land of Palestine. Similarly in Ps. xxxvii. 9, 11, 22, 29, 31, they use land throughout, while we find in the Authorized Version land in verses 29, 34, but the earth in the other three places. In the third beatitude the Revisers of the New Testament have given us: "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." It is a virtual quotation from Ps. xxxvii. 11, where we find: "The meek shall inherit the land." The Revisers have considered that the primary reference was to the enjoyment of the land of promise by the Jews. In his beatitudes our Lord raised this to a higher and more catholic blessedness. The peaceful and gentle shall enjoy even earthly prosperity. But the possession of Palestine by the Jews was a type of even more. After his long sojourn in the wilderness of this world the Christian, when he has passed the river of death, looks to Jesus, the Captain of his salvation, to give him an inheritance in the kingdom of heaven.

The Revised Version will no doubt be eagerly examined as to the support it gives to or withdraws from many doctrines; for most speculations and theories, however wild, have generally some perverted text of Scripture as their basis. The daily use by myriads of God's Word means its abuse by some; and, therefore, it is a duty to give to the vast mass of the English-speaking race the Bible in as exact a translation as possible. The version of 1611 was so great an improvement upon the "Bishop's Bible" that it has held its place for two centuries and a half. The most popular English Bible before it was that known as the Geneva Version, and it has been found of great use by the Revisers, and its renderings have often been restored. Whether the Revised Version of 1885 will ever be as highly esteemed as King James's or the Geneva remains to be seen. But the Revisers have spared neither time nor labor upon their task; they have been careful not to make unnecessary changes; and we venture also to think that they have not debased either the noble diction or the stately rhythm of the Old Version, while they have endeavored to make their work as faithful a representation as possible of the letter and the spirit of those ancient documents, which still speak to believers as "the Word of God."—Robert Payne Smith, D. D., Dean of Canterbury, Member of the English Company of Revisers, in Independent.

SEEING THE HOLY LAND.

The regular Palestine round occupies a full month. The trip is not an easy one, though for any one who is fond of horseback and tent life, a very pleasant one. Many ladies make it, but there are many discomforts for them to undergo. The way is by foot-paths, many of them very rough and precipitous. There is not a road between Jerusalem and Damascus. Yet for myself the whole trip was most enjoyable. I was five months in making this whole Eastern journey, and I had not an hour of sickness, and did not meet with a single accident. During the Nile trip the sky was ever cloudless, and the weather the perfection of early summer, though the time of year was that of New York's midwinter. Then again in Palestine, though I commenced the tour from Jaffa the latter part of February, the weather throughout was that of the loveliest, balmiest spring. We had cloudless skies all the way from Jerusalem to Damascus. The horses were sure-footed, the camp arrangements were perfect, the tent life most pleasant, and every day brought its own enjoyment. We had one brief storm of wind and sleet as we passed up the Abana Valley and crossed the anti-Lebanon range, but that was all. One cannot help feeling sad because of the desolateness of the country which was once, as God names it so often in the prophesy of Ezekiel, "the glory of all lands;" but aside from this the whole trip is one of unalloyed pleasure.

It took Israel forty years to get from Egypt into the Promised Land; now the journey is made by rail from Cairo to Ismalia, by boat through Suez Canal to Port Said, and by steamer to Jaffa, in two days. The ancient Joppa is rather a sightly town. The so-called Simon's house may as well be that as any other. It is close by the sea, and the roof affords opportunity for the most open vision. The way through which one reaches it abounds with sights and smells which are far from appetising—very common and horribly unclean. Indeed, the filthiness of the various towns of Palestine is beyond description. Take Shechem for the most notable example. Here is abundance of water; the bright mountain streams could be turned so as to run through every street of the town; yet in going to the Synagogue to see the Copy of the Samaritan Pentateuch the filthiness of the streets exceeded anything that I ever elsewhere witnessed. The like is in measure true of many parts of Jerusalem itself. And this state of affairs will continue as long as Turkish rule prevails, for neither cleanliness nor improvement of any kind is possible under the Moslem sway.

The ride from Jaffa to Jerusalem takes but a day. We pass through Lydda, where is a so-named "Fountain of Dorcas." We see to the left the ridge of Bethoron, the battle-field of Gibeon, where Joshua uttered his famous command to the sun and moon; where, too, is the pass through which ran the Roman road from Jerusalem to Cæsarea, and over which Paul was carried a prisoner on his way to Rome. We ride over the high country of Judea, from the topmost ridge of which one gets glorious views, eastward, and westward, to the sea and towards the Jordan; on the right, clustered beautifully in a depression of the mountain slope, is the town which claims to be the birthplace of John the Baptist—a lovely spot, the summering place for the people of Jerusalem.

Evening brings us to the holy city. We come upon it almost unawares, and are inside the Jaffa Gate, and alighting at the hotel, almost before we can realize that the dreams of many years are at length a reality, and that our feet truly stand within thy gates, O, Jerusalem. It is difficult to understand the feeling of disappointment which many express concerning Jerusalem. It is true the city itself is somewhat mean and uninteresting, and the places of superstitious reverence unworthy of a passing thought. Yet withal this is the venerable Jerusalem, and there is the real Temple site; and Mt. Zion is yonder; and Olivet is before us; and Calvary is identified; and all the places forever sacred to every heart of Christian faith and love are present to the view.

Of Jerusalem and its surroundings I shall, if permitted, write in another paper; let us now take up our pilgrimage from near Beersheba to Dan, going down first to Jericho. Here we pitch our tents. Over mine the stars and stripes. The natives, even the Bedouins, recognise it, and hence name me "the Americano." This Jordan Valley might be a garden spot of the world. It is now but a tangled wilderness of wild shrubs, with here and there a cultivated field. Wandering Bedouins pitch their black tents and feed their cattle on its plains. Three hours' ride brings us to the Dead Sea and the river. This river, which might be used to irrigate the whole length of the valley, from Galilee to the Dead Sea, is allowed to waste itself on "the thankless corpse" of this dead lake. I had often read how that here no green thing grows, and no living thing moves in these salt waters. And it all seems true. The waters are most buoyant. I found that I could not sink in them; that I floated like a pine log; that I could walk in these waters, they rising half way up the waist. The day was hot. If those who thought it too early in the season to begin this trip found the Dead Sea Valley hotter than we found it, they were to be pitied.

One hour's ride or so brings us to a pleasant grove on the Jordan bank, at the reputed spot of the crossing of the Israelites. It is a deep, narrow, muddy stream. Thousands of pilgrims visit and bathe in its sacred waters. We met hundreds of them, some having travelled on foot from far-away Russia, on the road from Jericho up to Jerusalem.

After a refreshing night spent in our tents, pitched beside the Fountain of Elisha, the waters of which are still "sweet"—a night of repose undisturbed except by the strange cries of innumerable jackals—we start in the early morning for the northern tour. On the day when the new President was being inaugurated I was riding over the roughest path and through the wildest and most sterile country possible. Yet what splendid views from these mountain summits of the fertile Jordan Valley, the Dead Sea flashing among its purple hills, of the heights of Moab and Nebo's lonely mount. By mid day we reached Bethel, and at evening Shiloh. There is nothing here but a ruin of a small modern building. Even the old terebinth tree now lies prostrate and dead.

Soon after leaving Shiloh we catch the first view of distant, snow-covered Hermon, more than a hundred miles away. As we ride, gazelles spring across the path, jackals scatter away among the rocks, until at length we enter the beautiful cultivated valley of Shechem. Jacob's well is there; but it is filled with rubbish, and all around is desolation. Mounts Ebal and Gerizim stand as of old, when from them were pronounced the curses and the blessings. We rode to the top of Gerizim, whence there is the finest view in all Palestine. The whole country, from Dan to Beersheba, and from the river to the sea, is spread out before us, range after mountain range, valley and village, river and lake, and distant sea—a right glorious prospect.

Shechem (Nablous) is a somewhat thriving, but a very filthy town. From it we ride in two or three hours to Samaria, Israel's ancient capital, now, in its lowliness and ruin, an apt fulfillment of the prophecy Micah i. 6. Near by is Dothan, and we watered our horses at the reputed "pit" where Joseph was hid, and thought on the splendid events which connected here with Elisha's life. We rode on across the rich and lovely plain of Esdraelon, the birds singing, a great variety of flowers blooming everywhere, gazelles fleeing away up the hillsides, and the whole plain green with its plenteous vegetation. We turned aside to visit the Fountain of Gideon, a large and beautiful spring gushing out of the rock; and then passing over the ground where the crusaders made their last stand, we pushed on up the steep, precipitous way which leads to Nazareth, visiting in the meanwhile the wretched village of Nain, and passing round the base of Little Hermon.

Nazareth is a most picturesque spot, a veritable stronghold, where, if anywhere, the Holy Child would be in safety.

Passing Cana, another wretched mud village, we reach just at sunset the lovely Lake of Galilee. We spent two days here visiting the sites of its former towns and cities, and floating on the waters which once were trod by the feet of Jesus. It is a lonely, desolate spot; the shores treeless; two or three rough fishing boats comprising the whole fleet; the poor town of Tiberias the sole existing representative of the many and prosperous towns and cities which once stood on the shores of this lovely inland sea.

We ride up the Jordan Valley, and reach at length one of the sources of the river at Dan, and so on to Banias, the ancient Cæsarea-Philippi, where is the upper source of the Jordan, a splendid fountain which gushes in a full, clear, cool stream from out the mountain side. This place is fullest of interest. It is the northern limit of our Lords' journeyings. Here on one or the other of the peaks of Hermon he was transfigured. And from this spot he set his face for the last time "to go up to Jerusalem."

It is a hard ride of seven good hours over the rough and steep spurs of Hermon to Damascus. Part of the way is that by which Paul journeyed, and somewhere along it we pass the very spot of his remarkable conversion. We here reach the first road encountered since leaving Jerusalem.

Of Damascus, in its lovely setting; of Phœpar and Abana; of Baalbek, with its magnificent ruins; of the splendid scenery along the way from Damascus to Baalbek; of the beautiful and fertile plain over which we pass on to Northern Syria, and the grand mountain views presented in the ride over the Lebanon range; and of the prosperous missions of our church in Syria, and especially in the Lebanon district, all crowned by the grand College at Beyrout—a future paper must tell. It was good to be present at the Sunday evening services at the college, and to speak of Christ to the two hundred students, and to know of the remarkable work of grace that is now going on among them, and to hear of the noble work and sacrifices of the eminent and godly men who are holding this institution for the name and the glory of our blessed Lord.—Nath'l W. Conkling, D. D., New York Observer.

The Waiting Time.

No time of seeming inactivity is laid upon you by God without a just reason. It is God calling upon you to do his business by ripening in quiet all your powers for some higher sphere of activity which is about to be opened to you. The time is coming when you shall be called again to the front of the battle. Let that solemn thought of dread, yet kindling expectancy, fill the cup of your life with the inner work of self-development which will make you ready and prepared when your name is called. The thirty years at Nazareth, what was their result? A few years of action, but of action concentrated, intense, infinite; not one word, not one deed, which did not tell, and which will not tell upon the universe forever.

Thirty years of silence, and then—the regeneration of the world accomplished, his Father's business done.—Alford.

The Times of the Gentiles.

"And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, and there shall be signs in sun, moon and stars, and upon the earth distress of nations." Luke xxi.

I lifted up mine eyes again and looked, and behold a man with a measuring line in his hand. Then said I, whither goest thou; and he said unto me, to measure Jerusalem to see what is the length thereof and the breadth thereof. Zech. ii. Jerusalem shall be inhabited, for I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about and will be the glory in the midst of her ("Thy word is as a fire" and a "wall of salvation".) I will correct thee in measure and will not leave thee altogether unfinished, Jacob shall return and shall be in rest." And one said to the man clothed in linen which was upon the waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders. And I hear the man clothed in linen which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth forever, that it shall be for a time, times and a half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people all these things shall be finished. Go thy way, Daniel, for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end."

"And the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months," which equals 1260 years or three and a half times, or, time, times and a half. But the man clothed in linen which was upon the waters of the river, held up both hands unto heaven and sware by him that liveth forever—giving a double application to the time, times and a half, which would amount to seven full times or twice three and one half times, and the angel measured the breadth and the length of Jerusalem.

Jerusalem's captivity commenced about 628 years before Christ (see last chapter of Jer.) When Nebuchanezzar the Gentile power, the head of gold, came up against Jerusalem and carried away many captives, and carried away the vessels of gold from the temple—finishing the desolation thereof B. C. 606—1260 years thereafter, or one measure of punishment, reaches to A. D. 637, memorable in the annals of history as the year the followers of Mohammed entered Jerusalem, the Holy City, and took possession thereof, and they hold her in their power today. Years ago I used to think it strange that Jerusalem, the most interesting city of the world—the city where Jesus lived and taught, with its surrounding places of note should be under the power of the sick man of Europe, a power so weak that apparently it could not withstand the arms of Christian nations a single year; but I did not then know aught of prophesy or the times of the Almighty. But the double measure of Jerusalem's recompense for sin and iniquity are nearly ended, or the double time, times and a half reach to A. D. 1897, for Jerusalem be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

Speak ye comfortably unto Jerusalem and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned, for she hath received of the Lord's hands double for all her sins. Isa. xl.

To measure from 606 B. C. the double measure would reach to 1914. But Jesus says "Except those days had been shortened no flesh would have been saved, but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." Matt. xxiv.

As "the Scriptures cannot be broken" the only way to shorten the days is to measure from the beginning of the captivity instead of the end of it. So the measure is taken from 628 B. C. (for the land was to rest seventy years to fulfill her sabbaths) which allows the double measure to complete in 1897. As Nebuchadnezzar was from the seventh year of his reign to the twenty-third year in desolating Jerusalem, so doubtless her time of reconstruction will be from 1897 to 1914, and in a future communication I will show good grounds for the thought. "Seven times" was pronounced on Nebuchadnezzar (a type) to be cast out with the beasts of the field, seven times 360 days or years, for I have appointed thee a day for a year, is 2520 years, and the third "seven times" of Moses warning to the people of God.

THE VOICE IN THE TWILIGHT.

I was sitting alone in the twilight,
With spirit troubled and vexed;
With thoughts that were morbid and gloomy,
And faith that was sadly perplexed.

Some homely work I was doing
For the child of my love and care,
Some stitches half wearily setting,
In the endless need of repair.

But my thoughts were about the "building,"
The work some day to be tried;
And that only the gold and the silver,
And the precious stones, should abide.

And remembering my own poor efforts,
The wretched work I had done,
And, even when trying most truly,
The meager success I had won:

"It is nothing but wood, hay, and stubble,"
I said: "It will all be burned"—
This useless fruit of the talents
One day to be returned.

"And I have so longed to serve Him,
And sometimes I know I have tried;
But I'm sure when I've seen such building,
He never will deign abide."

Just then, as I turned the garment,
That no one should be left behind,
My eye caught an odd little bungle
Of running and patchwork combined.

My heart grew suddenly tender,
And something blinded my eyes,
With one of those sweet intuitions
That sometimes makes us so wise.

Dear child! She wanted to help me,
I knew 'twas the best she could do;
But oh, what a botch she had made it—
The gray submerging the blue!

And yet—can you understand it?—
With a tender smile and a tear,
And a half compassionate yearning,
I felt she had grown more dear.

Then a sweet voice broke the silence,
And the dear Lord said to me,
"As then tenderer for the little child
Than I am tender for thee?"

Then straightway I knew His meaning,
So full of compassion and love,
And my faith came back to its Refuge
Like the glad returning dove.

For I thought when the Master-builder
Comes down His temple to view,
To see what rents must be mended,
And what must be builded anew,

Perhaps as He looks o'er the building
He will bring my work to the light,
And seeing the marring and bungling,
And how far it all is from right,

He will feel as I felt for my darling,
And will say, as I said for her,
"Dear child! She wanted to help me,
And love for me was that spur."

And, for the true love that is in it,
The work shall seem perfect as mine,
And because it was willing service,
I will crown it with plaudit divine.

And there in the deepening twilight
I seemed to be clasping a hand,
And to feel a great love constraining me,
Stronger than any command.

Then I know by the thrill of sweetness,
'Twas the hand of the Blessed One,
That would tenderly guide and hold me
Till all the labor is done.

So my thoughts are nevermore gloomy,
My faith no longer is dim,
But my heart is strong and restful,
And my eyes are looking to Him.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY BIBLES.

LATIN.

Though I have described somewhat in detail the first four Latin Bibles, I cannot pass on to the consideration of their successors without adding a few words in regard to those four corner-stones of the entire fabric of Biblical bibliography. By so doing I may be able to give a bird's-eye view of the art of printing in the first ten years of its history. Besides the first Bible, or the Gutenberg Bible, 1455, (?) Gutenberg printed Letters of Indulgence, a few pamphlets and small quartos of a few leaves each, and one splendid volume—a folio of 748 pages—the Catholicon. It was written or edited by John of Genoa, a mendicant friar, and contained a Latin Grammar and Dictionary. The colophon states that it was printed at Mentz in 1460, but does not give the name of the printer. Mr. De Vinne says: "The silence of Gutenberg concerning his services is remarkable, all the more so when this silence is contrasted with the silly chatterings of several printers during the last quarter of the fifteenth century—of whom Peter Schoeffer may be considered as the first, and Trechsel of Lyons the last—each insisting that he, whatever others might have done before him, was the true perfecter of printing. There is no other instance in modern history, excepting possibly that of Shakespeare, of a man who did so much and who said so little about it." A copy of the Catholicon is to be seen in the Lenox Library, and also in the Astor Library. Another remarkably fine copy is in the library of Mr. Brayton Ives, of this city. The copy from the Syston Park Library, recently sold in London for $2,000, is in the Brown Library, at Providence, R. I.

The second Bible, or The Bamberg Bible. 1460, (?) is mentioned again merely to add a few words in regard to the other works of its printer, Albert Pfister. He is believed to have been a workman of Gutenberg, who established a press at Bamberg, near which city nearly all the copies of this Bible were found. Mr. De Vinne does not think that Pfister printed this Bible, because the other and later works are so very inferior and insignificant. This observation emphasizes the fact that as yet the art of printing had accomplished but little except large editions of the Bible.

The third Bible, or the Strasburg Bible, 1460. (?) Introduces the name of a third printer, Johannes Mentelin. It is now considered probable that Strasburg received the art of printing from Mentz, at least as early as Bamberg. Mentelin is believed to have printed the first Bible in German, the Epistles of St. Jerome, and several other large folios. He was buried in the Strasburg Cathedral, which contains a tablet with a magniloquent inscription, attributing to him the invention and development of the art of printing. This claim, like that of many others, was not made until long after his death, and is not supported by public or private records. He was for a time in partnership with Henry Eggerstoyn, became prosperous as a publisher, issued descriptive catalogues and employed agents for the sale of his works. Destressed and distressing book-agents in search of a patron saint will not be able to find an earlier name than that of Johannes Mentelin.

The fourth Bible, or the Mentz Bible, brings us back to the city where the art of printing originated. Gutenberg's first book and Bible, though cherished to this day as one of the most splendid specimens of typography, was a financial disaster. As the result of a law suit his office and materials passed into the hands of his creditor Fust, who formed a partnership with Peter Schoeffer, and these two became Gutenberg's successors in Mentz. Their Bible, the first with a date and name of printer and place where printed, is usually called the Bible of 1462. Both the Lenox and Astor Libraries have a copy of this Bible on exhibition. This Fust who is so closely associated with Gutenberg, has been confused in literature and legend with Dr. John Faust, a somewhat mythical character, who was born after the death of Gutenberg, and whose career as a magician is the foundation of many tales in prose and poetry. Historical students do not give any credit to the old, old story, thus told by Disraeli, relating to this very Bible of 1462:

"A considerable number of copies of the Bible were printed to imitate Manuscripts, and the sale of them in Paris entrusted to Fust, as MSS. Consequent upon his selling them at sixty crowns per copy, whilst the other scribes demanded five hundred, universal astonishment was created and still more when he produced copies as fast as they were wanted, and even lowered the price. The uniformity of the copies increased the wonder. Informations were given in to the magistrates against him as a magician, and on searching his lodgings a great number of copies were found. The red ink—and Fust's red ink is peculiarly brilliant—which embellished his copies was said to be his blood, and it was solemnly adjudged that he was in league with the infernals. Fust at length was obliged—to save himself from a bonfire—to reveal his art to the parliament of Paris, who discharged him from all prosecution in consideration of the wonderful invention."

Mr. De Vinne sums up the facts of the case in the following paragraph: "Eager to prevent the threatened rivalry of Jenson, Fust appeared in Paris, in 1462, with copies of the Bible, while Jenson was ineffectually soliciting the new king to aid him. So far from being persecuted in Paris, Fust was received with high consideration, not only by the king, but by the leading men of the city. He was encouraged to establish in Paris a store for the sale of his books and to repeat his visit." He is believed to have died of the plague in Paris in 1466, where he was buried in the Church of Saint Victor.

Besides his famous Bible of 1462 and the equally famous Mentz Psalter, 1457-59, etc., Fust published the Rationale Divinorum Officiorum, 1459, an exposition of the services of the church, by Durandus. This is the third book with a date. Copies of this book can be seen at both the Astor and Lenox Libraries. Besides other large theological works, Fust and Schoeffer printed the first edition of a classic, Cicero de Officiis, 1465, a small quarto of eighty-eight leaves. It contains the following colophon: "This very celebrated work of Marcus Tullius, I, John Fust, a citizen of Mentz, have happily completed through the hands of Peter, my son, not with writing ink, nor with pen, nor yet in brass, but with a certain art exceedingly beautiful. Dated 1465." It is pleasant to know that the first secular writing of any importance to be committed to the press was one of the purest and noblest of the productions of antiquity, a work akin to the Bible in being a treatise on moral obligations, and by its very excellence revealing the infinite distance between the Word of God and the best utterances of an uninspired mind. It is fitting that the first and grandest of the earliest printed books should be the Bible. It is also fitting that the first classic author to appear in this marvellous form should be one who was an enthusiastic lover and collector of literary treasures. A copy of this book is to be seen at the Astor Library.—Wendell Prime, D. D., in New York Observer.

"AS IT WAS IN THE DAYS OF NOAH."

But of that day and hour knoweth no man; no, not the angels of heaven but my Father only. But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them away; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. Then shall two be in the field, the one shall be taken and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left."—Matt. xxiv. 36-41.

Of all the statements, both in the Old and the New Testament, whether clothed in metaphor or given in figurative or plain language, about the coming again to our earth (Psa. cxv. 16) of the Lord Jesus Christ, none are so plain, so direct to the purpose, or so easy to be understood, as the passage before us. But of this, as of all other portions of the word of God, it requires to be said, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear," and that "The wise only shall understand," Dan. vii. 10. Let us then before approaching this subject seek to obtain the hearing ear and the "wisdom that cometh from above." The events connected with the Lord's coming, whether those passing before our eyes or those that are imminent, will be more clearly apprehended by keeping steadfastly before the mind the great and glorious work of the Holy Spirit of God, which has been going on unceasingly from the creation of the world up to the present time, and which will not cease till the end cometh, as described in 1 Cor. xv. 24, 28. Every particular from first to last is rolled up and sealed in the word of God. Rev. v. 1. It is the privilege of the children of God, by virtue of their union with the Lord Jesus Christ, who is identified with the word, John i. 1-5, to unravel all the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, and it is given only to them. In 2 Pet. iii. 16, we read that the unlearned and unstable wrest the Word of God to their own destruction, as Satan did when he tempted Christ. The children of God are promised that they shall all be taught of him. It is the bringing to bear human wisdom and tradition on the interpretation of the word, that causes so much controversy and false doctrine. The apostle Paul, in his teaching, said, "I speak as to wise men, judge ye what I say." So now, whilst we are, as little children, humbly learning our divine lessons sitting at the feet of Jesus, we shall be imbued with his wisdom made over to us, 1 Cor. i. 30, and shall be in a right position to understand his word. In that word we shall find (Eph. i.) that the Lord's children were all thought of, and the essential particulars of their glorious destiny all arranged before the foundation of the world. The crowning act of God's power was his only-begotten Son. "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee." Heb. i. 5. He was appointed heir of all things, and by him also he made the worlds. He was "daily the delight of the Father from the beginning of his way," Prov. viii. 22-30, and his delights were with the sons of men (of course by anticipation until they were created). When Adam was created in the image of God a helpmeet for him was found in Eve; so in the Church, an object was created for the expression of the love of Christ.

In tracing out the history of the Church as revealed in Scripture, we shall see how expressive is that short description of it in Cant. i. 5, "I am black but comely." Every individual of that mystical body which is written in God's book and fashioned in continuance," Psa. cxxxix. 16, is so thoroughly tainted by sin from its natural birth that it needs to be created over again, being beyond the reach of rectification, and it is on this stage of existence that the love of God in Christ shines forth so brilliantly: "God commended his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." Rom. v. 8.

Passing over for the present God's marvelous dealings with his people in all the varied scenes of their history, let us endeavor to obtain an exact view of the present aspect of the Church. Like every other combination of the Lord's people in professed separation from the world, whilst in manifestation towards it, the Church of Christ had degenerated and fallen from its first estate. In the commencement of its career it witnessed for Christ in a holy communism. The members had all things in common; but Ananias and Sapphira, betrayed by covetousness into hypocrisy, very soon cast away the cords of truth that bound them in holy fellowship with the Church, and we hear no longer of corporate union. The shepherd being smitten the sheep were scattered. The 180 separately registered sects in this country, all professing Christianity, which are increasing rather than diminishing in number, prove conclusively that until the Chief Shepherd shall appear there will be no more manifested unity to any extent. Still the promised blessing of the spiritual presence of Christ, whenever two or three are gathered together in his name, holds good.

A further complication consists in the admixture of nominal professors with true Christians, as shown in the parable of "the tares and the wheat," but in addition to the eventual separation of these, there will be a marked and striking separation between the watchful and unready children of God, when "one shall be taken and the other left." This surprising and unique event will take place immediately before the coming of Christ in judgment on an ungodly world. Directly Lot was dragged out of Sodom it was destroyed, but not before; and as soon as Noah and his family were safe in the ark, the flood came and destroyed a faithless world. "So shall it be when the Son of Man cometh. The light of the world and the salt of the earth being removed, spiritual darkness will set in, and corruption do its deadly work. Many events will then take place, such as the rebuilding of David's tabernacle, Acts xv. 16, and the restoration of Israel to earthly pre-eminence and nationality, Acts i. 6, the details of which need not be entered upon now. What the Church has to consider is her own position at the time of her Lord's promised return to her, John xiv. 3. Suddon as lightning, and as a thief in the night, will that coming be to the ungodly world, the false professor, and to the careless believer, but to those who are walking in the light of God's truth, the day of the Lord's coming will not overtake them as a thief. 1 Thess. v. 4. Then it is that "one shall be taken and the other left." The taking away from this earth those Christians who will be ready to meet the heavenly Bridegroom, and who will, in aerial conjunction with the dead in Christ, form the heavenly Bride, the one instantaneously changed, and the other "clothed upon" 2 Cor. v. 4, will produce for a time a profound sensation throughout the habitable globe.* A husband will be taken from the wife, a wife from the husband, a parent from the child, a child from the parent, a master from a servant, a maid from her mistress, all at the same moment. Many piercing cries will ascend in vain from those earthly minded Christians, who, lulled into a false security by subtle devices, baneful examples, and erroneous doctrines, have neglected the solemn warnings given to them, and the opportunities afforded them. Too late! In vain they will seek to replenish their fading lamps. They will, indeed, be eventually saved, and after having, through God's grace, triumphed over the dreadful and unhindered powers of spiritualo darkness, will help to constitute the innumerable palm-bearing multitude of Rev. vii. 9. They are the elect, for whose sake the days of God's vengeance shall be shortened, having been left to pass through the great tribulation. Though, saved "so as by fire," 1 Cor. iii. 15, they will loose their reward, Matt. vi 1; Col. ii. 18, and their crown, Rev. iii. 11.

The distinction in resurrection standing between these two portions of the Church may be noted in Rev. v. 8-10, and vii. 1-9, where it may be observed that the first portion only are crowned; and this difference helps to illustrate Paul's splendid description in 1 Cor. xv. 41, "One star differeth from another star in glory, so also is the resurrection from the dead." The minuteness of detail in warning and exhorting the Lord's people to keep themselves in a state of preparedness proves the individual importance of each believer. The starry heavens of a clear night present to the eye of the observer a magnificent panorama of the loveliest material works of God in one grand combination of unity, and yet exhibiting, on a closer inspection, an endless variety of sparkling gems. So will the Church of Christ, when manifested in glory. It will be one harmonious whole, yet made up of an infinite variety of units. It may be compared to a prism, through which the rays of light passing are broken by refraction into a variety of colors, limited only by the number of cuneiform surfaces on the prism exposed to the action of the light. This, among other resources of nature, is illustrated in the familiar object of the eye of a fly. A wonderful future, linked by faith to the present, is in store for the Church. It is in obscurity now to all but the eye of faith. It is hid with Christ in God. It walks by faith, and not by sight now; but it is the wisdom of the Church to know her place, duties, and privileges, now, as well as her destiny. To find out the best vantage ground for testimony; to be ever on the watch tower, and whilst "looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God," to be continually breathing the last recorded prayer in the Bible, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."—Henry Maynott in Prophetic News.

AN ARCHÆOLOGICAL TREASURE.

PHILADELPHIA, May 8, 1885.—At the last meeting of the Numismatic and Antiquarian Society, held in this city on Thursday evening, there was exhibited a relic of great interest to archæologists, with which is also connected a very curious history.

It appears that about forty years ago Rev. W. F. Williams, an American missionary to Syria, visited among places of interest the site of ancient Nineveh, about the time that Sir Henry Layard was making his famous explorations and discoveries. He wrote to a friend in Philadelphia, the late Mr. George Whitney, that he had secured for him a fine piece of Assyrian sculpture from one of the recently opened temples or palaces representing a life-size figure of a king, clad in royal robes, bearing in one hand a basket and in the other a fir cone. One portion of the stone was covered with hieroglyphics and was as sharply cut as though it had been carved by a modern hand, instead of by an artist who was sleeping in his grave when Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, was yet an infant.

The letter describing this treasure arrived duly, but the stones did not come. It appears that the caravan bringing them down to Alexandretta, from whence they were to be shipped to Philadelphia, was attacked by robbers, and the sculptured stones were thrown upon the desert as useless. There they remained for some years. Finally they were recovered, shipped to this country (about twenty-five years ago) and, arriving at their destination during the absence of the consignee, were deposited temporarily in a subterranean storeroom of his manufactory. In some way they were overlooked, and here they have remained, unopened, until they were rediscovered a few days ago. Meanwhile the missionary and his friend have both passed away, ignorant of the fact that the rare gift had finally reached its destination and had become again lost.

The Rev. Dr. J. P. Peters, Professor of Semitic languages at the Divinity School has made a translation of the cuneiform inscriptions on this stone and he gave an interesting account of them. The inscription upon the stone proves it to be similar to the "standard" monolithic inscription in the British Museum. The stone came from the palace of Assur-nazir-pal and dates back nearly 900 years B. C. Some idea of the great antiquity of this relic may be gained from the statement that it was 300 years older than the time of Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, that it was contemporaneous with Ahab, and that it was carved within a century of the time of Solomon.

To the uninitiated such statements seem incredible, and yet much older engraved stones have been discovered. The figure on the slab is cut with admirable skill, having the noble but immobile countenance characteristic of Assyrian sculpture in its best days. The dress, the wings, bracelets, etc., is very fine and it is interesting to observe the fine lines that have been ruled across the slab on the portion covered with inscriptions. The inscription as translated by Dr. Peters is a laudatory autobiography of the king, telling of his conquests and his power.

REMEMBER

That we will send THE RESTITUTION to the poor, at their request, so long as we can get the means to publish the paper. Let all our brethren who have means to use in sending the good news to others, send us the name of some friend or relative, and send us an extra dollar, to send the paper to them. If you cannot think of any such person send the money, and we will apply it where it will be appreciated and return blessings on the donor.

Conference Notices.

The Second Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in the Abrahamic Faith, will be held, the Lord willing, at the Jameson school house, one and one-half miles east of Fisher's Station, commencing Friday evening, June 12, and continuing over Sunday. All lovers of Bible truth are cordially invited to attend. Brother A. M. Smith of Otsego, and other preaching brethren are expected. Those coming by rail on the G. R. & I. R. R., will inquire for W. W. Jameson. Teams will be in waiting at the depot at Fisher's Station on Friday and Saturday. By order of Executive Board.

M. A. WOODWARD, Sec.

The third quarterly Conference of the church of God in Indiana will be held (D. V.) at Antioch, Marshall county, five miles south of Plymouth, and three miles north of Argos. Commencing at 10:30 o'clock, A. M., on Friday, June 12, 1885, and continue over the following Sunday. All are invited. Come and make the meeting a success.

A. B. UNDERWOOD, Sec.

The next annual meeting of the Michigan Church Conference will be held, the Lord willing, at the Brick School House 3½ miles North of Mendon, St. Joseph County, commencing Thursday evening June 4, 1885, and continuing over Sunday.

All that are interested in the truth are cordially invited to attend and the brethren and sisters of Michigan are urged to make a special effort to be present at this meeting.

Let none remain away through fear of being a burden to those that entertain the conference, as arrangements will be made to provide for a large number, and all who come will receive a hearty welcome.

Mendon is on the Grand Rapids and Indiana Rail Road, twenty-one miles South of Kalamazoo. Trains will be met at the depot in Mendon on Thursday, to convey passengers to the place of meeting, all are requested to be on hand that day if possible, but any coming later will be met if they will inform the writer of the day and train on which they expect to arrive. An effort will be made to obtain a reduction in rail road fare, and those desiring the benefits of such reductions or any other information in regard to this meeting will please address the undersigned at Mendon.

By order of the Executive Board.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXIV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 3, 1885. NO. 21.

THE RESTITUTION.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the full "restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, they establish-ment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with its Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint rulers with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

SAVING FAITH.—NO II.

Man doth not live by some words of God, but by every word that proceedeth out of the word of God doth man live, Deut. viii. 3; and therefore there lies on every man, as he loveth life, the imperative and immovable obligation to hear and reverence, and believe every word that God speaks, and attend to every duty which God's word imposes upon him. All Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable; but each part is not alike profitable to every man, nor is the same part always alike profitable to the same man. But there are some Scriptures which God has placed in the forefront, so to speak, of all the Scriptures, and which claim at the very first an unreserved acceptance, and an implicit faith. The Ten Commandments consisted of two tables, both written by the finger of God. When Israel broke the second table, which related ostensibly, although not wholly, to their duties to each other, they were obnoxious to the Divine curse; but when they broke the first table, and in particular when they broke the first and second laws which prohibited the worship of other gods, and the making and serving of graven images, God drove them from his land and sent his curses after them. Thus these two commandments were magnified beyond the laws of the second table, although the whole ten words were imposed by God on every Israelite. In the same way, then, it is by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God that man doth live; but these words which God's Spirit has chosen to express the early (and the only true) Christian faith, receive a prominence which it becomes us to ponder with the profoundest attention.

Take then these words—the inspired sum of Christian faith which we have found—"the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ," and let us resolve and ibly vow, before God, with our whole heart, that with his grace, our faith, if it has not already done so, shall henceforth rise up and grow to the same measure, and assume the same form as the early Christian faith, so that it may be truly said of us that we believe "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ." One reason may here be given why the things concerning the kingdom of God obtain such a distinguished prominence, and that is, that the Son of God preached the kingdom of God, and was actually sent for that purpose (Luke iv. 43); and if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect that kingdom which God's Son preached and was sent to preach? One reason, also, may be given why "the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ," share in the same distinguished prominence, and that is, that "there is none other name given among men whereby we can be saved" Acts iv. 12. We cannot be saved unless the name of Jesus Christ be given us; neither can we escape if we neglect the kingdom which he was sent to preach. But, God be praised, we may understand and believe the things concerning the kingdom of God, the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ, and thereby, according to his own appointment, lay hold on the life everlasting.

Perhaps this paper may come into the hands of some who say, "We don't care what is the true meaning of the phrase 'the kingdom of God,'—we never troubled ourselves about this kingdom, nor do we intend to do so,—we are disciples of Christ, and through him do we look with confidence to God for our salvation." Is it right? Is this a sound position? Does it indicate a proper frame of mind? Jesus preached the gospel of the kingdom of God, Matt. iv. 23. That is a fact thoroughly attested. Suppose some of his hearers had said to him, "we never trouble ourselves about this kingdom, and we don't intend to do so,—we are your disciples, and through you do we look with confidence to God for our salvation." What would he have replied? Would he not have said, "you cannot be my disciples, for you do not believe what I preach. God sent me to preach this kingdom, and if you receive not my words, it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for you." Would he not have said, "I am the sower of the good seed, which is the word of God, Luke viii. 11; which is the word of the kingdom. Matt. xiii. 19. If you do not hear the word of the kingdom, you cannot be my disciples; and if you hear the word of the kingdom and do not understand it, the wicked one will soon catch it away, so that, whatever you imagine, no fruit will redound to your account, none of the good seed will ever spring up in your hearts," Matt. xiii. 19. Under such dire condemnation and exposure, do those place themselves who treat as unimportant the kingdom which Christ preached, and all the time claim to be his disciples.

Perhaps some other readers may say, "We cannot regard as unimportant anything that Christ said, and much less what he has sent to preach, and what, also, he sent first twelve, and afterwards seventy other disciples to preach. There is no denying, nor is there, on our part, any disposition to deny, that faith in the kingdom of God was essentially required in the Jews during our Lord's ministry, and that none were at that time accounted his disciples who did not profess to receive the word of the kingdom. We acknowledge most readily that to preach the kingdom at that time was to preach the gospel, Luke ix. 2-6; and that it is even called preaching the gospel of the kingdom. But what we want to know is this—Firstly, Was the gospel of the kingdom preached after the crucifixion of Jesus? and secondly, What is meant by "the Kingdom of God?"

To these questions I answer, that the kingdom of God was preached after the crucifixion of Jesus, is proven by the passages already cited from Acts viii. and xxviii. It was from these chapters indeed that we found the sum of Christian faith to be the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. The things concerning the name of Jesus Christ are added to the things concerning the kingdom of God. They are both banded together as one faith. It was when the Samaritans believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ that they were baptized, both men and women, Acts viii. 12. Further, I answer, Jesus predicted "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations," Matt. xxvi. 14. This was not fulfilled before his crucifixion, which followed but a very few days after. When could it then be fulfilled but after his crucifixion? Before this prediction was uttered, the mission had been confined to Israel, and only in exceptional cases did he "cast the dogs eat under the children's table," Mark vii. 28. His disciples had never till that time preached beyond the bounds of Judea and Galilee. They were expressly forbidden to go into the way of the Gentiles, or into any city of the Samaritans. And, instead of preaching the gospel of the kingdom as a witness unto all nations, they were charged to go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Matt. x. 5, 6. But after his resurrection, the limitation of the scene of their labors, and of the persons whom they should preach to, was removed by the command, "Go ye unto all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," Mark xvi. 15. Lay all these facts together, and there is no getting to any other conclusion, than that the gospel they were commanded to preach in all the world to every creature was the same gospel of the kingdom which they had previously preached, and which he had foretold should be "preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations." With this conclusion the facts most strictly correspond. The cities of the Samaritans which had been expressly debarred from hearing the disciples preaching the kingdom during our Lord's humiliation, were the first non-Israelitish cities, after his ascension, that heard the gospel preached, Acts viii. 25; and it is called, as we have seen "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ." At Miletus he summed up his whole preaching in Asia in these words "the Kingdom of God," and told the Ephesian elders that by that preaching he cleared himself from the blood of all men (Acts xx. 17-18). And in the same way the Kingdom, together with the name is, as we have also seen, preached for salvation in Rome, the then mistress and metropolis of the world.

To the other question put—viz., What is meant by the kingdom of God? we will now give our attention. Some persons will say, "It is easy to say, 'We believe the things concerning the kingdom of God;' but it is another and more difficult thing to understand what is meant by these words. If the various religious bodies were to insert these words into their respective creeds, they would have made no progress unless they understood and believed what the words expressed in the time of the early Christians. Indeed, unless they apprehended the true correct meaning of the words, the insertion of them in the creeds would be a positive source of error, for they would inevitably attach some meaning to them, and if not the right meaning, then certainly a wrong one." Now this is all true. It is useless to adopt the ancient and approved words unless they still express the ancient and approved ideas. It is worse than useless, for the ideas we erroneously attach to the words will prejudice us against the correct ideas. They are therefore right, who insist that along with a return to the use of the original phraseology, there must be a restoration of it to its original meaning. That it once had a distinct, specific, well-understood meaning, is certain; and it is our object, as it is essentially the interest of every man, to find out and embrace that meaning.

John the Baptist spoke about this kingdom, saying "Repent, for the kingdom of Heaven is at hand." Jesus and the twelve disciples, and the seventy disciples whom he sent forth, all spoke of it in the same words. No one, so far as the four Evangelists record, ever asked, What do you mean by the kingdom of God? The hearers of these preachers seem to have attached a certain meaning to the words. The meaning was either the right meaning or it was wrong; but whether right or wrong the previous revelations from God were the sources of their ideas of the kingdom of God. They may have drunk in human traditions along with the divine revelations, and that to such an extent as to make the Word of God of none effect, even as we also may do; but in so far as the Jewish faith and understanding of the kingdom had good standing ground in the writings of God's prophets, in so far was it the true faith and understanding. If the Books of the Prophets, who spoke before John the Baptist, had been lost or inaccessible, we might have drawn weighty inferences from the circumstances that neither John nor Jesus, nor his eighty-two disciples, gave any explanation to their Jewish hearers of what was meant by "the kingdom of God," and from the fact that the special twelve, who were most in the company and confidence of Jesus, did themselves hold fast and firmly the meaning commonly entertained by the Jewish people concering this kingdom. But when the Books of the Prophets are in our hands, containing those revelations which God gave to prepare Israel for the great coming preacher of the gospel of the kingdom, we may at once betake ourselves to them in the confidence that there we have the sincere, pure, and undulterated, and nourishing, Word of God. The prophecies are no Sibylline oracles that utter an equivocal meaning. On the contrary, they are the sure words to which we do well to take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise. 2 Peter i. 19. Some prophecies cannot be easily understood; but that is no reason why they should not be studied, any more than the fact that there were in Paul's epistles "things hard to be understood." 2 Peter iii. 16, is a reason why Paul's epistles should not be studied. The fact that the untaschable and the unstable wrested Paul's letters, as also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction, 2 Peter iii. 16, is no reason why we should be "fools and slow to believe all that the prophets have spoken," Luke xxiv. 25. It is a reason why we should not wrest the Scriptures, but no reason why we should neglect what holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. 2 Peter i. 21. Long before John the Baptist appeared, God had spoken about his kingdom, and if we want to know the true meaning of the preaching of John and Jesus, and feel the full force of their words, "the kingdom of God is at hand," we must first fill our minds with God's previous revelations concerning his kingdom.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY BIBLES. LATIN. No. II.

After the printing of the first four Bibles, which have been the subject of several articles, the art of printing was scattered widely over Europe by the capture of Mentz in 1462. Throughout the remainder of the century the Bible in Latin continued to be printed in frequent and splendid editions. Mr. Stevens says that during the first forty years of printing, the Bible exceeded in amount all other books put together, and that "its quality, style and variety were not a whit behind its quantity." Not less than a thousand editions of the Bible were printed before the end of the century, most of them of the largest and costliest kind, and nearly all of them in Latin. During this period, Bibles were printed also in German, Italian and other modern languages, but I shall not consider these until I have given a brief sketch of the best known Latin Bibles which followed the first four that have been described.

The Eggestoyn Bibles are usually catalogued as the fifth, sixth and seventh Latin Bibles, and attributed to Heinrich Eggestoyn, Strasburg, 1466, '69, '70. For a time he was thought to be the printer of the Bible of Mentelin, the printer of the third Latin and first German Bible, but was himself the printer of the second German Bible. Eggestoyn was one of many other large Bible printers. He was a man of considerable prominence, being a master of arts and philosophy, an officer of the city, and the chancellor of the Bishop at Strasburg.

Two of Eggestoyn's Latin Bibles were in the Caxton exhibition, both from the Althrop Library, lent by Earl Spencer, one entered as the first edition, 1468, (?) the other as "1468, (?) sometimes attributed to J. Baemler, of Augsburg, but the type the same as that generally attributed to Eggestoyn and the paper-mark undoubtedly his."

Three of Eggestoyn's Bibles are on exhibition in the Lenox Library, one marked "1468-70, (?) the fifth Latin Bible," another marked "Eggestoyn's second edition, Sussex Copy, The Seventh Latin Bible."

The Zoll Bibles bring us to Cologne, the third city to receive the art of printing from Mentz, where Ulric Zoll, probably a workman of Schoeffer, is believed to have printed two folio editions of the Latin Bible, 1470 and 1471. The first book with a date, known to have been printed at Cologne, is St. Chrysostom of the Fiftieth Psalm, 1466. It is attributed to Zoll, whose name is of special interest to us, because he has been mentioned as the chief instructor of William Caxton, the first English printer. Mr. Blades, who has written most exhaustively in regard to Caxton, does not admit this, though he recognized the fact that Caxton was in Cologne during his residence on the continent. He attributes Caxton's typographical work entirely to his association with Colard Mansion at Bruges or elsewhere. Two of Zoll's Cologne Bibles were in the Caxton Exhibition, one from the Althrop and the other from the Bodleian Library. Though Zoll's first dated book was printed in 1466, some bibliographers believe that he began to print as early as 1462. He was not only one of the very earliest printers but one who introduced improvements. After 1487 he always spaced out the lines of his books to an even length. Mr. Blades argues from this that Mansion and Caxton did not learn their art from him, or they would have made use of this improvement in their first productions.

By this time Italy, Bohemia, Switzerland and France had printing-presses, Italy being the first to receive the art from Germany.

The Sweynheym and Pannartz Bible, printed at Rome, 1471, is the first Bible printed out of Germany. In the same year two different translations into Italian were printed at Venice.

Arnold Pannartz and Conrad Sweynheym were Germans, probably workmen of Gutenberg and Fust. They were invited and welcomed to Subiaco, near Rome, by Cardinal Torquemada, the head of the Benedictine monastery in which they established their press. Leading ecclesiastical officials gave them encouragement and help, not dreaming that this magic art would in a few generations completely destroy their temporal power and vastly impair their spiritual supremacy. Sweynheym and Pannartz's first known work, Cicero de Oratore, is believed to have been printed at Subiaco in 1465.

In 1467 they had removed to Rome, where they were established in the house and under the protection of Prince Massimo, and published over eight volumes a year for five years, producing 12,000 copies of books before 1471. Their works were mainly editions of classic authors, and were not so profitable as the large theological folios by which Mentelin, of Strasburg, had been enriched. There is a letter extant in which these printers appeal to Pope Sixtus IV. for help, giving a list of their works. Sweynheym retired from the firm and devoted himself to copper-plate engraving. Their last dated book was issued in December, 1473, though Pannartz continued to print for a few years. Both are said to have died before 1477.

This Roman Latin Bible, 1471, is without [illegible] which [illegible] the place and date. Only two [illegible] several [illegible] and library [illegible] the [illegible] compare [illegible] the [illegible] any [illegible] the [illegible] 1500, the [illegible] of which, (with the exception [illegible] or two verses), these phrases, or words equivalent occur; such for instance, as commandments, statutes, precepts, judgments, etc.

They form, (so to speak) the substratum—the underlying principle of all revelation to man as a subject of moral government—of rewards and punishments, a revelation of his future destiny and the relation he sustains to his Creator, as the rightful Governor of the universe, and to Jesus Christ, who redeemed him from death to which he became subject, by the transgression of the law of Jehovah, which he instituted as a test of his loyalty.

Adam, as the federal head of the race, by partaking of the fruit which was interdicted, "brought death into the world, (and as Milton in his book, entitled "Paradise Lost," has well expressed it,) and all our woe, with the loss of Eden," and of the restitution of the same, we learn only by consulting the Bible—"the word of truth." They Spirit—the word, being identical according to Christ's own testimony. "The words that I speak unto you they are spirit, and they are life." "The words that I speak unto you, shall judge you in the last day." According to the foregoing testimony, we are shut up to the teaching of the words of Christ and his apostles, as the only medium through which we receive that knowledge which will "make us wise unto salvation," through the exercise of "the faith, which was once (for all) delivered to the saints."

The strongest language which it is possible to employ, is brought to bear, in order to show the estimate which Jehovah has placed upon his own word. Besides those already adduced, we may cite a few more out of the hundreds which might be cited if space would permit.

His, (Jehovah's) word "is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

Christ said, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be given unto you."

Jehovah "spake (the word) and it was done, he commanded and it stood fast. His, (Jehovah's) word shall not return unto him void, but it shall accomplish that for which I have sent it."

Without further specification, as to particular texts under this head, I will observe in general terms, that no Bible subject is treated more explicitly, more elaborately than that which relates to the words of Jehovah, and of his Son Jesus Christ, whom he sent into the world, as the second Adam, the progenitor of a race of immortal beings, who are begotten, not by the corruptible, but by the incorruptible seed—"the word of truth, which liveth and abideth forever."

The apostle Paul exhorts Timothy "to study the word, to show himself a workman who need not be ashamed, to rightly divide (classify) the word, and give to each one a portion of meat in due season." It is axiomatic, that words are the signs of ideas, and I know of no good reason which can possibly be assigned, why words occurring in the Bible should not be subjected to the same rules as in other books, especially so, in the absence of anything to the contrary. It certainly would appear very unreasonable to suppose even, that our Heavenly Father would hold us amenable to any law which would be susceptible of different interpretations, and these in conflict with each other, without furnishing the key to unlock the same. I know it is often urged that the Spirit's teachings by a certain influence, such as was exemplified on the day of Pentecost, like a rushing mighty wind, which could not be [illegible] influence it came or went, but it must be [illegible] Draft [illegible] or [illegible] it goes [illegible] to study the Scriptures [illegible] the reason that the [illegible] the channel or medium by which the Spirit communicates to man. A failure then, to search the Scriptures, the word, is sure to bring leanness and barrenness.

Paul, in his letter to the Hebrews, says, God who at sundry times and in diverse manners spake in times past unto our fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds. Heb. i. 1, 2.

It would seem by this, that we are now shut up to the teaching of Christ and his apostles. M. I. LEWIS.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, June 3, 1885.

SOME communications and literary notices must go over to a future number.

CONTRARY to the expectations of a few days ago, the last news is, that the Anglo-Russian controversy is not settled. Whatever turn events may take, those looking for the Lord know that God is in history, and that he is shaping the course of all that transpires to a grand and glorious consummation, as foreshown by all his holy prophets. We are on the very threshold of another dispensation, where the gospel age and the kingdom age are blending. In this "conflux of ages" watchfulness, prayer and a deeply consecrated life should characterize every professed follower of Christ. The crown of glory will soon be eternally won or lost. We shall soon be among the "taken" or the "left."

ATTENTION the article—Remarkable Revival among the Jews of Germany and Southern Russia—is somewhat lengthy it will interest every reader. The blighted fig tree of Jewish Nationality, that has stood before the world for an age despoiled of both foliage and fruit, is indeed now showing signs of returning life. Our readers will turn to our Savior's language as contained in Matt. xxi. 19, compared with Matt. xxiv. 32. The cause of unfruitfulness was not for an age but for an age, and the most certain sign that this gospel age is near its end is the budding and leaving-out of the Jewish fig tree. God has said by the prophet Isaiah that—"He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root. Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." Isa. xxvii. 6. It will be noted that the Jewish converts in this wonderful movement accept the history of the birth of Jesus by the Virgin Mary, as recorded by Luke, as well as the Messianic passages from the Old Testa- that these are fulfilled in the true Son of God and In these days of olitic and apostasy

Homiletic Monthly of England the past several months been a series of papers by some ling theological scholars of on this question, in what ymposium. Edward White ries in a very able answerable ar foundation of the Lord in the immortality of man," showing that the popular doctrine has no foundation either in Scripture, or reason or sound philosophy. I have just received a copy of this article from the author, and gladly place it at your disposal.

But my special object at this time is to give some account of an important discussion on this question at a recent meeting of the pastors and delegates of the French Reformed church of Paris, April 27.

Their conferences, as they are called, are held annually, in different parts of France, and the topics for discussion with the principal speakers are designated in advance. At the last previous meeting, the subject of "conditional immortality or life in Christ," was fixed upon for their discussion at this meeting at Paris, and Charles Byse of Brussels, whose name is familiar to you readers, as the minister of the gospel who has suffered so severely for his faith, was appointed to open the question, and to advocate the doctrine. The report of this discussion has just reached me by the favor of my esteemed friend, Dr. Petavel—translated from a French paper for my use, by his excellent wife. I am happy to give it below.

J. H. PETTINGELL.

"CONFERENCES GENERALES," OF THE FRENCH REFORMED CHURCH IN PARIS.

It is well known that the "Conferences generales" held in Paris during the month of April are usually the "rendezvous" of a number of distinguished Evangelical pastors of all denominations, who discuss questions previously determined upon.

This year the meetings have been well attended, full of animation and very fraternal in tone; the controversy was keen, but without bitterness. Three mornings were devoted to the consideration of a subject which increasingly engrosses the attention of the Christian public, viz: Life in Christ or conditional immortality, a so-called new doctrine, which, nevertheless, can be traced back to the apostolic age.

The Conference of last year had appointed a Swiss theologian who has written for his conditionalist convictions a report on this subject, this year, Mr. Byse, pastor of the Free church of Brussels, and pastor Ducros of Paris to reply. The choir was taken in turn by M. Butter, president of the committee of the Home Mission, and by M. Gustave Monod, junior.

The paper of M. Byse was a study of biblical theology, the object of which was to prove that according to the Old Testament there is no immortality for man except in communion with the living God, and that this communion is through his Son Jesus Christ.

The author had intended to read only a portion of his report, but it occupied the whole of the first meeting, the audience expressing the desire to hear it in full. M. Byse was generally applauded, his learning and his moderation were greatly appreciated, while his hearers were favorably impressed by the absence of all recrimination towards the Belgian Synod which had condemned him as a heretic.

Strange to say, not a voice was raised in defence of the traditional dogma of endless punishment. Surely this is a sign of the times.

In order to refute M. Byse, M. Ducros was compelled to take a position which was almost Universalist. In hell, as M. Ducros conceives it the damned are never irrevocably lost. The redeeming work of Christ will be carried on indefinitely and every sinner will be saved at last. M. Guillaume Monod supported this opinion. He was followed by M. Petavel-Olff of Geneva, who summed up the previous debate by enumerating the four rival theories.

1. The traditional dogma of endless torment which, though without official champions, still counts a certain number of adherents, chiefly the laity, and especially among ladies.

2. Universalism, either absolute or conditional.

3. What may be called eschatological agnosticism, which refuses to take any decision with regard to what it considers an unfathomable mystery.

4. Conditionalism.

The latter point of view not only invokes the Bible, with which it esteems itself in perfect harmony, but also native, and religious consciousness. Professor Drummond, in the volume which has attracted so much attention in England, sees conditionalism in the laws of nature as well as those of the spiritual world.

In a lecture just published, M. Babut, pastor of Nismes, admits the same principles. In the other [illegible] conditionalism has found favor [illegible] able school of duty; known [illegible] under the name of Neo-orthodoxy. The leaders of this school, M. [illegible] postulates of practical reason.

Lastly conditionalism does not quench zeal, since on the contrary, it stimulates to action an increasing number of missionaries and evangelists. Messrs Rochedieu of Brussels, Chas. Vernes, Matter, and Pulsford of Paris, afterwards took part in the discussion. M. F. Buanx read a letter from M. Stienhell, the venerable philanthropist of Rothau.

On the whole, most of the speakers were in favor of Universalism, nevertheless the general sentiments of the audience were perhaps best interpreted by the address of M. Lauheret, pastor at the Hague, who has a leaning towards eschatological agnosticism. He hopes for final restoration, yet is disposed to admit the annihilation of the most obstinate sinners. In his opinion, Scripture, psychology, and experience teach alike, that sensuality brutalizes man and that pride leads to insanity; these two maladies are equally deadly for the soul, but the preacher should endeavor above all, to point out the disastrous consequences of sin in this life.

A few minutes were allowed M. Byse to answer his opponents. He complained of their having deserted the ground of biblical exegesis which he had chosen. Conditionalism has been accused by some of being too severe, by others, of being too lax. These contradictory reproaches destroy each other. God pardons the repentant sinner, but he does not force a blessed immortality upon the obstinate offender who rejects it, and condemns himself to perish of thirst, by forsaking the spring of living water. In conclusion, M. Byse records the demise of the traditional dogma of endless torments. No one attempted to defend it, or even to present it in its true authentic form.—Bible Banner.

Conditional Immortality in Europe.

I learn from private letters, as well as from periodicals and reports of conferences, which I am constantly receiving from friends in Europe, that the doctrine of life only in Christ is gaining in favor and force, especially among the clergy and learned professors, both in England and on the Continent. A few months since I received from Mr. Petavel of Geneva, a copy of a private letter from the learned Professor Junker of Holland, in which he declares his full belief in this doctrine.

At a meeting of the Synod of the Reformed church of France held last October at Montpellier, composed of more than fifty pastors, besides many elders laymen, Mr. Babut—who is described by M. de Pressense, the distinguished senator of France, as the "leader of evangelical Protestantism in the southern departments,"—read an argument in opposition to the traditional doctrine of inherent immortality, which was assented to by M. Bonnet of Frankfort, the well-known evangelical commentator, and supported by M. Sabatier, the Christian Science Professor of Montpellier, and which was well received by the whole assembly. A copy of this address has been sent to me in the Revue Theologique, but I have no time to translate it, and besides, it would be too long for the columns of this paper.

Only last December, Prof. Bonney, one of the most distinguished men of science, and a preacher of orthodox Christianity, took decided ground in his Belcam lectures in favor of the doctrine of eternal life in Christ. Professor Drummond in his recent very popular work, entitled "Natural law in the Spiritual World," has demonstrated that natural immortality of man is a scientific as well as a scriptural impossibility; and that there cannot be any immortality existing by union with the Deity in a new, holy, and spiritual life. I might go on to mention the names of many men, eminent for scientific and theological learning in England and on the Continent who have come to the support of this doctrine.

The [illegible] International Standard for May is a review of a pamphlet written by R. Courtney of Bombay Civil Service, and some illustrating diagrams and numbers explaining the author's chronological deductions from the measurements of the great Gallery of the Great Pyramid. In the lines and intersection of lines it is claimed that the dates of the momentous events in history corresponding with the prophetic periods of Daniel's prophesy are indicated. We give the author's own summing up:—"In the foregoing pages I have endeavored to keep as close as possible to actual measurements, and to alter them (even then to the most trifling extent) only when they differed amongst themselves, and when the aid of theory had to be invoked to determine towards what precise quantity they all tended. With one solitary exception—that of the battle of Waterloo, which was absolutely required to serve as a fixed point in chronology—history has not influenced in the smallest degree the determination of any length or height or angle, and yet from the Great Pyramid has been evolved a long series of events, the most important in the history of the world since the beginning, more than two thousand five hundred years ago, of the Times of the Gentiles, viz., the era of Nabonassar, the fall of Nineveh, the union of the crowns of Media and Persia under Cyrus, the very day of the accession of Alexander the Great, the birth of Our Blessed Lord, and his crucifixion, the birth of Mohammed, the taking of Jerusalem by Omar, the battle of Waterloo, the eighteenth centenary of the martyrdom of St. Peter, the fall of the Pope's temporal power and the proclamation of his infallibility. I have shown that the book of Daniel and the Great Pyramid are one, and that both point emphatically to 1837 as the termination of the Times of the Gentiles. Far be it from me to assert, that in that year the world will come to an end. I look for that event to happen not before but after the millennium, and even then, when this world has been renovated and purified by fire, we according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. But I do expect that in 1837 the Turks will have been expelled from Palestine."

Aunts—Calling People "Old."

"The old man," "the old woman," "old Wilson," "old Robinson,"—that is the way in which many people choose to speak of those who are no longer young. Again, men will call their wives, and newly married men their young wives, "my old woman." Boys, too, are addicted to calling their father and mother, "our old man" and "the old woman." Now this is all very wrong, and what neither children or unproven people will be guilty of, who are well taught and well disposed.

Children, to begin with, owe other treatment to their parents than that of speaking of them in a contemptuous manner. "Honor thy father and thy mother." Calling them old, even if they are three score years and ten, is not honoring them: it is speaking of them as if you did not think much about them, thought lightly of them, did not much care about them—old and worthless; whereas, you are likely very much in their debt for their kindness to you, and care, ever since you were born. It shows a want of thought, a want of feeling, a hardness of heart, which promises anything but good for you as you grow up. If you, while young, can be in the receipt of blessings from your parents—which no money could buy—and you have not the feeling to make you speak of them with love and reverence; nor the reverence nor the shame to try to make you hide your want of good feeling, you are surely in the way which is broad and leadeth downward to misery.

And even if your parents are not so good as they might be, that is a matter for you to hide, and be sorry for in secret, rather than to seem if you were willing that everybody should know it, by your calling them "old."

When one hears a young man, newly married, calling his young wife, "my old woman," it is not a good sign. If your wife is a good one, you ought not to speak of her so; hardly in jest, even. You ought to call her by her name, as "Mrs. Wilson," or Mrs. Robinson;" or, if you feel as though that sounded rather too fine, say, "my wife," or "my Mary." You ought to be considerate and tender of your wife's feelings, for she is worth it; and it will be sure to pay you in the long run.

There are some men—not a few, indeed—who seem as though they were ashamed to speak of their wives as if they respected and loved them. Now, these feelings of love and esteem are not a matter to make a parade of in the market place, yet to respect and love a good wife, is one of the most fitting and proper things in the world, and you need not be ashamed who knows it. You may safely venture to speak of your wife as if you really thought the great deal of her; and nobody, whose good opinion is worth anything, will think worse of you for it.

And if your wife is not a good one, or only a sort of a second or third rate one, calling her "old" will not help to mend her. Call her "old," and keep at it, and she will be in great danger of coming to feel "old." "Yes, I'm old, and good for nothing: it's no use for me trying to be any thing." That is how she will feel, and your calling her "old," will help to kill out, if possible, whatever good may be in her; and she may get old and good for nothing sure enough, much quicker than will be good for either you or your children.

And then to be letting everybody know that you are such a simpleton as to have got a bad wife, or one that is not a very good one, by always speaking lightly of her, as "my old woman," is not for your own credit. It would be better to hide it, say nothing about it, and set to work and see if you cannot make your wife better by kind treatment. Who knows but that you might so improve her, that you might, at length, with propriety, speak of her to others in a respectful manner.

And then as to those people who cannot find it in their hearts to speak of any body scarcely, without calling them "old," you ought to learn better. If you know how well all such talk is understood by well informed and well-behaved people, you would be more sparing of it. It is a mark of ill breeding—a way which low-bred people take of speaking of their betters, under the notion, that by speaking contemptuously of others they give themselves a lift, and that there is something about it rather smart; but it is a mistake. You can no more lift yourself up by respectability in any such way: neither is it smart, or clever. It is bad manners; and bad manners means a badly furnished head, and not a very good heart.

Those people who are old, have no need to be thus reminded of it: nor yet those who are approaching old age. Let them feel young as long as they can. If the feeling of oldness and worthlessness never comes upon them, it will be all the better. "Gray hairs are a crown of glory, if found in the way of righteousness." And if not found in the way of righteousness, yet, in the owners of those gray hairs are so much the care of the great and good God, as to be still living with us, that alone is enough to entitle them to kind and respectful treatment.—Scottish Herald Expositor.

The Palm Tree's Lessons.

The uses of the palm tree are almost as varied as its different species. In Egypt and the countries along the Nile, it is used for almost every purpose the limited wants of the natives demand. The roofs of the mud huts are covered with the broad leaves woven together; beds, carpets, and rugs are made in a similar manner, of the same material; baskets used for carrying burdens, rustic stools, sandals, girdles for the waist, are all made wholly or in part from some species of the palm. It also furnishes oil for light, and forms no small part of the native's food.

The fruit of the date palm is quite well known in its preserved form. The dates grow in clusters, and ripen in August, September and October. When the juice is pressed out, they can be kept in solid masses for a long time, and are quite a delicacy.

The palm is frequently alluded to in the Bible in a figurative sense. It is regarded as a symbol of beauty; hence, a beautiful person or the church, is sometimes said to be like the palm tree. The life of a religious, upright man is said to be like the growth of the beautiful palm. Psa. xcii. 12.

In ancient times the palm was a sign of victory, and it was also usual to scatter branches in the way before kings, as they entered into cities on public occasions. It was therefore a mark of highest honor to the Savior when the people "took branches of palm trees and went forth to meet him," and strewed them before him as he entered into Jerusalem.

We slip from an exchange the following beautiful comparison between the stately palm's source of nutriment, and the hidden fountain of divine grace from which our spiritual being must receive its nourishment. "On the desert there grows one kind of palm which, if its leaf is pierced, will give forth water for the thirsty traveler. One traveler, who could not account for this in a season when no rain fell, and not much moisture could be exhaled from the sand, had the natives dig down till at the depth of forty feet they came to water. The mystery was explained. The tree had stretched its roots downward, and pushed its tendrils farther and farther until at last they drank from cool waters buried so far from the light.

In like manner the refreshment and life that comes from God sometimes seems to us to be far down, out of sight, covered up under our daily work and study and haste, just as the stream is hidden by the waves of shining sand. As the winds pile these higher all the time, so the circumstances of life pile higher and higher above our sense of God's blessed help. Yet, like the palm, we must reach down and down, through everything that comes between, to God. And when we have done it, think what a blessed result. We not only grow and thrive, but we have within ourselves the living water—a well within us—springing up into everlasting life that may refresh every tired and thirsty soul that comes within our reach."—The Young Disciple.

About Darkness.

[illegible]
Things need to be [illegible]

Dark, little folks, dark? Well, suppose it is dark as Egypt, can't God see in the dark, even darkness that can be felt, see right through every nook and corner of your heart? To be sure he can, there is not a thought escapes his omniscient eye. He knows your inmost soul. What—sin in the dark, because it is dark? Dare you, little folks or great folks? You may escape the eye of man, but God's eye never. His eyes go to and fro everywhere with lightning flash!

Sin anywhere, on your bed, in the secret chamber, sin where you will,—little sins or great sins, sins of the flesh or the spirit, thought, word or deed; be sure they find you out. Some little folks, and some great folks, sin in the dark, or the covert of night, loving darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. The murderer rising with the light, killeth the poor and needy, and in the night is as the thief."

Hark again: "The eye also of the adulterer waiteth for the twilight, saying no eye shall see me—and disgiseth his face." "In darkness they dig through houses which they have marked for themselves, in the daytime they know not the light." "Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their council from the Lord, and their works are in the dark.... for they say, the Lord seeth us not." Remember, friends, there is not a word in our tongue but that the Lord knows it altogether. Says the Psalmist: Whither shall I go from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there. If I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me: Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee, but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee." See Psalm cxxx. Oh! what a fearful thing to sin against such a God.

Furthermore remember, aside from the shame, guilt, and wretchedness here, on account of our sins, there's a fearful judgment awaiting every sinner. Every one, great and small, must soon stand before the judgment seat of Christ; where every one must give account to God for the deeds done in the body, whether good or evil. There, at the great day, all our secret sins,—sins of the deepest dye, even the works of darkness of which it is a shame to speak,—will be spread out to the open gaze of an assembled universe.

"Could we on morning's swiftest wings,
Fly through the trackless air,
Or dive beneath the ocean springs,
The Spirit there would be there.

In vain we guilt attempt to fly,
Concealed by darkest night,
One glance from the all-piercing eye,
Can bring it all to light.

Search thou our hearts, and there destroy
Each secret [illegible],
And fill our [illegible]
That we may enter in."

MY TIMES ARE IN THY HAND.

Father, I know that all my life
Is portion'd out for me;
And the changes that are sure to come
I do not fear to see;
But I ask Thee for a present mind,
Intent on pleasing Thee.

I ask Thee for a thoughtful love,
Through constant watching wise,
To meet the glad and joyful smiles,
And wipe the weeping eyes;
And a heart at leisure from itself,
To soothe and sympathize.

I would not have the restless will
That hurries to and fro,
Seeking for some great thing to do,
Or secret thing to know:
I would be treated as a child,
And guided where I go.

Wherever in the world I am,
In whatsoe'er estate,
I have a fellowship with hearts
To keep and cultivate;
And a work of lowly love to do
For the Lord on whom I wait.

So I ask Thee for the daily strength
To none that ask denied,
And a mind to blend with outward life
While keeping at Thy side;
Content to fill a little space,
If Thou be glorified.

And if some things I do not ask
In my cup of blessing be,
I would have my spirit fill'd the more
With grateful love to Thee—
More careful, not to serve Thee much,
But to please Thee perfectly.

There are briers besetting every path,
That call for patient care;
There is a cross in every lot,
And an earnest need for prayer:
But a lowly heart, that leans on Thee,
Is happy anywhere.

In a service which Thy will appoints
There are no bonds for me;
For my inmost heart is taught the Truth
That makes Thy children free;
And a life of self-renouncing love
Is a life of liberty.

ONCE MORE.

Several have written me urgently as to the Sonship question, and duty has demanded my brief articles; and yet there are essential points now demanding notice. My material seems inexhaustible; but my statements shall be brief. "In the beginning was the word—The Logos." John i. 1. "In word" is contrasted with "in deed." Logos is that which is spoken from logo, I speak; "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made. He spake and it was done," Ps. xxxiii. 6-9; cxlviii. 5. The creative word made (produced; brought forth, caused) creation. But the range of this Divine word reached on beyond Adam and the foreseen creature frailty of man "in sin and death," to "the second man, the Messiah, the Restitution.—New earth, new covenant—All things new!" Therefore on this line "the word-logos of promise, Rom. ix. 9; was made flesh. God sent forth his Son, in the fullness of time, made of a woman"—to redeem, restore and save. Rom. viii. 19-23; Gal. iv. 4.

1. The power of sin in the flesh prevailed to make the first born of Adam, the first murderer!—The first born of Abraham was the first Ishmaelite; and hence on and on, till the first born of the chosen Nation was displaced for the tribe of Levi; so that "the children of the flesh are not (anytime or any how) the children of God." Rom. ix. 8-9. (Joseph is not an exception). Those of promise (alone) are counted for the seed." They come in on a higher plane. Their calling is of God in Christ. In this light of revelation and all the historic facts of the case, we see how superficial, short-sighted and erring, those are who wrest Joseph's "supposed son" out from "the record that God gave of his Son;" because, for special objects of law, discipline, example, etc., he was "the child born" into Joseph's household. Is your impression on Isa. vii. 14; more divine than St. Matthew's Apostolic commission? No. No. Let the word stand over all—whether in politics, prophesy or promise, it is like sovereign.

II. "The Logos evangelize"—the original announcement of redemption by the seed of the woman, Gen. iii. 15. Its repetition to Abraham the father of the faithful, as expounded and applied by St. Paul, Rom. iv. 9; links the redemptive, together with the creative, "Logos,—according to his own purpose and grace, given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; 2 Tim. i. 9. For "in the beginning was the Logos (that is the fullness of time) was made flesh—the only begotten of the Father full of grace and truth." John i. 14; 1 John i. 1-3. Let those who extend the political events of Isa. vii. 7-16, over the Messianic language of v. 14 (and seem to the ignorant, to crush out all quoted by St Matthew i. 22-25; St. Luke i. 26-35) be a little rational and read on to Isaiah ix. 1-7; and undo and deny "the child born and Son given—the throne of David and the Prince of Peace there foretold; say more, go on through all like prophecies and promises and defy their apostolic and manifold application by the Holy Ghost throughout the gospels! Are they not all substantially Messianic? Surely they are; to take them out would emasculate "the Gospel of God!" do you not see that "the Logos evangelize"—the word of promise—is contemporaneous with the "Gentiles who have scattered Israel, Judah and Jerusalem?" Zech. i. 18-22. "In thine eye single" that can see the trending down Gentile power and not get even a glimpse of "the word—Logos—of promise" that has kept faith alive through all adverse events of the ages past? Do you not also see that as the political events noted in Isa. vii. and ix. and Dan. ix. transpired in succession and on the line of chronological prophesy; so also, that the captivity of Israel in, and the return of Israel from Babylon; and their history on "the Messiah the prince," must have transpired not in the time of Ahaz, etc., but historically, as outlined; Isa. xlv. Jer. xxv. Dan. ix. 21-27; Mar. i. 14; Gal. iv. 4.

It seems clear that you (or others for you) make your own obstacles as to both the prophesy and history; to set up Joseph in the room of "God the Father," "Let God be true," and throw doubts to the winds. Amen.

III. But transcending all such general considerations we read of "The root and offspring of David. Rev. v. 5-22; 16; Acts ii. 29-30; Matt. xxii. 43-45; Psa. cx. 1. This alone is a demonstration of your utter mistake in thought and manner of argument, all through. For who, with reason (even without revelation) would imagine that Joseph's Son "after the flesh" could be the root of David 1,000 years before Joseph himself, or be the Logos of promise—in the beginning—4,000 years prior to himself! or the bright morning star "of the yet future great and appearing Day of God!" Surely you are far, very far out of the way of the truth, "John xiv. 5; and are sadly in need of a helping brother's hand, James v. 20.

But to close, on the basis of such unquestionable testimony, my appeal is to your logeonsuosss (for I did and do concede your manly endowments as they appear often above lowminded men) and ask why not join in grateful adoration of "God in Christ reconciling the world to himself." 2 Cor v. 19-21. Why not speak the same things? 1 Cor. i. 10; with Paul, Jesus, his angel and God. Why not echo with adoring gratitude his words, "I am the Son of God—John x. 36; I am the Son of the Blessed"? Mar. xiv. 61-62; Luke xxii. 69-71; John xi. 6-10. It seems disingenuous in a man with your endowments to evade the Lord Jesus' titles of highest honor.

Surely you would not so disparage even a natural brother by whom you had obtained an inheritance, education and position of honor! No, no, So here all that an upright minded man should need is an occasion and opportunity to say the best things possible and speak applaudingly of his benefactor.—Let us unite and sing, "I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me—To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen! Gal. ii. 20; Rev. i. 5-6. Lovingly is the one hope through Jesus—Son of God.

J. B. Cook.

Seventy Times Seven or Seventy Weeks of Daniel.

The angel Gabriel came and talked with the prophet and said: "O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophesy, and to anoint the Most Holy.

Know therefore and understand that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks and three score and two weeks, the street shall be built again and the wall even in troublous times.

And after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself, and the people of the Prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary, and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined.

And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week, and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate even until the consummation and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate.

Observe that in erecting the tabernacle of testimony in the wilderness, the court was always the last to be put in place, and until it was erected the whole was not completed. So from the commandment to build the wall of Jerusalem, for until that was done the city was not restored, nor rebuilt—must we count the seventy weeks or 490 years.

The date of the work on the wall by Nehemiah the Tirshatha Usher gives as 455 B. C. Now subtract from 490 years and we reach A. D., 35. Unto Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks and three score and two weeks, 69 weeks equals 483 years which reach to A. D., 28. Usher gives A. D., 27, as the time that John the Baptist begins to preach and to baptize in the desert of Judea, and A. D., 35 Saul of Tarsus is miraculously converted by a voice from heaven. So we find the seventh week reaches from A. D. 28, the beginning of the ministry of Jesus, to the conversion of Saul in A. D. 35. And he, Christ or Messiah the Prince, shall confirm the covenant with many for one week, and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate even until the consummation and that determined upon the desolate.

During this seven years the gospel was preached and the common people heard it gladly, and believed, but the Pharisees—the Scribes and the rulers of the people, rejected this gospel, that was preached among them. Wonderful years were these, the most wonderful the world has ever witnessed.

Wonders and powerful works were indeed done in these seven years—Christ after his calling of the disciples, his teachings and sacrifice rose from the dead to the power of an endless life, and the tombs were opened and many bodies of the saints that had fallen asleep were raised, and coming forth out of the tombs after his resurrection they entered into the Holy City and appeared unto many." N. R.

Probably they were the twenty-four elders (John saw) "sitting upon thrones with crowns of gold upon their heads around about the throne, having each one a harp and golden bowls full of incense which are the prayers of saints," representing the "manifestation of the sons of God" in the resurrected state. Surely with these did he, the Messiah "confirm the covenant with many for one week (many of the saints arose and appeared unto many) the believers of the new covenant, he, the Messiah confirmed the covenant with the dead and the living during that notable week. Remember the baptism of the Son of God to fulfill all righteousness. The life, the tribulations, the crucifixion, the burial, the resurrection, the ascension of our Lord and Redeemer—Jesus of Nazareth—who with his precious blood atoned for our sins, and not for ours only but for the sins of the whole world. Yes, Jesus paid it all, all the debt I owe. All glory be to him who redeemed us from the power of the grave in raising us to life again. O death, where is thy sting; O grave, where is thy victory. Further remember the raising of the saints from their graves after his resurrection, and the day of Pentecost when the witnesses of Jesus received an earnest of their inheritance by that wonderful outpouring of the Spirit, who was sent to lead and inspire them into all truth. Remember the wonderful conversion of masses of people, when three thousand souls obeyed the command and were baptized in one day. Remember the marvelous conversion of Saul of Tarsus, when the voice from heaven was heard, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me." "Who art thou Lord," was answered. "I am Jesus of Nazareth whom thou persecutest," which argument convinced Paul, that all that the disciples taught concerning the Son of God was true, and he immediately became a Nazarene believer. And then remember that these events occurred in the one week of years, the seventieth week. Not strange is it that it should be classed as a week by itself. This wonderful week of seven years.

We by believing the word of testimony, will receive the Comforter who is sent to lead us into all truth. "Thy word is truth." "I am Jesus of Nazareth whom thou persecutest." "I am the Son of God." "I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst; he that eateth this bread shall live forever." "I am the way, the truth, and the life." "I am the resurrection and the life." "I am the first, and the last, and the living one, and I was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore, and I have the keys of death and of Hades." "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the first, and the last, the beginning and the end." "I, Jesus, have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, the bright the morning star."

Ecclesiasticus says of wisdom, whatever giveth ear to her shall judge the nations, and he that attendeth unto her shall dwell securely. If a man commit himself unto her he shall inherit her, and his generation shall hold her in possession. For at the first she will walk with him by crooked paths and bring fear and dread upon him, and torment him with her discipline, until she may trust his soul, and try him by her laws. Then will she return the straight way unto him, and comfort him, and show him her secrets; but if he go wrong she will forsake him and give him over to his own ruin." Eccl. iv. 15, 19. This well illustrates the course of the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, with the ecclesia.

"This is the victory that hath overcome the world, even our faith. And who is he that overcometh the world but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God." "Herein was the love of God manifested in our case, that God hath sent his only begotten Son into the world that we might live through him. For the witness of God is this, that he hath borne witness concerning his Son. He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in him. He that believeth not God's hath made him a liar because he hath not believed in the witness that God hath borne concerning his Son. And the witness is this, that God gave unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath the life, he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life. These things have I written unto you that ye may know that ye have eternal life, even unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have eternal life. For God sent not the Son into the world to judge the world, but that the world should be saved through him. He that believeth on him is not judged, he that believeth not hath been judged already because he hath not believed on the name of the only begotten Son of God. And this is the judgment, that the light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than the light, for their works were evil. For every one that doeth ill, hateth the light and cometh not to the light, lest his works should be reproved. But he that doeth the truth cometh to the light, that his works may be made manifest, that they have been wrought in God." John the Baptist, who was not the light, but came that he might bear witness of the light." "We have seen and have borne witness that this is the Son of God." [illegible] to Nathaniel we have found him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph. Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? was the query. Come and see. Jesus when he saw Nathaniel, says, Behold an Israelite, indeed, in whom there is no guile. Nathaniel answered him, Rabbi, thou art the Son of God. Thou art King of Israel. This before the resurrection of Jesus as a way was known by the disciples and followers of Jesus. "Believest thou, thou shalt see greater things than these," answered Jesus. It is as to how we believe on Jesus the Christ, the Son of God, this Jesus of Nazareth, for there is no other name given under heaven whereby we can be saved. The truth as it is in Jesus is the prepared virtuals of which we eat in passing over this river Jordan or judgment.

GROWING.

Give him that hath [illegible] given
Ever more abundantly."
Lord, I live because thou livest,
Therefore give more life to me!
Therefore speed the to the race!
Therefore let me grow in grace.

Deepen all thy work, O Master,
Strengthen every downward root,
Make me more thy pleasant fruit,
Purge me, prune me, tell thee,
quit [illegible] me grow in grace.

Grant, grace for grace outpouring,
Above all [illegible] desires!
Raise me higher, upward soaring,
Mounting as an eagle's wings!
By the brightness of thy face,
Grant [illegible] me grow in grace.

Let me grow by sun or shadow,
Every moment [illegible]
Make me really bear to know
More and more conformed to thee,
Until by [illegible] eyes shall trace,
Day by day, my growth in grace.

Let me, then, be always praising
Where, hour standing waiting,
Listening, hoping, trust keeping
Thus and thy most pleasant will,
Thus may ready thy holy place,
Daily fit me grow in grace.

A GOOD MAN.

"He was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith." Acts xi. 24.

A good man, then, is a man who draws his goodness from God, the source of all goodness. He himself is the type of all perfection, the home of all things fair. Whatsoever things are lovely, and whatsoever things are reverable—all that we call virtue, all to which hearts and consciences ascribe praise—dwell in God as their native home. In the abyss of his being the streams of goodness, which part into many heads to fertilize the wilderness and sweeten the salt marshes of human nature, rest undivided. He is the reality of which all our conceptions of goodness are but the fragmentary representations, the substance of which they are but shadows. Not only so, but as all life is an effluence from him with whom is the fountain of life, and as it is his light in which we see light, so all the goodness which is in men is from above, and cometh from the Father of light. All light and heat are from the sun, and all goodness is of God. All virtues are radiations from him. "They are but broken lights of thee." He alone is good of himself and by himself. Drawing his being from none, he owes his character to none, to no outward helps or occasions his actions, to no imperfection his beauty. Receiving from none he gives to all, and every deed of fair goodness that man has ever done, at the last analysis, has been to the doer no less than to the beholders or the hearers, the gift of God.—A. McLaren.

COMMUNION WITH GOD.

"In him we live, and move, and have our being." Acts xvii. 28.

God's presence amid and throughout the creation is immediate and is constant; not a presence of thought merely, or of organizing plans, or of secondary forces operating for him, but of his own personal and infinite mind. He is near, he is with every one whom he has made; and while no sense takes cognizance of his glory, and no human spirit is bowed beneath its august burden, the soul that thinks of him, and that faithfully and affectionally aspires to meet him, becomes often intimately aware of his presence. That presence is constant too, as well as immediate; so that at no time in all our life, and amid no scenes, are we in the least removed from God. On sea or land, in the tropics or at the poles, the eternal, [illegible] mind of the [illegible] and supreme, and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

"Hold Fast Till I Come."

Firmly, faithful fellowship,
With determined, undivided heart,
Let us, the Master's coming hasten,
Ever watching, ever praying.

Not with sluggish, careless manner
Not impaired, but strong in power,
Each to his appointed labor turning
Day by day, another measure.

Prudent, thankful, trusting
In His Almighty Arm;
Whose all shall be rewarded by Him,
Who will not forget our labor.

Let us, looking, for the day
To hail the coming day,
To welcome Him Beloved
Along the shining way.

Trusting, looking, yet strong,
The morning Redeemer draws near
Your Kingdom to bring,
Deliverance drawing near.

Watchers, watching, faithful,
Soon, very soon, shall we have
Our Deliverance by Triumphant Christ.

REMARKABLE REVIVAL AMONG THE JEWS OF GERMANY AND SOUTHERN RUSSIA.

The Jewish nation can only be understood in the light of their whole history, past and future. "The Jewish question," writes the well-known theologian Baumgarten in 1881, "is a mystery, absolutely sealed to all unbelievers. From the call of Abram to the descent of the heavenly Jerusalem a stream of eternal life flows through the depths of the nations and of humanity; and only when the last seal has been opened the marvellous plan will be understood and seen; only then shall we understand perfectly the import of our present day. Of what avail can it be to point out the failures, sins, and vices of the Jews, [and] to exhort them to be a little more modest?" Such slight improvements can be of no use. A radical conversion [illegible] is a historical fact that, [illegible]ive totally, [illegible]nd Savior to [illegible]ally into fearful [illegible]s, though the high nobility of their origin suffices to preserve among them a large treasure of morality and good customs."

Within the last twenty years the national consciousness of the Jews has become more vivid and vigorous than ever. They feel that, although scattered over the earth, they are one nation; and although not clearly conscious of its nature, they feel that they have a special position and mission in the history of the world. And so we have the apparently contradictory phenomenon, that while Israel is dead, having forsaken their true centre and life, the dry bones, according to the prophecy of Ezekiel, are coming together. We know it is in order that the spirit of the Lord may breathe upon and vivify them.

It would be very interesting, doubtless, but totally beyond their limits, to give even a rapid sketch of the conversions of Jews to Christ since the days of the apostles. We know that in apostolic days there were thousands of believing Christian Jews, and in the first centuries many Jewish Christian churches still kept up the Jewish observance, and had a vivid national consciousness. In the mediæval Church there were also not a few Jews who came to the knowledge of Christ, and of these some became teachers of considerable influence. Last century a great interest in Israel awoke in the German churches, and the labors in connection with Halle, and also those of Count Zinzendorf—to mention only the two most striking—were crowned with wonderful success. The Institutum Judaicum, which was founded last century in Halle by Callenberg, and which sent forth many excellent publications, and many faithful laborers, roused an interest in Israel, which has not died out in Germany, and which only two years ago manifested itself in a revival of a similar union of prayer, study and work.

The origin of the Callenberg movement is interesting. Francke, the founder of the Orphan House in Halle, was travelling in the South of Germany, and visited the venerable prelate Hochstetter, who addressed to him the following words: "In my prayers to God I have always laid before the Lord three petitions. The first for an outpouring of his Holy Spirit on [illegible] and which he must cherish as the vestal virgin had to guard the sacred fire."

When we think that this union in seven German universities originated in prayer and the study of Scripture, that it commenced at a time when the Antisemitic movement was at its height, that its members will be the future pastors of German churches, we cannot but regard this movement with deep gratitude, and the confident hope that streams of blessing will flow from these loving hearts to God's ancient people.

The second movement, that among the Jews in South Russia—directs us most forcibly to the national aspect of the Jewish question. Hitherto in their Christian missionary efforts among the Jews we have dwelt almost exclusively on the conversion of individuals. These have found a spiritual home in Christian churches. The consequence is that they are, so to speak, lost to the Jewish nation. They may testify, both by word and writing, that Jesus is the Messiah, but they are absorbed in the Church. Another consequence is that it has not been impressed sufficiently on the Jews that the gospel does not come to them, as it does to other nations, from without, but that it has its root in their past history; that it is connected originally with their past thought, experience and hope; in short, that it comes to them both from heaven and from among themselves; and that the question, Is Jesus the Messiah? is in the first instance a Jewish question. The prevalent feeling among the Jews is, that to become a Christian is to become as it is were a Gentile; it seems to them like being broken off their old tree and grafted into another tree.

It appears, therefore, an evident indication, a foreshadowing of a national movement, when we hear of Jews, how ever few in number, who have come to the conclusion that their dispersion and condition during the last eighteen centuries is the consequence of their rejection of Jesus; that Jesus is the promised Messiah, Son of David, and King of Israel; that the writings of evangelists and apostles are the continuation of the divine record entrusted to the fathers; that salvation is by grace and righteousness, not by the works of the law, but by faith in the crucified and risen Redeemer. However small such a community may be, and whatever may be its present defects and imperfections, it is [illegible] of prophecy a sign [illegible] of coming events.

The recent persecutions and sufferings of the Jews in Russia and Germany have no doubt led many [illegible] on their mysterious history. One of these, a learned, earnest, and patriotic Jew, lived in Kischineff, in Bessarabia, in which there are more than 85,000 Jews.

In the year 1883 he wrote a Hebrew article in a Jewish paper which appears in St. Petersburg, on the revival of the Jewish ministry or rabbinate. Afterwards he organized a society for colonization and agriculture, and in order himself to see the condition of Palestine he went there, and upon the Mount of Olives the conviction was wrought in his soul, that the key to the Holy Land lies in the hands of "Jesus our Brother," and that the reason why Israel has been dispersed for the last eighteen centuries is because they rejected him who was indeed the promised Messiah.

As he himself expresses it in the articles of faith which he drew up in the Hebrew language, he believes "that the word of the Lord to Abraham, our father, to Moses, our prophet, to Israel, our king, and to his servants, the true prophets, has been fulfilled and accomplished about seventy years before the destruction of our temple: for the Lord has visited his people, and raised up for us the righteous Branch, viz., the Lord Jesus, the Christ, who came forth out of Bethlehem, the city of David, to be the ruler in Israel. He, the exalted Son of the Most High, to whom his Father has given the throne of David, suffered, was crucified, and buried for our salvation. He rose from the dead, and lives, and behold, he is seated at the right hand of our Father in heaven."

In this creed he also declares that we are justified by grace apart from the law through the death and resurrection of Jesus; that the Scriptures of the New Testament are to be regarded as of equal divine authority with the old, and that while the unbelief of Israel was made by divine sovereignty and grace the occasion of bringing salvation to the Gentiles, the time has now come for Israel to return to God and his Messiah.

Mr. Rabinowitch, whose words I have been quoting, has come to this knowledge without the help of Christians, although, strange to say, in the very place in which he lived many Jews had of late years been under the influence of the gospel. Pastor Faltin, the minister of the Lutheran congregation, had his attention directed to Israel by the remark of a simple, aged Christian, who for many years had remembered the Jews in her prayer, and who said to him one day "Do not forget the thousands of Jews who live here, and do not know Jesus." From that time Pastor Faltin prayed and labored for Israel. In a very remarkable way the very rabbi of Kischineff himself was brought into contact with him. This rabbi was giving lessons in Hebrew, and as Pastor Faltin wished to perfect himself in the knowledge of the sacred language he asked Rabbi Gurland to instruct him. Rabbi Gurland consented to do so on condition that there was to be no controversy or discussion about Christianity, but the simple reading of the Old Testament in the original. The pastor had to agree; but although Gurland could make it a condition that he would not speak to him, he could not make it a condition that he should not pray for him.

They had read through the whole Old Testament; they were reading it a second time, when they came to Isaiah liii.; they read it, they translate it, and the rabbi said, "Would you mind reading it again?" And then he said, "I see everything in a new light." He had found Jesus: he became a Christian, he was baptized. Through him others were brought to the knowledge of Christianity, and during the last twenty years Pastor Faltin has instructed about a hundred Jews, a large proportion of whom have been admitted into the Christian Church. Pastor Gurland was his assistant minister for some years, and is now laboring in the north of Russia. Another of his converts, Fiedberg, is now assisting him in his pastorate. Pastor Faltin says that he himself knows of five hundred Jews of Russia who have been converted to Christ during the last twenty years. But it was no doubt so ordered that Mr. Rabinowitch should stand forth as a witness for Christ, having come of his conviction without the aid of Gentile Christian ministry, but simply through his study of Scripture. It is a Jewish testimony to the Jewish nation.

The growing desire of this Israelite, and those influenced by him, was to form a community of Jewish believers in Jesus, recognising the New Testament and observing the Lord's Supper observing also part of the Jewish law, [illegible] as a means of justification, which is exclusively by faith, but as a divinely appointed national characteristic. They wish to call themselves Israelites of the New Testament, to build a synagogue for worship, and also for meetings conducted by Christian ministers and friends. In a letter which Pastor Faltin sent to Professor Delitzsch, he states that the Russian government and the highest ecclesiastical court had sanctioned the movement, and Pastor Faltin sees in this the manifest token of God's protecting and favoring hand. Since then the Emperor himself has expressed his approbation; and so all outward difficulties have been removed without any human effort in the quickest manner.

The importance of this movement must be estimated, not by its numerical strength, but by its intrinsic character. As M. Rabinowitch writes: "The true state of affairs will appear when we are permitted in our own place of meeting to lift up our voices, saying, 'Hosannah to the Son of David. Blessed be he who cometh in the name of the Lord.'

On Christmas day (Greek Date) the first meeting was held, in a hall lent for the purpose. Pastor Faltin writes to Professor Delitzsch: "Dear beloved Brother,—Although it is Christmas-day, I must break through my rule of letting my correspondence rest on this day, because I have [illegible] communicate which will delight [illegible] At nine o'clock last night our own services were completed, and I had distributed the Christmas gifts to the proselytes, the Jewish converts in our home. I went with some Jewish converts and a few children to help the singing in the hall where meeting was held. It was densely crowded. Representatives of the Government were present. The crowd was so great that the police officials had to be at the door. After the hymn had been sung about the birth of Jesus, Rabinowitch read Messianic passages from the Old Testament, and then from the second chapter of the gospel of Luke, in Hebrew, the history of the birth of Jesus by the Virgin Mary; and having read these passages, he said to the Jews that the promises which God has given to the fathers are fulfilled in Jesus, who is the true Son of God and the Savior of sinners, and the time has now come when Israel also is to return to him. He expressed his joy that by the mercy of God a number of believing Israelites had met to commemorate, in communion with the Gentile church, the birth of Jesus. He then read a poem in the Jewish dialect and in Russian. I concluded with a short address, expressing my joy that the Lord had permitted me to see, on this my twenty-fifth Christmas in Kischineff, the answer to my prayer. I pointed out that those of them who knew me would also know that I bore Israel on my heart in true love. 'Yes, that is true,' responded many voices. I wished them to grow in faith unto the full realization of a baptism in Christ. Jews of Russia, Poland, Germany, the American Dominions, etc. The attitude of the Jews towards Christianity has undergone a marvellous change. The New Testament has been extensively read.

"Great events have [illegible] the Jews to ponder their position. Only consider the following quotations from a Jewish pamphlet, written in Yiddish. 'Christianity has deepened the ethics of the Old Testament. Read the glorious Sermon on the Mount, or Paul's description of love (1 Cor. xiii.) True, the essential ideas are already indicated and expressed in the Old Testament; but what a difference! There, only in weakness and occasional, here in the steady, strong light of the sun: there, in drops: here, in a stream which carries away the heart.' Or such words as these, about Jesus: 'He brought the gospel of love to humanity, teacher and martyr of Truth. He proclaimed the message of salvation to all nations. He was the consoler of the weary and heavy-laden, the friend of man, and lover of the poor. In him was nothing but light, harmony and symmetry, and his image and name have been an inexhaustible fountain of blessedness to millions who lived and died in his love.' There are many [illegible] souls in Israel. There are many who read the New Testament, some like Nicodemus by night. Quite recently, the Rev. Dr. Adolph Saphir, the beloved minister of Belgrave Presbyterian Church, London, and himself a Christian Israelite, received a letter from a friend laboring on the Continent, a man of sound judgment as well as zeal, who wrote thus: "The movement in Kischineff continues genuine and good. I receive wonderful letters from Polish Jews, and I hear also that the movement extends to Transylvania. I must give you a few extracts from the letters. They are written in the Judæo-German dialect: 'I have heard from a sensible and honest man that there are sacred documents which date from the time of the Holy Redeemer, and which prove that God had sent him for the good of our nation. Since I heard this, fear has taken hold of me lest we should have committed a sin in rejecting him, and lest our souls should have to suffer for it in the next world. I must search into this while I have life. I am a teacher of Jewish children, and my pupils will hereafter be thankful to me if I kindle for them a new light. Can the whole world be mistaken?" (i.e., about the Messiahship of Jesus.)

Another, a learned Talmudist, says: "As a spark among the ashes the thought of Jesus lives in my heart, and since I have been less disturbed outwardly the Eastern Star shines more brightly. God alone knows my heart, and will open the way for me out of my difficulties. At present I am only anxious to keep my heart loyal to the salvation-bringing Lover, and your valued words comfort me. We can serve God in every position, and to them that love God all things work together for good."

A SEEKER AFTER TRUTH.

The following remarkable letter has been received by the British and Foreign Bible Society, from Galilee, addressed "To the Holy Bible Society, in London." Taken in connection with the movement in Bessarabia, such a letter is particularly significant of the spirit of inquiry which has arisen among the Jews. It may be added that the Scriptures requested have been sent:—

"Behold, I have heard out of the mouth of a well-informed man, that the honorable society is in possession of documents, dating from the times of the Holy Messiah, and containing many proofs of his being sent by the Almighty for our good. Since I heard this, terror has seized upon me. I dread lest we should have to suffer for this in the world to come. I have therefore determined to examine these documents so long as a living breath is in me. I am agent for an insurance company, but my chief employment is teaching Jewish children. Perhaps my scholars will one day thank me if I introduce this new light to them. Can the whole world be in error? There must be some truth in this thing. May I respectfully request you to send me a Hebrew Old Testament, and also a New Testament in Hebrew, with the German and Polish translation; also some Hebrew and German Prayer Books, and several instructive books for children in the fourth and fifth classes? I will unveil the new hidden light gradually, to my scholars, and may the Eternal One in heaven be with the Society and all its supporters."

Let us then lift up our hearts in earnest hope, and continue to believing prayer. Whether the present remarkable events are near more nearly or distantly connected with the great crisis, and we must always look to the end, to the fulfilment of the sure word of promise which was sealed by the death of Christ, and in him is Yea and Amen. Let us remember that all these hopeful indications of which I have spoken are in answer to prayer. The Spirit of God himself is evidently dealing with the hearts and minds of God's ancient people.—T. J. Bulgyn, D.D., in Presbyterian News.

SAVING FAITH.—PART III.

II.—THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

The first place in which God's kingdom is called by that name is 1 Chron. xvii. 14; where God, speaking to David concerning his seed, uses these words, "I will settle him in mine house and in my kingdom for ever: and his throne shall be established for evermore." From this it appears that perpetuity is an attribute of God's kingdom. It is to last for ever, for David's seed is to be settled in it for ever. And, in some way or other, David's seed is to have a throne in this everlasting kingdom, for it is added, this throne shall be established for evermore,"—that is, the throne of David's seed in God's everlasting kingdom. The time when this seed is to be established,—the time when the throne of the kingdom of God is to be given to the seed of David, is not indicated in the verse quoted, nor is the character or locality of the kingdom stated, the extent of its sway, or how it will be related to the other kingdoms, if it have any relations towards them at all. If no information be given in the Scriptures concerning these points, we must be thankful that thus much is revealed; but if more be revealed, we will be blameworthy if we do not carefully examine and receive God's revelation. That "secret things belong to God," is true also that "things revealed belong to us and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law." So spake Moses, the man of God, to the Israelites, Deut. xxix. 29, and we may suppose without presumption that the further revelations which God has been pleased to make, have the same object, viz., to induce us to render him [illegible] obedience [illegible] kingdom of David—in order to [illegible] we must believe [illegible] revelations.

Daniel affords some very clear information on several points regarding God's kingdom. Do we want to know when it is to be established? He says —In the days of the kings symbolized in the image seen in vision by Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. ii. 44. Do we want to know its relation to other kingdoms? It is one of uncompromising hostility. It is to break in pieces the whole other kingdoms symbolized in vision. It is to consume and destroy them, so that no place shall be found for them. And it is to stand for ever. Do we want to know where God's ever-enduring kingdom is to be? He answers—"it filled the whole earth" Dan. ii. 35. God now ruleth in the kingdom of men, Dan. v. 21; and so hath done since the beginning of man's kingdom; but that rule is distinguished from the kingdom of God, for the Kingdom of God does not regulate the kingdoms of men, but its first work, as expressed in Daniel, is to break in pieces and consume and destroy them all. There is a phrase in Dan. ii. 44, concerning this kingdom which we should notice here—"The kingdom shall not be left to other people" From this it would seem that the kingdom is, at its establishment, to be possessed, not by one person alone, but by some people; and that the kingdom is always to be held by them. They are not to give place to others; but they are to be established for ever in it, even as the seed of David is to be settled for ever in it. Would we know who these "people" are? "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High," Dan. vii 27, "the time came that saints possessed the kingdom," Dan. vii. 22. If we be among the saints we may look forward to the time when the Ancient of Days shall come, in the hope and confidence that we shall possess the kingdom of God, even that kingdom which shall be under the whole heaven, Dan. vii. 27; and shall fill the whole earth, Dan. ii. 35.

Reference has been made to 1 Chron. xvii. 14; which is part of the word of God by Nathan the prophet unto David. The same message is recorded in 2 Sam. vii. under a slightly differing phase. Thus in 1 Chron. xvii. it is said, "I will settle him in my house and in my kingdom for ever; and his throne shall be established for evermore." This we should firmly believe, and we should at the same time, and with the same alacrity and firmness, believe what is said in 2 Sam. vii. 16; "Thine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee; thy throne shall be established for ever." Not only is God's kingdom to be established for ever; but the same thing is written concerning David's kingdom and David's throne. If anything be lacking to enable us positively to identify David's kingdom (which is to be established for ever) with God's kingdom (which is an everlasting kingdom), it is to be found in the fact that the throne of the kingdom of Israel is called the throne of the Lord, 1 Chron. xxviii. 5; xxix. 23: and the circumstance that the same work of destroying the kingdoms of this world is assigned to both. Judah is as the Lord's goodly horse in the battle, Zech. x. 3. [illegible] I make the governors of Judah like a hearth of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf; and they shall devour all the people round about, on the right hand and on the left: and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem," Zech. xii. 6. "Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion: for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thine hoofs brass: and thou shalt beat in pieces many people; and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord and their substance unto the God of the whole earth," Micah iv. 13. "With thee will I break in pieces the nations; and with thee will I destroy the kingdoms," Jer. li. 20. From those passages it appears that the kingdom of Israel—the kingdom of David—is to break in pieces the nations, and destroy the kingdoms, and it is to stand for ever. But from Dan. ii. 44; it appears that this work is to be done by the kingdom of God, which also is to [illegible] Therefore, the kingdom of David—[illegible]

It may be said, "Is the kingdom of Israel to be restored? Is Jerusalem again to become their capital city? Are there base, miserable wanderers to break in pieces and subdue all kingdoms, and is their kingdom to fill the whole earth and endure for ever and ever? What have they done that they should obtain such an unexampled power, and such an exalted glory?"

They have done nothing to earn any honor from God. And what has this world done that God should so love it as to send his only begotten Son into the world, that whoso believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life? If our destiny depends upon our doings, neither we nor Israel can hope for mercy from the hand of God. But if, when we were sinners, and because we were sinners, God sent to redeem and purify us, and if (not on account of our good deeds, but on account of his great mercy) he has called us to be heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ, who are we, that we should boast over Israel, as if the Divine mercy had been altogether expended upon us, so that God could not now bestow any mercy upon them? That they have done no works to merit such high favors is no hindrance to their being used by God to break in pieces the nations and consume the kingdoms, and then established an everlasting kingdom under the sceptre of the promised seed of David. The reward of work done is called wages, and to him that worketh, the reward is not reckoned of favor, but of debt, Rom. iv. 4; and that saying is as applicable to the seed of Abraham, which is under the law, as to that which is of the faith of Abraham. According to human imaginations, Israel would never be restored, and the kingdom would never come to the daughter of Jerusalem, Micah iv. 8; but God's thoughts are not as man's thoughts, nor his ways as men's ways. If God's thoughts and ways were as men's thoughts and ways, he would not cause his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and send his rain on the just and on the unjust; neither would he restore again the captivity of the people which so lightly esteemed and so shamefully abused the blessings he bestowed upon them. That Israel is degraded and wicked is true, and it is true also that the full depths of its degradation and wickedness have not yet been reached: and, therefore, man concludes that it cannot be lifted up and its iniquity removed. But God acts contrariwise to this. Study the dark picture of Israel's wickedness in Isaiah lix., and say, does it not come directly to this, "the Lord saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor; therefore his arm brought salvation unto him, and his righteousness it sustained him.... The Redeemer shall come to Zion and turn ungodliness from Jacob.....Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee.....The nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted....Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified." Isa. lix. and lx.

There are two objections commonly urged against the fulfilment of these promises to the children of Israel. The one, that these promises were given conditionally, and the other that such a view is carnal; and not seldom indeed do we find the same persons urge both these objections. What weight is justly due to them, and how far they are consistent with each other, we will shortly consider. It is said, first, these promises were given conditionally to the children of Israel, and because they have failed to fulfill the conditions, the promises are no longer binding upon him that made them. In this view there was nothing unworthy of God, either in the promise or the fulfilment of it,—nothing that could be denounced as carnal,—the only thing lacking was a readiness in Israel to do what the conditions required. What the conditions were, is of no account in this view of the matter. The reason given why "the promises" do not "pertain" to Israel, is not that there was anything carnal in the promises, or that there would be anything carnal in the fulfilment of them, but that Israel was too carnal to obey the conditions imposed. It owns and acknowledges that if Israel had been a better people,—if they had obeyed the requirements of God, that then he would have given them power to destroy and subjugate the kingdoms of the Gentiles, and that he would have established them for ever in their own land, under the righteous sway of the seed of David. So that the men who attempts to hold the two views that the promises were made conditionally to Israel, and that their fulfilment in their plain literal sense would be carnal, attempts an utter impossibility. If the fulfilment of the promises in their plain literal sense be unworthy of God, then such a fulfilment never could have been conditional upon Israel obeying any commands; but if such a fulfilment were dependent upon conditions, then it cannot be unworthy of God. The passage referred to in Isa. lix., so far meets the argument that God's promises have become null because Israel has not fulfilled the conditions required. It is there stated that it is because God sees the wickedness of Israel, and that there is none to save or intercede for them, that his arm shall bring salvation unto him, and the Redeemer shall come to Zion and turn ungodliness from Jacob. Ezek. xxxvi. speaks expressly on the same point. The ways of Israel are such as deserve only shame and confusion (ver. 32); therefore God does not bless them for their good works or good dispositions, for they have none, "But thus saith the Lord God, I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen whither you went....I will take you from among the heathen and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land. Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: for all your filthiness and from all your idols will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you.....And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God," Ezek. xxxvi. 17-28. The succeeding chapter is to the same point. Israel is represented as dead, and incapable of fulfilling any conditions—helpless; but God breathes upon them and they live, and stand upon their feet an exceeding great army, and puts his spirit in them and places them in their own land; and the following verses show that God will certainly gather them, and bring them into their land, and that they (i. e. the ten tribes and the two tribes) shall be made one kingdom, under the sovereignty of the Davidical king, the Beloved, and that they shall dwell there for evermore, and God's sanctuary shall be in their midst. Whatever conditions were required, God has himself undertaken to fulfil, for his holy name's sake, and thus the certainty of these things is established beyond question or doubt.

It is surprising how, in the face of such statements, any should venture to say that the literal fulfilment of these prophecies would be carnal! God is to sanctify his great name which the children of Israel have profaned. Is that carnal? He is to cleanse them from all their sins and their iniquities. Is that carnal? He is to put his spirit within them, and cause them to walk in his statutes and keep his judgments, and he is to place his tabernacle among them and be their God for ever. Are these carnal things? Or is this the only carnal point in all these promises —"I will bring them into their own land, and make them one nation upon the mountains of Israel, and my servant the Beloved shall be their Prince for ever?" God's holy prophets foretold the birth of the Messiah, his lowly state, his wretched death and his burial. The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us. John i. 14. Will any one say that these are carnal things, or denounce them as unworthy of God? Where is the man professing to be a Christian, who will stigmatize as carnal the resurrection of our Lord's body from the tomb? But whether these things be carnal or no, they, equally with the restoration of Israel, were revealed by the Holy Spirit of God, and I cannot dare to say that [illegible] words of God are carnal or unworthy of him. I do not question the immediate motive for the assumption which many make that the literal fulfilment of the prophecies savors of carnality, and would be derogatory to God's honor, but I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that the very same words might be applied, with equal force, to the prophecies concerning the humiliation and the resurrection of Christ. And as the prophecies already fulfilled in him, have met a literal fulfilment, I cannot see how the other Scriptures of the prophets should not receive a fulfilment as literal.

Is there not some latent error in the assumption that we can tell what shall be, in better words—words more truly expressive of God's meaning, than God has directed his prophets to use? And what also is it than an assumption of the prophetic gift itself, to declare that the promises made to Israel will never be fulfilled to them? Is the tendency to "carnal views" not on that side? Is it not a symptom of carnality —of mere human fleshly thinking, that many deem the words of God's Spirit carnal, and attempt to spiritualize them? According to mere outward humanly-visible probabilities, discernible by the carnal mind or eye of sense, Israel will not be restored to their own land, they will not be made an everlasting kingdom, Jerusalem will not be the city of the Great King, and God's sanctuary will not be placed there, and his house become an house of prayer for all nations; neither according to the humanly-visible probabilities will there be a resurrection from among the dead. The mere carnal fleshly man—the great majority of natural men, do not believe these things. But God's Spirit says that they shall be, and it is one of the triumphs of faith to recognize as certain what God foretells, although unable to comprehend how or why it should be so. "Abraham believed God and it was counted to him for righteousness." Therefore we conclude that God's promises to Israel shall receive as certain, and actual, and literal a fulfilment as those prophecies that have already been fulfilled. God's method of fulfilling prophecies until the ascension of Christ was beyond question the method of literal fulfilment, and we think we proceed on safe ground when we take this ascertained method, as that by which unaccomplished prophecies shall be fulfilled by God. His practice in times past is a precedent, by which we may understand his practice in times future, and hence as it was written "Thus," we look for "Thus it behoveth it to be fulfilled."

This is further corroborated by the acknowledged fact that the Jews in the time when Jesus was on earth understood the prophecies concerning the kingdom of God in this way. Perhaps they took a different rule of interpretation for those prophecies concerning the humiliation of the Christ,—they may have thought the literal fulfilment of those prophecies unworthy of God, and deemed such views carnal; but they certainly held that the prophecies concerning the kingdom were to be understood literally, and indications are not wanting to show that in their minds the establishment of the kingdom was associated with the resurrection of the faithful dead.* See Luke xiv. 14, 15; xxii. 28, 29. John the Baptist did not seek to alter their views on this point, neither did Jesus nor his eighty-two disciples; and there is abundant evidence, as we shall afterwards see, for holding that the twelve held the same views themselves; and thus their preaching that the kingdom of God is at hand, naturally stamped these views with the divine approbation, and practically affirmed the nearness of the resurrection, of the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, and the fulfilment of Israel's hopes of supremacy under the promised seed of David.

Such was the distinct, specific, well-understood meaning which the words "the kingdom of God" expressed in the days of Jesus and his apostles, and such, therefore should be our faith concerning that kingdom. We cannot here enter further on this topic. Whoever wants to comprehend it in all its [illegible] and details must study it as [illegible] which God has made with Abraham and David.

* We may say that the Sadducees did not believe in the prophets, the kingdom, nor the resurrection. They were generally rich and not numerous.

Still Another Leaf in History.

Your efficient exposure of the wiles and schemes of the Vatican in this country deserve the cordial thanks of every true American citizen. At the time when public meetings were rife in our cities, and, with inexplicable inconsistency, American statesmen were delivering addresses in behalf of the restoration of the Pope in the place he had so long abused in the Quirinal, William Cullen Bryant made this statement:

"An American lady, an acquaintance of mine, a resident in Rome for several years, was summoned one morning to appear before the police of that city. She went, accompanied by the American Consul. 'You are charged,' said the police magistrate, 'with having sent money to Florence to be employed in founding a Protestant orphan asylum. What do you say?' 'I did send money for that purpose,' was the lady's answer. 'I did not ask for it; it was brought to me by some ladies, who requested me to forward it to Florence, and I did so; and I take the liberty to say it is no affair of yours.' 'Of that you are not to judge,' replied the magistrate, 'See that you never repeat the offence.' Such was the government, which, to the joy of the Roman people and the satisfaction of liberty everywhere, has been overthrown. Was it worthy—I put this question to this assembly—was such a government worthy to subsist even for an hour?"

That lady you and I knew very well. Her name was Mrs. Emily Bliss Gould. It was in her house, corner of the Piazza di Spagna and the via Babuino, that at her husband's request, the writer of this preached what he believes to have been the first Protestant Sermon in Rome after the expulsion of the Pope and his "incarceration" in the Vatican "prison," the finest palace in Europe. Mrs. Gould told the whole story of that ris-orgo persecution. The Pope's policemen presented to her a paper to sign, and thus give a written pledge that she would in future abstain from the atrocious crime of sending contributions to the orphans of Florence, and she was told that she would be kept in durance until she had signed the pledge. But the Pope found that he had not now to deal with one of those half and half Americans who are not ashamed to put the lip to the toe of his holiness, but with a true woman. She replied to the threat of detention, "You may get my apartments ready. I shall spend the rest of my days here rather than sign any such paper." The policemen had found their match, and they at last allowed her to go unpledged.

Mr. W. L. Stillman, of Plainfield, N. J., United States Consul at Rome from 1861 to 1865, on his return told the world through the public prints, that the government of the Pope was "the most atrocious in existence, excepting that of Louis Napoleon."

"The brother of one of my most intimate friends was arrested in his bed at night, and carried off by the officers of the Holy Office, the Inquisition, and never heard of again until years after, when a released prisoner came to tell the survivor that his brother had died in prison with him, and was buried in the earth of the dungeon.

"The system of terrorism was such that liberal Romans dared meet only in public, and never permitted a stranger to approach them in conversation. I never dared to enter the house of a Roman friend, for fear of bringing on him a domiciliary visit."

That Rome is unchanged and unchangeable is shown by the fact that while Monsignor Capel is saying soft things in the ears of the American people, Rome is killing American missionaries in Mexico. At Almoloya, a town some forty miles southeast of the City of Mexico, the blood is hardly dry of two martyrs slain by Roman Catholic violence. The people, were quietly worshiping when they were set upon by a furious mob and the congregation dispersed and two men slain. These things cannot be unknown to Rome, and not only are they not prohibited, but those murderers were hounded on by violent harangues from the pulpit of the Romish church. While Americans should treat with all kindness the victims of this foreign persecuting power, they should be very watchful of and very resolute to resist the stealthy but steady encroachment of this power in our Republic.—W. P. Breed, in N. Y. Observer.

Jewel Casket.

Beyond the Cross, the Crown.

There are shadows o'er my spirit,
There are clouds above my way;
But through the darkness quiet
Bright beams of heavenly day.
I hear a strain celestial,
It sounds so low and sweet,
It is the voice of Jesus—
"I'll guide thy trembling feet."

Heed not the darkest shadows
The world may scoff and frown;
Beyond the gloom is glory—
Beyond the cross the crown'

I am weary-worn, faint and weary,
There are tear-drops in mine eye.
The sombre hues grow dearer,
And spread o'er all the sky;
But listen, worn heart, listen—
The still, small voice I hear;
Above the sobbing breezes
It sounds its sweet and clear—

"Fear not, Mine arms are around thee,"
Why art thou thus cast down?
Beyond the gloom is glory—
Beyond the cross, the crown"

But as they're slowly drifting—
Those shadows dark and drear—
Above the cold grey Orient,
The golden sheen grows clear;
Bright angels are approaching,
On swift and silvery wings;
I hear their mingled voices;
A gladsome dawn they bring.

The morning light is breaking,
And hope is streaming down;
Beyond the gloom is glory—
Beyond the cross, the crown!

A Living God.

Did you ever, I ask you, hear a religious man say, as years went on, that his religion had disappointed him? Nay, the life of our God is continued even now upon earth; and where that life is, there is the full, unending, irresistible power by which God will lead us from strength to strength, until at length we come to appear before our God at Zion. We serve no lifeless abstraction. We devote ourselves to no mere idle idea. We are buoyed up by no mere inflated enthusiasm. We serve a God living, a God who bids us trust him to the uttermost as we patiently pursue the path from whose end, even now, he is beckoning to us, whispering to us the while as our minds are dark, and our hearts are cold, and our fears are great, these rich words of most abundant promise, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now."

Power of Love.

True love alone can awaken and evoke all the nobility and grandeur of human nature. Then we are like musical instruments touched by a master's hand. That organ yonder, many fingers have moved over its keys and drawn out its stops; but the barrooles have not surprised us, our listening has not even deepened into interest. But one day a stranger came and sat before it, and presently rich, exquisite melodies began to pour forth, new and wondrous depths and changes of tone trembled in the air and thrilled our souls. It seemed like a living thing interpreting the secrets of our hearts, so that we hardly dared to breathe lest we should destroy the charm. What a revelation that was! We never dreamed that the old instrument could "discourse" such marvelous strains. But the capacity was there, only the soul of the musician was needed to inspire it. Thus, too, can love elicit in answer to its skillful touch, the grandest responsive harmonies from the loveliest human heart. And it is by love—God's love—that our great nature shall reveal all its greatness.—Braden.

God's Quiet Prayer-Answers.

It is sometimes said that God may answer our prayers by a voice of suggestion or of warning, spoken directly to our consciousness. Perhaps it would be nearer the truth to say that God more often answers our prayers through our unconsciousness. Who can say that he really distinguishes, to his consciousness, every working of that Divine hand which daily touches with new strength, body, soul, and spirit? The power that upholds us, that works in us that steady growth which changes us from feeble infants to strong men and women, comes to us with a touch that oftenest is not felt. This is why it is possible that our prayers may be answered and we know nothing of it. Even while we are looking for the answer, the answer may already have come, wrought into that unconscious nature of ours, in comparison with which our consciousness is but a bright point in the darkness. Trust; wait; the touch may already have been given which will develop in you a new strength to meet the added burden, or which has created in a new faculty to answer a new need. That you do not feel it, proves nothing; God's greatest works are wrought in silence—beyond the reach of human sight and human hearing, and they are made manifest only at the right time.—S. S. Times.

"Keep Thyself Pure."

A clergyman who loses his reputation for moral integrity or personal purity is irretrievably ruined in the public estimation. His influence for good is gone; he has lost his hold upon the public conscience forever. Right or wrong, this is the law—and it is useless to quarrel with it; it were much better to bow to an unavoidable necessity.

A spotted preacher is under a ban from which no power on earth can deliver him. Partial friends may stay up his hands, and multitudes may listen to his preaching, but his words are as the idle wind, and he is as a blasted tree that yields no fruit. He may be reinstated by the ecclesiastical authority, but he can never be reinstated in the confidence of those he designs to reach and save. With them he will always be an object of suspicion. And while that suspicion lasts his words and works will come to naught.

The church of Christ can get along without famous preachers, and without pastors distinguished for their social qualities; but she cannot get along without an irreproachable name and reputation among men. A defective theology may hinder her, but a deficiency in morals will certainly ruin her, for she will be stopped and broken down, and trodden under foot of men, and her authority will be spurned to just the extent that she contains a difference of opinion as to the the necessity of presenting to the world an example of moral living, above suspicion and beyond reproach.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, June 10, 1885.

PAPERS advocating conditional immortality, the approximately near coming of the Lord Jesus, the literal restoration of Judah and Israel to the land of Palestine, and the millennial reign of Christ and his saints in the age or dispensation to come, have but a limited circulation at best, and need all the help obtainable—especially subscription dues. We kindly ask our friends to remember THE RESTITUTION.

POETRY.

Poeta nascitur, non fit—The poet is born such, not made—is probably as true as any other adage. The truthfulness of the saying is more than verified in our own experience. Nature dealt out poetical gifts to us with a very stingy hand, art has been most wonderfully unsuccessful in supplying our natural deficiencies. Still we have written so much miserably poor poetry as to know the article almost as well as by intuition. Two or three of our senses enable us to know that there is a distinct difference between the beautifully petaled rose that suffuses the air of the summer morn with its more than incense sweetness, and the artificial imitation on the lady's summer hat, though unable to photograph, poetically, the queenly flower. We write mostly in prose.

THE NAME CHRISTIAN.

The disciples were called Christians first in Antioch. Acts xi. 26.
Christian is the highest style of man.—Tacitus.

A Christian is one sustaining a relation to Christ such as rightfully to be called by that worthy name. The closeness of this relation is well illustrated in the parable of the vine and branches. The union between the branch and vine is a continually connected and vital adherence. Just so an inseparable life union between Christ and the believer is absolutely essential for the development of that spiritual character that makes the name Christian appropriate, as well as for the communication of that energizing quickening by the Spirit that will result in the new-born life of the world to come.

Men do not gather grapes of thorns, nor figs of thistles. It is the good tree that produces the good fruit. From the vines of Sodom and the fields of Gomorrah nothing is expected but the grapes of gall and the clusters of bitterness. From the Dead Sea waters are the apples of ashes. Just so from reprobate minds are the fruits of wickedness in all the dismal catalogue. Rom. i. 28-32. To be a Christian we must be Christ-like; to be Christ-like we must have the Spirit of Christ; to have the Spirit of Christ, we must be in Christ, as the branch is in the vine to have the life-flowing sap of the vine. As well look for grapes on bramble bushes as for the fruits of holiness on fleshly mind-stocks. We must put off the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, and be renewed in the spirit of our mind, and thus put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness to be members of Christ. We would wish to contend earnestly for the faith, which was once for all delivered to the saints, in all its definiteness, and highly prize the gospel of the kingdom as foretold by the prophets, and preached by Christ and his chosen apostles, and would connect baptism with the inspired teaching of the Holy Oracles as the fundamental act of the obedience of the faith, and yet beyond all this would impress the imperial necessity of conformity to the image of God's dear Son in righteousness, true holiness, and absolute consecration to the service of our Lord and Savior. We by no means underrate an enlightened understanding in any disciple of the Lord Jesus, but at the same time realize that those are pronounced emphatically happy who both know and do the requirements of God. We must grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, as well as come into him by the profession of our faith. Our faith must not only apprehend the truth but purify the heart. We have a very poor opinion indeed of the "advanced thought" that clothes its possessor with a form of godliness while denying its power. A Christian is something more than immersed carnality, and a heart-believer than baptized infidelity, Jude's language—"Sensual, having not the Spirit"—though wofully applicable in these last days, appertains not to the Christian, nor the Bride of Christ.

News Items.

LONDON, June 5.—An official despatch from Serinagar gives the number of killed and wounded by the earthquake there on Sunday and Monday last as follows: Killed 87; wounded, 100. The official reports have not been received yet from the other points in the Vale of Cashmere affected by the earthquake shocks, and until these come to hand the full extent of the calamity cannot be known. Unofficial reports, however, are of such an alarming character as to make it more than likely that the earthquake was even more disastrous in its effects than the first despatches indicated. Whole cities and towns are spoken of as destroyed, and the absence of definite news is attributed to the demolition of the telegraph lines.

MADRID, June 5.—The cholera epidemic is rapidly increasing in and around Valencia. The peasantry are panic stricken, and are raising an outcry against the sanitary cordons, which prevent their flight to other parts of the country. It is now certain that cholera has made its appearance in this city, despite the assertions of the health officers to the contrary.

PARIS, June 5.—A letter from the Bishop of Tonquin appears in the Toulon Missions Catholiques, announcing that the Black Flags are ravaging the provinces of Sontay, Hongha, and Tuyenquan, although those provinces are occupied by French troops. The inhabitants, fleeing from massacre, have taken refuge in the French garrisons. Thirty Christian villages have been destroyed.

LONDON, June 8.—The Mahdi has issued a proclamation, which has been extensively circulated in the countries bordering upon the Persian Gulf, stating that it is his intention to invade both Egypt and Arabia.

CALCUTTA, June 8.—Dispatches continue to be received here about the earthquake in the Vale of Cashmere. Whole villages have been destroyed, and Dubgood, Jamalapar and Ovan have disappeared entirely, having been completely ingulfed in the awful convulsions. During the continuance of the shocks, a sulphurous dust was sent forth, impregnating the atmosphere. At the same time volumes of hot water issued from the great fissures made in the earth. The fort at Gurais, and the granaries in many parts of the vale have been swallowed up. A large supply of rice and a considerable amount of money have been distributed throughout the Vale of Cashmere to relieve the distress of the people. It is estimated that 200 persons were killed.

Cholera has made its appearance among the laborers on the Quetta Railway, and also at Rindlibahn, the depot of the commissariat camp.

LONDON, June 8.—The English-Afghan Frontier Commission is moving to the Upper Paropamisus Mountains to avoid the heat.

TEHERAN, June 8.—The Government of Herat, Afghanistan, has sent men to fortify Balah-Kurghab.

Advices from Merv are to the effect that the Russians are taking the greatest care to prevent foreigners communicating with Turcomans, and have expelled Persians who were supposed to be corresponding with Afghans.

Small-pox has become epidemic in the city of Montreal.

Serious damage was done in some localities in Wisconsin yesterday by hail.

The district in West Virginia which was afflicted with drouth and disease last year is reported to be now in a distressing state of destitution, bordering on famine and starvation.

The Washington monument at the national capital was struck by lightning last night. The apex was somewhat shattered, and the resetting of several stones will be necessary.

The main portion of the business section of Suffolk, Va., was destroyed by fire last night; loss over $300,000.

Considerable damage was done by hurricanes last night at Davenport, Iowa, in Marshall county, Ill., and in Virginia.

The French war-ship Renard—naval dispatch gunboat—is reported to have foundered in the Red Sea, with all on board, 150 men.

LONDON, June 6.—The Pall Mall Gazette says that it is glad to be able to state, upon the highest authority, that the long-standing question of difference between England and Russia concerning the northwest Afghan frontier has been finally and satisfactorily settled. A definite agreement has been arrived at on all questions in principle. The Commissioners will forthwith commence to mark precisely the delimitation of the boundary. They are now on the spot.

Miscellaneous.

In Jerusalem an interesting discovery has recently been made. Near the Church of the Resurrection, the Russians have in their possession a plot of ground which heretofore has been covered with the dirt and ruins of centuries. The Russian Orthodox Society, at the instigation of its president, Prince Sergius Alexandrovitsch, and at his own expense, has been making excavations there for the double purpose of discovering the plan of the old Church of the Resurrection, erected on that place by the Emperor Constantine the Great, and also of determining the direction of the old city wall of Jerusalem. The work has proved highly successful. Removing the dirt down to the original rocks, the remnants of the old wall and of an old gate were discovered through which, in the days of the Lord, they entered Jerusalem. As this old gate near to Golgotha, archæologists are inclined to believe that it is the one through which the Lord passed on his way to his death.

THE REMAINS OF WASHINGTON.

"Tonic," the Washington correspondent of the Boston Traveller, sends the following to his paper:

Mr. W. B. Burgess, of this city, makes public the fact that Washington's coffin was opened in 1830, when the bodies of Washington and his wife were removed to the new tomb. He gives the following account: "I was but a lad and this was about my first piece of work. When the vault was completed I assisted in removing the bodies from the old tomb to their present resting place. It was decided to open Washington's coffin, and when it had been conveyed to the new tomb the lid was raised. A number of people were present, and stood in breathless silence while the workmen extracted the rusty screws. When the top of the coffin had been lifted, I looked in. The body was apparently perfectly preserved. The feature of the face were complete, and there was nothing to indicate the length of time he had been dead. The exposure to the air, however, had its immediate effect. In a minute or two the body suddenly collapsed and shrank into an almost unrecognizable form. Other than this my recollections are very indistinct. I do not remember how the body was dressed or anything further about it. The features, as I remember them, were like the pictures I have seen." Mr. Burgess is now a white-haired man, 70 years of age.

JEWISH MOHAMMEDANS.

The Hamelitz of St. Petersburg reports that at Merv, and also in the cities of Meshed and Chorason in Russian Asia, a large body of about 500 families of Jews settled some fifty years since. The Mohammedans of these districts forced these people to embrace their religion or suffer annihilation. They had emigrated from Afghanistan and assumed all the customs of the Mohammedans under the prevailing circumstances. Their daughters they marry off while in their ninth or tenth year and demand of the groom an amount of money for the bride. Although in outer form Mohammedans, they still observe a sort of Jewish worship. They journey to Mecca and worship on Friday there and when they return they celebrate the Sabbath also. They have no Rabbi to instruct them, but a Mr. Mordecay, a well-to-do planter offered them his services. They have their own Shochet who has to do his butchering secretly, otherwise the Mohammedans would kill him. Every well-to-do Israelite keeps his own Shochet. They possess a handsome synagogue and school house where Hebrew is taught; also history and rules of sanitary regulations are expounded. They have six Torah's (parchment rolls) and one Sfare Tat-sanel, the only one extant in Afghanistan. All the Jewish citizens of Merv are business men but five, who are Mohammedan priests.—(?)—*E. SANFORD.—In Golden City, Mo., May 12, 1885, M. Sanford, aged seventy-four years, seven months, and four days.

Bro. Sanford has been a severe sufferer since November last, in fact has been afflicted for about twenty years. Before he died he said he was prepared to go where the Lord willed he should. He bore his sickness in patience, and firmly believed in the soon coming of Christ and the resurrection of his saints at that time.

THE DOCTRINE OF IMMORTALITY IN THE AGE OF SOCRATES AND PLATO.

There are many who assert that a belief in the immortality of a human soul has been a common among mankind that it might exist, what Vincentius Lirinensis claimed for Roman doctrine, to have been accepted "always, everywhere, and by all." This view is wholly denied by us. We allow that the idea or notion of human immortality was an idea generally discussed among mankind. We allow that it was accepted by some, with more or less of vagueness, with every degree of acceptance, from that of the lowest degree of probability to absolute faith. That it was a dogma of general faith we altogether deny.

For proof of our view that belief in man's immortality was anything but a universal faith, we would refer in this paper to the state of opinion on this subject in the city of Athens, in the time of Socrates and Plato. This is a fair appeal. Athens was then at the height of its intellectual supremacy. Some of the greatest minds of antiquity attended or instructed in its schools. Socrates walked and talked in its midst. Among his disciples was Plato, the adopter of his master's philosophy and the expounder of it to mankind. Thither flocked men of learning and research from the other states of Greece and from foreign lands. The various opinions of men on all questions of interest are reflected there. What, then, was the state of opinion in Athens on the immortality of the soul in the age of Socrates and Plato? The latter philosopher has given us full power of ascertaining opinion on this question, in his "Apology of Socrates," and more especially in his "Phædo."

This celebrated work is Plato's description of the last hours of the great philosopher, and of his discourse with his friends upon the subject of all others most interesting to man, namely, his immortality. Plato was thoroughly acquainted with Socrates views on this question. He had adopted them as his own. He was also acquainted with the state of opinion generally. We can therefore rely upon the accuracy of the statements of the "Phædo," whether relating to the views of Socrates, or of Plato, of Athens, or of Greece in general.

"Plato's "Phædo" purports to give the last discourse of Socrates on the day of his death to his friends and others admitted to his prison to see him die. Some of them were natives of Athens. Of these nine are mentioned by name, and others unnamed were present. Of strangers, five are mentioned by name—three from Thebes, and two from Megara. On the whole there would appear to have been at least twenty persons present at the death of Socrates. These were all men distinguished in literature and philosophy. Some of them were founders of philosophic sects. They may very well be taken as representing the general opinion of educated Greece on the great subject under review. They may also be said, though, perhaps, not to so full a degree, to represent the general view of Greece.

Perhaps in conducting our inquiry, the better way will be to consider, in the first place, what were the exact views upon death of Socrates himself as represented by Plato.

We will not dwell upon the fact—though it is a very important one—that Socrates differed altogether from most of his Christian followers in supposing that the soul of man would not only be immortal in the future, but had also been equally immortal in the past. Its migration after what he called death into a better or a worse condition only resembled similar migration before its birth into the present life. In fact, he would never have argued for any future immortality of the soul, if he had not also held its immortality in the past. In this respect he wholly differed from Christian maintainers of the immortality of the soul. These hold it to have a beginning, but not an end. Socrates held that it would have no end, because it had had no beginning of being. In this most important respect, the modern upholders of the immortality of the soul differ as much as we do from the views of Socrates and Plato. Socrates and Plato would have rejected the theory of their modern followers as men who would raise a building without laying a foundation. But we will here chiefly turn our attention to the portion of the theory in which Socrates agrees more or less fully with modern thinkers, and inquire what were his exact views on the condition of the soul after that change which he and we call death. We will also chiefly consider the condition of the souls of those whom he calls good men.

Socrates calls death a change, or migration. This is a term often copied by succeeding writers and thinkers. Thus Longfellow, speaking of Albrecht Durer, in his exquisite poem on the old town of Nuremberg, says of him:

"Silence in stillness and in sorrow sitting still with folded hands
Listening . . . The wonderful, waiting for the beautiful.

. . . and is the inscription on the tombstone where he lies:
Dead he is not,—but departed,—for the artist never dies."

What, then, did Socrates mean by this migration? He meant a departure from one scene or mode of life to another. There was in it no loss of life, but only a change in the manner of life. Those who leave this land for America are emigrants in essentially the same sense as Socrates esteemed the dead to be.

Only with him the migration was a very distant one, and made under circumstances widely different from the migrations of earth. In the opinion of Greece, those who left Sparta or Athens to dwell on the coasts of Asia, were emigrants. In the opinion of the Tyrians, those who left the great seaport of antiquity to colonise Carthage were emigrants. But Socrates' idea of migration was that of a far more distant journey. His emigrant went—where, he knew not—but to some very remote place. And the circumstances of his migration were widely different. The earthly emigrant, when he crossed the seas, was still under the old sun and moon. He found rivers and mountains much the same as those he had left behind. He found men also, it might be, differing in color and feature, but still essentially the same as those with whom he had been acquainted—eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, enjoying life and then passing out of it by the painful gate of death. But Socrates' emigrants went to scenes and circumstances never before experienced. They left their old coarse earthly bodies behind them, and went in some ethereal spiritual form to their new land of promise. For himself, the philosopher hoped that he would go to other men like himself—good men, very different from the men who in Athens had hunted him to death. Of his meeting with men in the far-off land, he was, however, by no means sure. But of this he would fain be certain—that he would go in death to the good gods, and live with them.

Such was the hope—the strong hope—of Socrates, but we cannot say that such was his firm conviction or belief. He could go no farther than a hope that "something" should survive for the dead. "I have good hopes," he says, in his Phædo, "that there is something in reserve for the dead, and that, as was said of old, it will be much better for the good than for the bad" (c. viii). In his Apology, he shows how uncertain he was after all his reasonings and his hopes:—"Death," he says, "is one or other of two things; either it is at an end that the dead man is annihilated, and has no perception of anything, or, according to common report, a certain change takes place, and a translation of the soul from this place here to another" (c. xxxii). For the good, he felt certain that the translation would be happy; if—there was any translation at all! His wishes and aspirations, in truth, were what originated and sustained his hopes. Without those longings, he would have brushed away his arguments as lighter than the light air. But with his grand intellect, his magnificent ideas, his love of truth, and his wish to spread it, his keen sense of the value of life as a scene of exertion, he would never give up his hope of immortality; would plead for it with reasons whose weakness his longings would not permit him to see, and would do so to the close of his life. His hope was, to him, a light shining in a dark place, and he would like that his friends also should walk in its light.

But how feeble was his light, for how weak and uncertain was his conviction! In his Phædo, he puts forward all his strongest arguments, and speaks as strongly as he possibly could for the soul's inalienable immortality, and yet even here he can express only a "good hope" in favor of it. In his "Apology," he takes a lower tone. He tells his judges that whether he or they have a "happier destiny" before them is "unknown to every one, except the Deity." And he speaks of death as one of two equally probable states, either such as he has described it in the Phædo, as a migration to gods and to pure skies, or as a deep, unbroken sleep, such as Epicurus pictured it to be. He never speaks of immortality as a certain thing. In one place he speaks of it as a "possibility;" in another, as that of which "good hopes" might be entertained; in another, as that which was "probable" (Phædo, cc. vii., xii., xiv).

Such was the foremost advocate for immortality in Athens in the fifth century before Christ. How feeble, after all, was his conviction for himself! How weak would be its influence upon others! Compare his utterances with those of the great Founder of Christianity: "I am the resurrection and the life." Christ says to Martha, "He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Socrates appeals to the reason. Christ speaks with authority. We dispute with the one: we believe with the other. We rest upon Christ's word as a world to rest upon. We cannot repose upon the word of one who ever interspersed with his subtle reasonings the fears intimated in such expressions as: "if what is reported be true"—"if, indeed, what is said be true." (Apology, c. xxxii.)

Nor can we wonder at the uncertainty of Socrates' own mind upon his favorite theory, when we consider the nature of the arguments by which he would support it. In one place he rests it on an old tradition of Hades. In another on the doctrine of contraries, proceeding from contraries. The theory that all knowledge is reminiscence, is another of his main supports. While perhaps his principal one is based upon the injurious effects of matter upon mind; so much so that our possession and exercise of our senses is the most formidable barrier to the pursuit of truth and knowledge. (Phædo, Cantos xvi. xvii. x. xi. xii). Socrates was indeed most ingenious in his bringing forward and his use of his various arguments, but he was equally ingenious to see in his inmost soul their insufficiency. His reasonings, and those of others who agreed with or differed from him, lead us only to the one conclusion, that it requires an authoritative revelation to tell us how far we are to be guided in the multifarious feelings which agitate the human mind on the contemplation of immortality. Where some looked for it, and others dreaded it; where some believed in it, and others laughed it to scorn: it would require a revelation from God to know how much of truth and how much of error there was in the speculations of mankind. To do this, was one grand object of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. 2 Tim. i. 10.

And now, what have we arrived at from a view of Socrates' own opinion upon this great question? We have arrived, we think, at this, that by the universal confession of the refined and cultivated mind of Greece, the [illegible] the immortality of the human soul was incapable of being demonstrated by reason. Socrates acknowledges his doubt. Plato does the same, for the reasoning of the Phædo must be taken as just as much his as it is that of Socrates. Cicero does the same in the first book of his Tusculan Questions, where he reasons, in our judgment, more convincingly for the immortality of the soul than Socrates has done in the Phædo. More powerful minds than these have never existed. Their theory of immortality was near to all their hearts. Weighed in the scale of strict reason, they all confess its uncertainty. The highest reason of mankind confesses that it cannot establish the immortality of the soul.

And if such was the opinion of such men as Socrates, Plato, and Cicero, men who united to a lofty genius an ardent desire to establish for themselves and others the doctrine of human immortality, what, we will next ask, was the state of common opinion in Athens and Greece in the fifth century before Christ? Some might perhaps say, that in the pride of intellectual superiority, some of the greatest minds of antiquity may only have succeeded in entangling themselves in the web of their own arguments, and so reduced themselves to uncertainty; but that, at all events, ordinary minds, both among the cultivated and the lower classes, were all but unanimous in their belief in the doctrine in question. Let us examine Plato's Phædo, and see what is its verdict upon this important point.

We have seen that Socrates on the day of his death, and when he delivered his last discourse, was surrounded by some twenty persons, his personal friends or his ardent admirers, many of them natives of Athens, some of them from other parts of Greece, all of them men of culture and education; as a body representing a state of opinion, certainly among the educated classes, to a considerable extent at least among those of a lower grade. What was the opinion of those educated friends and admirers of Socrates, when on the last day of his life, he essayed to deliver the burning thoughts of his soul?

It is but asking what was the object of the Phædo? Socrates had divulged to a certain extent his own good hopes for himself, that there was blessing of a very high kind in store for him when he should have yielded to the deadly power of the poison. (Phædo, viii.) How do his friends treat this announcement of their master? They refer to it as a thing of which they might have heard before, but of which they, one and all, were convinced. It was not that they regarded the view with any dislike. It was far otherwise. It opened out so bright a prospect to their hopes, that they are displeased with Socrates for having apparently intended to depart from life without having imparted to them what had brought such courage and hope to his mind at the near aspect of death. "What, then, Socrates," exclaimed Simmias, "do you intend to depart, reserving this consideration for yourself, or would you impart it to us also? For this blessing seems common to us also; and at the same time it shall be your defence, should you convince us of what you assert." Now, to convince these friends of the immortality of the soul, was the object of Socrates in the argument of the Phædo. They had no such belief. It was a new thought to them, almost as new a thought as the doctrine of the resurrection, preached by Paul, was to the Athenians five centuries afterwards, (Acts xvii. 32.) But Socrates, in answer to their expostulation, would open out this view of immortality to them, and convince them of it if he could. "I shall endeavor to do so," he replied. "I wish now to unfold to you, as being my judges, the reason why a man who has in reality spent his life in the pursuits of philosophy, appears to me to be fearless and undaunted when about to die, and to cherish a favorable hope that when he dies, he shall in that other state obtain the greatest possible blessings. How this can be so, Simmias and Cebes, I shall endeavor to tell you."

Now, what does this tell us of the belief of human immortality on the part of various classes in Greece in the age of Socrates? With regard to the educated classes, it tells us beyond a question, that as a general rule, they had no belief in it whatsoever. The companions of Socrates at his death had no such faith, and they represented the cultured portion of their nation. They were, we must allow also, a section of the educated classes most likely to have adopted the views of Socrates on the doctrine in question. They were his personal friends, or his devoted disciples, or his ardent admirers at least. And yet among them, numbering over twenty persons, there was not a single individual who held the doctrine of the soul's immortality, when Socrates had begun to enter upon his lengthened argument in favor of it, as we find it recorded in the Phædo. What is the inevitable inference? It can be only this, that at the time of Socrates' death, the immortality of the soul was, with scarcely an exception, held to be a mere unfounded myth by the educated minds of Greece. They probably had the idea of it in their conception. Many of them probably would have been glad to accept it. But as a truth they did not regard it. It was with them a mere surmise, the lingering tradition, perhaps, how changed or altered they could not tell, of an old tradition long abandoned as a verity.

Now what was, we may say universally, held by educated men in Greece, was doubtless held, we will not say so universally, but still generally, by the classes below them. It is impossible to think that views universally held by the portion of the nation looked up to as guides in knowledge, should not have been shared in a very considerable degree by those who looked up to them. That such was the case, we have the plain confession of Socrates and of his friends. Speaking of an after-existence as one which he hoped to be a truth, and which, if true, he felt would be an infinite blessing to himself, he yet is forced to say of it, "This, indeed, excites incredulity with most men." "Τουτο δε ειλλοις απιστον πολλοις." And Cebes immediately afterwards repeats the confession of us all but universal disbelief in immortality, on the part of the multitude. "Other things, Socrates," he said to his master, "appear to me to be spoken with reason; but what regards the soul occasions much distrust amongst men; lest, when dissolved from the body, it may no longer exist anywhere, but be destroyed and be annihilated on the same day on which a man dies; and lest immediately after its separation and departure from the body, being dispersed like a breath or smoke, it should vanish and have no further existence." (Phædo, cantos xiii. xiv).

What, then, becomes of that supposed universal belief in the immortality of the soul which some men assert? It breaks down upon serious examination. In the age of Socrates and Plato, in Athens and throughout Greece, it was generally unbelieved. It was thought of and argued about a great deal. Some hoped for it, and others would dread it, but very few accepted it as a reality. What amount of truth there was in it, could not, it is plain, be discerned from merely human speculation, but must be drawn from a Divine revelation, if we would have our minds resting on any solid foundation.—Henry Constable, in Rainbow.

LORD JESUS COME QUICKLY.

[Affectionately inscribed to my brother in Christ, Jacob Shaffer, my faithful teacher in the word of the Lord. The following lines are but the echo of the wish so often expressed by those who love his appearing. "I want to be living when Jesus comes." Let us cherish this hope as a purifying test, "for he that hath this hope purifieth himself, even as He(he) is pure".]

I want to be living when Jesus returns
To see him in glory my heart ever yearns,
I long to behold Him once more with the throng,
And join with the choir in the conqueror's song.

I want to be living when Jesus is King,
While nations their tribute to Zion are bringing,
Then war's dreadful alarms shall be no more heard
For peace waves in triumph from shore unto shore.

I want to be living when earth is made bright,
By beautiful sunshine of "seven fold light,"
When bright blooming flowers shall never decay,
And the curse from the earth is taken away.

I want to be living beholding the day,
When children with serpents shall harmlessly play,
And beasts of the forest no longer are wild,
When lion and lamb shall be led by a child.

I want to be living when "all things are new,"
When saints of all ages the faithful and true,
Shall be like the angels to die never more,
O, then give me life on that evergreen shore.

MICA-PEN NOTES.

The other evening, as I sat by the lamp, reading, I said—"now, it is of no use to overtax one's eye-sight, by too faint a light. Let us have a better flame,—so I will just turn up the wick a little. The eyes are of more value than the oil. Of what consequence is an additional penny's worth of petroleum, in comparison with eye-sight. There, that is much better. How much pleasanter and better, a little more light is! and just then it came like a flash to my mind to say,—"that just illustrates what our Lord meant in the Sermon on the Mount,—for he said, Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Here, we use the beautiful petroleum, and what we really need,—that is just what we have a right to use—be it more or less—and not sacrifice the precious eye sight. Eye-sight is more than oil. The body is more than raiment, and God knows it,—and we ought to think appreciatively of this, and give him the credit of his care and kindness. And yet [illegible] people are sometimes pinched [illegible] doubtless connected with [illegible] faith, for if faith in God is perfect, will any of God's saints suffer for the lack of any good thing? At any rate, here is a good illustration of the Lord's teaching. Too much light would hurt our eyes, as well as too little. Luxurious over-abundance, or at least luxurious self-indulgent abundance may harm—as indeed it does. But our Father knows we need enough for our necessities, and our lives being of more value than food, is he not able to supply the food?

I am reading Rufus Wendell's American edition of Farrar's Life of Christ, a grand and helpful work. What joy and profit, also, to have now and better ideas of Jesus! Would to God Christ were wrought in us far more vividly and effectually, than might we live and teach and write to better purpose. There are those who have labored in life faithfully, and who feel that rest is near and dear. Sunset has come, and the working day is over. Others again—feeling that life has been under-fruitful if I may say so, and that one's true work-time has hardly yet come, look forward to the future even yet, and after the mid-day is gone, and the sun shines slantingly in the past meridian west. The thought is,—I have not yet fairly commenced to live. I am waiting for the Holy Ghost. No matter if the waiting seems long, wait on God I must, and in a single hour, God can do what poor unaided human strength can do, no, not in a hundred years. If I had only time and courage to undertake it, I would just like to give in a series of articles, the best points in Farrar's Life of Christ. O, the glory and riches of this knowledge of Jesus, for which we stand in waiting and in want! Let art and science do their best. Let word-learning thrive as it may—the great thirst is always the thirst for living water. Let schools multiply as they may, the learning of and from the Messiah is the true conquest and the true schooling. Let all the millions of the great, do and say what they will yet let the little, secret yearning learner seek diligently apart from all man if need be, to receive and derive and inspire, every thing possible of the Son—every where by day and night—drinking light and life from him, and waiting, watching, intensely waiting and watching for all the good he will give. But suppose there are trials. Well, let us learn to bear them well, and find beauty and profit in them. Bravely and cheerfully and elastically borne, they have lost their sting and hurt.

While I say so much I will nevertheless speak with compassion and consideration for some very serious and sore troubles of poor children of God. And in such cases let us who have knowledge of these afflictions be pitiful, and kindly beseech our Lord to take them away as soon as he consistently can and will. For example, see yonder, a mother and daughter in poor health, and with the slenderest means, wearing away with daily grief for the weak yielding of an only son and brother to the destroying power of strong drink.

There is a trouble for you. Every day, the spirit-enemy is eating away health and hope, working havoc in blood and brain, liver and lungs, and death is coming in due time, and all the little circle see it. It is sorrow, sorrow every way. Poverty like a ghost haunts the home. But for Christian faith, there would be hopelessness. As it is, what room for praying eyes that read these lines, to be lifted up to the merciful Lord, to look pityingly from heaven and help these troubled children in their grief—the mother and daughter who say—and say truly, for long years life has been a burden heavy to carry. But there is a future, joy the keener and more wonderful for all the strangeness of the trial. How many millions have even died in times of trial, unsaved from their pain, until the last breath, for whom joys are waiting, almost hurrying to come, when the kingdom comes.

I much liked the thought suggested by Farrar that our Lord was in splendid physical health, no attenuated ghost, and that he rested perfectly, whenever he did and could rest, sleeping sweetly and profoundly, never, never, needlessly worried, a true and perfect second Adam, even though he had so many sorrows, sorrows never from one least plague of any wrong in himself, but sorrows from sympathy with the woes of humanity.

And this leads me to say, how strange that the philosophy vain and false as we understand it, of incorporal soul-life should have conquered and caught the world as it has, and how easy to be seen it is, that he who sleeps soundly and profoundly, wakes with no account of time in sleep, whether it be one hour or ten. Abraham, still to this day asleep, when he rises in the [illegible] will know no such thing as [illegible] to the extent of even a [illegible] day, from any memory or experience, or power of realization. So don't let us be afraid to go to sleep for fear of having long to remain asleep.

I did not truly pre-meditate a long article, when I sat down to write. But I have more than half a mind to touch another subject. I was struck with surprise to see that Lyman Abbott, who had come out grandly for conditional immortality a while ago, if my memory was not weak and disordered, was now almost ultra-orthodoxically championing the old ideas of disembodied heaven, ascending at death, and declaring that Scripture practically puts the resurrection at death, and no where else! And that scientific necessity impossible-izes material resurrection of atoms. Ah, well, let us take it calmly, and bear our sadness with fixed hoping towards God, though any, once in good part disenthralled from error, nevertheless unhappily recedes. God remains unchanged. How is it that good men may lose the clear power of perceiving truth, under the accumulating burden of active traditions, and traditionisms? How is it that men can not see the simple truth that God does teach resurrection of atoms, on beyond death, and not soul beatification without resurrection, at death? How is it there is a lost sight of the day of God, the day of restitution, recomposition of elements, and real resurgence of the dead? Has not Jesus' body now some mark of his sorrow and even laceration, and will not John or Peter, or you and I, by grace, see the reminiscent mark? Is not an old soldier honored by his wounds? and will not Jesus be? and shall not we be like him in this, that if his body was glorified, we shall have bodies to be glorified too. But it is little worth the while to go over the ground, to say to such as have lost the power to see. I speak kindly, that there is abundance of proof that bodies rise, yes, bodies rise, and that the resurrection is appointed to graciously undo what death grievously does. For death, instead of setting the souls free to go to heaven, only sets the truth plainly evident before heaven and earth that a resurrection is needful to be a match and amendment, a counterpoise and conquest of the very dissolution that has stored up bodies, and bodies of once-living millions, in more invisible villages in the dust, than the sharpest seeing eagle could count above the dust, by far, even if eagles could count. No, it is of little or no use to spend one moment with those who having begun to see, have again gone back to twilight, by the over-stealing film of tradition.

One has thoughts, though, and one cannot help thinking. Let us think with care, and humility and prayers, always. And I will put a thought or two into shape, with ink and pen, and mind it well, without one single atom of assertiveness, and only in a way the most entirely inquiring, that if possible some one may help us to see the way clearly. This is what I would suggest at the beginning, to wit, that Jesus in his teaching, sometimes points out plainly one thing and only one, and sometimes includes several things in one grand enunciation. Remembering this, let us see what we can see. Does science say that literal recomposition of the body is impossible, from the vagrant and hopeless course of atoms, and the reduction of gaseous and molecular ingredients into every whither of infinite distribution? Is science thus learned and confident? Science needs in carrying out to faith, or needs putting a little tunic of faith on her marvelous shoulders. Is God less wise and powerful now than when he made the world? Elements obeyed Jesus as their God, and Jesus, master of atoms and forces certified to the resurrection of men in defiance of all dissolution and distribution. Air in wrath and whirlpool sat still at his feet when he said two words on Galilee lake. I say now Jesus is Master of air and of atoms, of oxygen and all gases, of water, and all oceans and rivers, rain and dew, fire and all energies and menstruums. Master, master, over, and everywhere, and when he comes, he will no doubt prove it, because the Spirit of God is in him, and the Spirit searcheth all deep things, and has produced them, and the product is servant of the Producer.

Is it true that water and air are the essential agents of decomposition in the common course of nature? Truly they are. If there be neither water nor air there will be no decomposition, and even fire cannot act with any energy without air. In Egypt things decay slowly, because there is so little moisture in that climate. But the joint, or rapidly alternating agency of water and air rapidly disintegrate dissoluble things, especially dead organisms. With this preparatory suggestions, very modestly may I ask, if in addition to what we have understood in our best possible ideas and interpretations of the night discourse to Nicodemus there is something there, still more, and yet, for us to learn. I will very briefly suggest a few things, and ask my Master in Greek, to help me. First, Jesus says, (to begin near the end,) "if I told you the earthly things, and you believe not how, if I tell you the heavenly things, will you believe?" What are the earthly things? The topic is that of the absolutely necessary genesis in the future, to any part in the coming kingdom of heaven. This generation, or birth, if that is the best word, is and must be out of hudatos and pneumatos, and primarily these words mean water and air. I knew how the water is taken variously to mean baptism, (and I once thought so, but I am still teachable,) and the natural birth, and the word of God, and the Spirit of God. Water does indeed stand for a symbol in Scripture, of both the doctrine of Christ, and of his Holy Spirit. No need to stop to show this here. Now how shall we understand the word here and now, symbolically or literally? and in what way, either symbolically or literally? The pneumatos has no article, anymore than the hudatos, and the birth out of pneumatos taken as a birth out of the Holy Spirit, or be it, as an agent of the new life, might seem to have pre-supposed the article.

Some queries might be barely suggested. Is hudatos the water symbolic? If so, does it symbolize the Spirit Divine? Then why should practically the same thing be twice stated in two words, amounting to this, spirit and spirit? Why is pneuma thus taken for the Spirit Divine, and then again, almost the next moment, is it rendered wind; and this is in both the common and revised versions. The wind we can hear, the Spirit we cannot, and on the whole, this rendering may be preferred.

With these thoughts in mind, and with the vivid and painful perception of that unbelief of science, which is so impressed with the seemingly hopeless lapse of atoms into the infinity of sea and earth and air, as to declare recovery and recomposition impossible, we may modestly ask, does our Lord have something for us here, as a stay against the dogmatic negative of this same science? He says to Nicodemus, "I have spoken of earthly things." And though he says nothing of a birth out of the earth, yet, really water and air are earthly, and melt readily dissolve organisms, and are the ready media of dispersion. New life, new birth, material resurrection, shall be, in spite of all that air and water can do, and the power of God shall recover out of their power, all the sleeping saints. Not for one moment do I maintain that this is the principal doctrine of the six consecutive verses, but it may be worth the while to ask if it may not be in some way fairly deduced from them, or comprehended in them. I would not for one moment lower the dignity and greatness of the work of the Divine Spirit, nor disparage in the least all or aught that rightly belongs to these verses. Yet I must say I never could fully understand why the birth of the Spirit, was an earthly thing, when Christ himself said that no offence against that Spirit, was graver than a calumny of himself, and this too when just here he puts his own mission to the world from God, as a heavenly and not an earthly thing. How most forcibly he told the Sadducees, "Ye understand not the Scriptures nor the power of God," and there he clearly meant the resurrection. The power of God is a thing faintly, faintly believed and faintly conceived when resurrection works are in question. The power of God can recover things the most hopelessly lost in the boundless abysses of nature. Let him who can and dare, put a limit to the glorious power of God. I may be dead and forgotten, no "leaning stele" may mark my dust. No soul of a living man on earth may know that I ever lived. But God will know, and he will know every secret of scattered atoms, every shift of interfusible elements, and every wildest and most wonderful way of things the most elusive, like hydrogen even. He who can "hear our thoughts" can find us when we are dead. This faith is the rock of expectation. It listens not for one moment to such a question, as "how can this be."

In concluding I may simply ask if the teaching of Jesus does not comprehend more than we have supposed, not less, but more, as if it implied this. "A man must be born," (including the whole mystery of life from conception to the perfection of resurrection and immortal life, some may say, yet this is not clear,) "a man must be born again, born from above, by the power of God. He must be spiritually begotten to understand through faith, the true kingdom of God, and to enter into it personally, he must be raised from the dead. He must be re-born out of the elements of nature into which, and by the disolving power of which, he is lost and invisible by death. God must do this work, and God can do it. He must be born out of the water, which is visible, and air which is invisible.

Water is the chief ingredient of his animal frame in life, and he lives by breathing air, and water and air reclaim their own when he dies. He must be reborn out of these. Even the dust atoms that may enter into the subject of the new spiritual body, shall become vital and spiritual. They are marked by the Spirit of God, that has dwelled among them. They are not and never can be be lost." By this, we understand the proposition ek to denote the place or condition out of which the new man is called up, and not alone the agent of the re-composition.

Now all this is tentative, and the farthest possible from dogmatic. If on the whole it is utterly untenable, let it pass. I am aware of the objection to it, in verse 6. "That which is born of the flesh, is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit, is Spirit". The simple modest question is, whether the thought I have hinted may be included in some way in the greater thought of birth by Holy Spirit power, unto new immortal spirit life of the resurrected man.

Editor Restitution:

I must renew my subscription for our valuable paper, which brings joyful words of encouragement from so many of the children of God; who as dear fellow-pilgrims are traveling toward the heavenly kingdom. We are sorry to see so many turning back to the beggardly elements of this present world.

Brethren mingle in politics, chew and smoke tobacco, use many idle words, who should not be "conformed to this world, but be transformed to the image of Christ." Oh, how we would rejoice, even now, to see our brethren and sisters live more like Jesus, and instead of spending money for the foolish and hurtful things of this world, put it to a better use, in support of the ministry and for the dissemination of the glorious gospel of the kingdom. Yours in hope.

THE WITHERED FIG TREE PUTTING FORTH FRUIT.

Matt. xxi. 19, and xxiv. 32.

We sometime since made mention of the conversion of a Jewish lawyer, Joseph Rabinowitz, of South Russia, to faith in Christ Jesus. Fully persuaded of the Messiahship of Jesus he returned to his home in Bessarabia and began to preach "Jesus our Jewish brother the true Messiah," with great success. Shortly after it was rumored that he had been murdered, but the latest accounts contradict this and say that the movement among the Jews is spreading gradually. The following translation of a letter from the Reformer to a gentlemen of London will be read with interest. The fig tree cursed to the end of the age not only has leaves of promise but now begins to bear fruit.

Kishenev, Jan. 2, 1885.

To John Wilkinson, the esteemed man:

Your valuable letter and your pamphlet, "The Work of the Lord Among Israel," were received. My heart rejoiced when I read them and perceived how great and strong is love of your heart is toward the brethren of the Lord Jesus, the Messiah, according to the flesh, and how precious the salvation of the Israelitic nation is in your eyes.

I prostrate myself before Jehovah, the God of our Lord Jesus, and from the depth of my heart stream forth the words of the Sweet Singer of Israel (Psa. xxxv.) "Let them be ashamed and brought to confusion together that rejoice at mine hurt. Let them shout for joy and be glad that favor my righteous cause; yea, let them say continually, Let the Lord be magnified, which hath pleasure in the prosperity of his servant." Amen.

Herewith I send you a pamphlet, "The First Fruits of a Fig Tree," which contains my opinions and statements in reference to those children of Israel in Southern Russia who believe in Jesus as the Messiah. These documents have been edited by Professor Franz Delitzsch, of Leipzig. Out of them you will learn to know the origin of our faith in Jesus (our Brother bodily), the Messiah. He is the innermost desire and longing of our hearts. Our English friends and brethren in Jesus, our Savior, may be convinced by this above named pamphlet that after the Lord hath made bare his holy arms in the eyes of all the nations, and all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God, that now the time has come when there shall depart and go out from the midst of Israel all unclean persons, and the bearers of the vessels of the Lord shall be cleansed.

True, the salvation of the Lord cannot go out and come into (Joshua vi. 1:) the world with haste, nor can it walk with rapidity, but now as Jehovah, the Avant-guard and King of the Universe, has passed on before the people of Israel, the God of Israel shall come also as Rear-guard, as gatherer of the outcasts of Israel.

Beloved of the Lord! I here with write to you that when my feet touched the Holy City, i. e., Jerusalem, and I beheld the place where they pierced him (Jesus), then and there Jehovah enlightened my eyes, so that I understood the Law, the Prophets and Psalms in reference to the plan of salvation, and I tasted somewhat of the sweetness of that mystery which is, to the sorrow of my heart, still unrevealed to the majority of my brethren, the sons of Israel.

From that time on I devoted my time and name to the welfare of my stubborn and unhappy nation to testify unto them with a brazen forehead in the strength of God the gospel of promise, which our fathers had received, viz., that God hath raised this man, Jesus of Nazareth, out of the seed of David as Savior (Liberator) of Israel.

Through the depth of the riches and wisdom of God, the Highest, our fathers, who were incumbents of the promise, rebelled against Jesus, so that grace might be bestowed upon the heathen nations, not through any promise, but through grace in the gospel of the Messiah.

Now, after the fulness of the Gentiles hath come in, the time has arrived for us, the sons of Israel, to return to the God of Israel and his King and be his beloved children. We should accept our heritage, the heritage of Jacob, which is without limit, for we are the legitimate heirs, children of Abraham, disciples of Moses, servants of the house of David in eternity. Thus our fulness (i. e., the coming of many Israelites to Christ) will be our riches and the riches of the nations, according to the words of Jehovah by St. Paul, a firstborn of Israel, and at the same time the forerunner among the returning heathen.

Among my brethren and in large meetings I earnestly admonish, "Shake thyself from the dust; arise, put on thy beautiful garments, my people; through the son of Jesse, Jesus of Nazareth, hath the Lord done great things with thee, O Israel, that he might also work great things among the nations of the earth, who were blessed in our fathers."

I greatly thank God that I see thousands who cheerfully listen, and I trust in Jehovah, who elected David his servant, and his seed after him, that in due time all these will be living stones built by God himself into a steadfast house and priestly sanctuary, so that acceptable sacrifices may be brought hither to the God of Israel in Jesus, the Messiah. They shall know and accept the truth which alone can make them free children.

Many and worthy sons of Israel are waiting and long for the hour, the hour of grace of our God. I implore you, in the name of our brethren in Russia who seek the salvation, that the friends of our Lord Jesus Christ, wherever they be, may not be silent, but that they give counsel and speak out boldly, until Immanuel be with us also, until Jehovah show us him and his dwelling.

Then all who see us in our land, Russia, will say of us, "They are the blessed seed of the Lord."

These are humble words written from afar off by one who bows before you and seek a more intimate acquaintance with you, a son of Israel indeed.—Joseph Rabinowitz, in Zion's Watch Tower.

The Second Advent.

The main question on which the Christian Church is divided as the subject of our Lord's coming is as to the time, some believing that he will not return to the earth until after the Millennium, while others believe that his return must be before the commencement of that thousand years of blissful life. Both views are, of course, based on the Word of God, which both sections of the church regard as the final and supreme authority on all questions of belief. It seems to ourselves, in common with all pre-Millennial believers, that the plain and direct teaching of the Bible is that there can be no millennium until Jesus comes, and that the opposite view can be held by sincere Christian men only by explaining away, and putting a strained meaning upon several emphatic passages of Scripture, as well as running counter to the general tenor of the prophetic books. We would not for a moment be understood as reflecting upon the sincerity of those who differ from us. Many eminent men of ripe scholarship and undoubted piety hold very strongly opinions on this subject radically opposed to our own, but we believe that if once they were convinced that their views were unscriptural they would abandon them immediately. The whole question, therefore, turns upon the true meaning of certain well-known passages.

Infidels have frequently referred to such differences of opinion in their attacks on the Bible. But the argument is worthless. In our law courts differences of opinion of the same character are seen every day, and that, not only among lawyers whose opinions may be biased by their interests, but among judges who have no desire than that of giving a sound interpretation of the law. The recent Virginia Bond cases are an instance in point, nearly one-half of the judges of the United States Supreme Court being opposed to the judgment of their learned associates. In the law courts we are accustomed to hear a great deal about "the authorities," and in legal arguments citations of authorities form an important element. It is in this sense that the ancient manuscript called the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, to which we have before referred in these columns, is of importance. Scholars have had it before them now for five years, and have examined it carefully. While a few believe that it is not genuine, others, by far the greater number, have arrived at the conclusion that it is a true and genuine statement of the doctrines taught by the apostles, and that it was indorsed by them, and copies of it were in circulation among the churches within four hundred years, if not within a much shorter time, after our Lord's ascension. The teaching must therefore be considered in the legal sense an "authority" of no mean value. What, then, do we find in it about this much debated question of the Second Advent? What did the apostles teach with regard to it? The following extract is the sixteenth chapter of the Teaching (page 27 of the new edition published by Scribner's Sons):

"Watch for your life's sake; let your lamps not go out, and your loins not be loosed, but be ready, for ye know not the hour in which your Lord cometh. But ye shall come together often and seek the things which benefit your souls; for the whole time of your faith thus far, will not profit you, if ye be not made perfect in the last time. For in the last days the false prophets and the corrupters shall be multiplied, and the sheep shall be turned into wolves, and love shall be turned into hate; for when lawlessness increaseth they shall hate one another, and shall persecute and deliver up, and then shall appear the world-deceiver as Son of God, and shall do signs and wonders, and the earth shall be given into his hands, and he shall commit iniquities which have never yet been done since the beginning. Then all created men shall come into the fire of trial, and many shall be made to stumble and shall perish. But they that endure in their faith shall be saved from under even this curse. And then shall appear the sign of the truth; first, the sign of an opening in heaven, then the sign of the trumpet's sound, and thirdly, the resurrection of the dead; yet not of all, but as it hath been said: the Lord will come and all the saints with him. Then shall the world see the Lord coming upon the clouds of heaven."

This chapter, which is a verbatim copy of the translated portion of the manuscript, shows that when it was written, whether in the lifetime of the apostles or at a later date, the expectation was that the Lord might come speedily, and that no such interval as a thousand years was expected to intervene. That his coming would find the world a scene of sin, sorrow, suffering, backsliding, and persecution, not a scene of millennial blessedness; and finally that there would be two resurrections. All this we inferred from the Scriptures; the manuscript indicates that the early church had the same belief.—N. Y. Independent.

WHEN HE COMES.

If I were told that I must die to-morrow—
That the next sun
Which rising should hear me plant all fear and sorrow
For any one;
All the light hoping, all the short journey through,
What should I care?

I do not think that I should shrink or falter,
But just go on
Intent on work, not rest to change, nor alter
Aught that is done,
But rise and arise, and love and smile and pray
For one more day.

And lying down at night for a last sleeping,
Say to that dear
Who by me sees me sleep, Good-night, Thy keeping
Is best of all.
How should I fear?
And if on a to-morrow I shall Be Thou Thy will."

I might not sleep for awe; but peaceful, tender,
My soul would lie
All night long; and when the morning splendor
Lit earth and sky,
I should say calmly, quietly, "It is the day."

But if a wondrous Hand from the brute powder
Held back the veil,
On which my fancy was—and I with wonder
Beheld [illegible]
To a long century [illegible]
What should I do?

What could I do, O Blessed Guide and Master,
Other than this—
Still to go on as now, not slower, faster,
Nor fear to miss
The road, although so very long it be,
While led by Thee!

Step after step, I cling Thee here beside me,
Although unseen,
And seek thorns, through darkness, whether the deepest hide There—
On heaven's serene—
Assured Thy faithfulness cannot betray
Nor love decay.

Let me live on, walking and suffering
Thy will alone,
Through a long century—[illegible] Gethsemane,
Or a short day's;
Thou canst not come too soon; and I can wait
If Thou come late.

The Organic Household of the Body In Its Relation to the Household of Faith.

The parable figure of the "household of faith" is as old as the Bible, and indeed may be said to be a teaching as old to the race and the "seed promise" to the woman. We set it in the corpus (family) of the earliest civilizations of which history gives us any account, in the confederations of "the sons of Jacob" under the organized leadership of Moses, and the ancient Hebrew theocracy or corpus of which household God is Father as well as King, and it is toward "this consummation devoutly to be wished for" the confederation of all the families (corpora) nations of the earth into one great omne household, confraternity with God as Father, that "the gospel of the kingdom" looks forward. Now there are always certain fundamental principles in any organic arrangement of things that are equally applicable to and true of the integer and all its multiples. Man as an organic cosmos or the organic individual man becomes the illustrative integer of every step in the progress of ages towards this great organic consummation.

The individual integer for instance, has a head, a body, hands and feet, eyes and ears, nose and mouth, etc. In short all the faculties and constitutional parts of such a cosmic whole are represented, and therefore in parable illustration the writer or speaker frequently lays hold of the universal knowledge of the one (the integer) to illustrate that which is analogically true only of some other, and one very difficult to apprehend perhaps except in the simplicity and beauty of the familiar analogue.

Now there is one passage in the Scriptures of the Old Covenant, so remarkable in its use of this particular parable analogue, that I will retranslate it and attempt in the way of exegesis, how the reader not only, the inspired lesson for the conduct of life that has floated down to us and is so plainly seen on its placid surface, but some of the wonderful hidden beauty and wisdom down in the dark depths, which only the eye of faith may penetrate and discern.

ECCLESIASTES XI. 9, 10.

9. Rejoice, O young man in thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart blameless (this very important word entirely omitted in the Common Version) and not in the sight of thine eyes (that is walk by faith); and know that for all these things God will lead thee unto a judicial investigation;

10. And put away passion from thy heart, and lead aside wickedness from thy flesh because youth and indiscretion are vanity.

CHAPTER XII.

1. And remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth, before thy days of trouble have come, and before the years draw nigh, in which thou wilt say, there is no purpose in them for me:

2. Before the sun shall have become darkened and the light and the moon and the stars, (the falling vision incident to old age) and the clouds return after the showers; (the elasticity and buoyancy of youth to react from the depressing influence of sorrow [woe].

3. Before the day when the keepers of the household (the hands) shall have become palsied; and the heroes of the host (the front teeth in their relation to the whole set or array of teeth) have been displaced (lit. twisted by violence out of place), and the grinders (the back teeth) have become idle because they have come to have little to do; and the lookers on in the open windows (the eyes in their sockets) have become enveloped in darkness (the drooping eyelids and failing sight of old age). (Notice the adaptibility of the analogue to the manners and customs of an Eastern household. "The keepers" or guardians of the household "men of might," "the heroes of the host," "the grinders," "women", because the woman did the grinding of the grain for the household in the back part of the house, "the lookers on in the open windows," the "ladies" of the household who are above the menial labor, but who look on and supervise; the difference of gender of the words in the original indicates this thought.)

4. And they close the doors of the market-place on account of the weakness of the call of the grinder (but one left) and he (the old man) ariseth at the voice of the sparrow (the sparrow an early bird in the East—an allusion to the fact that old people are generally light sleepers and early risers) and all the daughters of song (the musical tones of the human voice) have become abased (he has "lost his voice.");

5. And they look on high (man's help vain now) and fright is on the way; and the almond-tree blossometh (the very white hair of the old man compared to the profuse white blossoms of the almond tree) and the locust waxeth fat ("judgment" is the event next in order for men after death, and the locust is an old parable word for "judgment") and the caper-plant (a species of ginger, one of the spices used in preparing for burial) is strewn, because man has gone his way into his long age between death and the resurrection (the internal porticoed house, and the mourners have gathered about in the market-places:

6. Remember (understood or brought forward) before the silver measuring-rod hath been turned upward (an old parable figure taken from the custom in land-measuring, the surveyor here being God's angel of life, who when he has reached the end of the individual allotted line of life turns his silver (natural life) measuring rod upward, thus indicating that the life at this point of departure or angle goes to God who gave it,) and the golden volute hath been shattered (that portion of an Ionic column which beautifully illustrates the "involutions" of the brain and the spinal-cord) and the pitcher hath been broken at the fountain, (the old parable simile of the fountain of life and the body as an earthen vessel of the potter's make with the additional thought of the daily supply necessary) and the wheel at the well hath run to meet it (that is, is in a similar state of disuse and desertion).

7. And the dust hath returned to the earth as it was, and the spiritual breath hath returned unto God who gave it. [This shows that the writer is speaking of a regenerated person. For "we have a life that is hid with Christ in God."]

8. Vanity of vanities said the Ecclesiastic [the church-member not "the preacher," ecclesia, herald, being the specific word in the Scriptures for what we mean by a preacher] all things are vanity;

9. And with special emphasis [did he say it] because he had become a wise Ecclesiastic, because he had taught the way of comprehension in its relation to mankind and an ear will trace out with careful attention the cosmic beauty of parables.

10. Many things did the Ecclesiastic seek out that he might find desirable words that which had been written too of uprightness, words of truth.

11. Words of wise men are ox-goads as it were, and like nails as it were, that have been implanted in them; which from their synthetic agreement of design have been allowed to be from one shepherd [an allusion to the old shepherd kings, their "ox-goad" becoming afterwards a well-understood term for a "sceptre" of rule. Ben-asepun is the word. The handle had symbolic ornamental designs upon it, formed by nails driven into it according to some one original pattern Solomon here says.)

12. And moreover, my son, may-est thou have been warned by them; [those parabolic teachings] that of the making of books there is no end, and that much anxious meditation is a painful weariness of the flesh.

13. Hear thou the sum of all the argument. Fear God and watch to keep his commandments, because this is all the man [that is the whole duty, end and object of man's existence.]

14. Because God will bring [lead lit.] unto a judicial inquiry all the creation, for everything that has casually escaped notice, whether it be good or bad.

I have given this passage not so much to illustrate the beauty and wisdom of the analogue as an instrumentality of enlightenment in the hands of the Divine Teacher, as to show that the household as a parable word was very early laid hold of to illustrate fundamental principles in the divine plan, first as applied to the organic arrangement of the body of the individual man, then as extended to the unity of the family or the corpus, so named from the head or father of the family. From this I might go on to the new aggregation of the demos, the tribe, the nation, etc. But this will not be necessary to enforce the thought which I wish to emphasize, namely that there is an organic unity of design running all through the teaching of the Scriptures of the Old and New, which so far as the animate creation is concerned, finds its simplest integer in the individual organic man, and that what is true of this integer in its essentials to life and health is true also of all its organic aggregations; moreover that these organic unities natural are laid hold of and carried over in the Scriptural analogues or parables into the spiritual cosmos, thus enabling the eye of faith to apprehend "the unseen realities" in all their essential relations, from the seen realities in their similar [not same] relations.

To illustrate the mortal tabernacle of the body [the tent of the household of the body] is represented all through David's and Solomon's writings as being finally pitched at death, after its restless sojournings of life, upon hope as man's last camping ground in this allotment. Why? Because the Scriptures clearly teach that man in this allotment is "dust" or mortal, and that any expectation he may have of immortality rests upon a hope, and solely upon this "hope of the promise made unto the fathers," that God who gave life will so give or renew life under certain conditions inhering in this promise to the fathers, or this "covenant," and that the tabernacle [tent] of David that hath fallen down will be set up again." This too made specific both as to the individual David and the whole corporate body of believers, each viewed as a separate tabernacle of Holy Spirit, or as one corporate whole, in all the ways in which language can make this thought explicit. There is no "ghost" touching in the Scriptures, and so far as it appears in translations and creeds it is apostasy and an exoteric ingrafting from heathendom and heathenish philosophy.

In 2 Cor. v. 1, Paul in illustrating the fact and way of immortality through the resurrection, uses this old parable analogue of "the tabernacle," meaning the organic unity called the body.

This is what he says:

"For we know that if the earthly [clay] house [household] of our tabernacle [tent] be taken down [dissolution meant, but the common word for taking down a tent used] we have a building [process] from God, a house [household] not made with hands, eternal in heaven."

What have we? A building process or a way of being constructed, or reconstructed more properly, as a tent is put up again that has been taken down—not the building or tent itself set up ready to put us into. Where is it, namely, this second reconstructive process? In heaven naturally, where God is, and where that is which he has reserved in his own power.

Where is this process and power to be exercised? In heaven? No. Upon this earth, we are specifically told in many places. The tent is to be set up where it was taken down. The tree is to lie where it falls, whether at the North or the South or the East or the West.

Do they not come from the North and the South and the East and the West to sit down with "Father" Abraham in the kingdom of heaven? Is there not to be a renewed heavens and a renewed earth? Doth not all the creation sigh in conjunction with man, awaiting the redemption, namely, the "Sonship" of the sons of God? The teaching is that the canopy even over our heads, a great tent or tabernacle as it were, "will have been shaken from off its foundations," that all the foundations of the earth will have been shaken," as well; that there will be a rearrangement or "reconstruction of all things as spoken by the mouth of all the prophets," and that the result will be "a new order of things" or "a new cosmos of the heavens and the earth," or a new canopy or tent set upon "a sure foundation that shall never be moved," "in which shall dwell righteousness," and this indwelling will be a "household of faith" the members of which will be resurrected or reconstructed individual saints "saints in light," immortalized saints.

Singing Birds.

By the river, by the lake,
Where the silver ripples break,
In the lonely mountain glen,
In the crowded haunts of men,
In the woods from frost-steps free,
In the garden apple-tree,
Light-and-silver-winged birds roamed.
Little singing birds are found.

In the northern lands of snows,
Mid the icebergs' awful forms,
Under burning tropic skies
Where the verdure never dies,
Where Siberian valleys roam
In their cold and cheerless home,
Where the Nile's rank banks abide,
Little singing birds abide.

In the valleys green and low,
Where the brooks through meadows flow,
Where the dark pines rear their forms,
Battling with the mountain storms,
In the fields amid the flowers,
In the sunshine after showers,
Light-and-shadow-dotting round,
Little singing birds are found.

History of the Dead Sea.

The Dead Sea is a celebrated lake near the southern extremity of Palestine, twenty-five miles east of Jerusalem, and ten miles south of Jericho. Its length from north to south is about forty-one miles, and its breadth at the widest part nine and a half miles.

The basin or hollow in which the Dead Sea reposes forms the southern termination of the great depression, through which the Jordan river flows, that river entering it at the northern extremity. The surface of the lake is 1,312 feet below the level of the Mediterranean, and 984 feet below that of Lake Tiberias, it being thus by far the deepest known fissure on the earth's surface.

It lies embedded between lofty cliffs of naked limestone, its shores presenting a scene of indescribable desolation and solitude, encompassed by desert lands and bleak, stony salt hills, except where there are fresh water streams, in which localities the shores are fertile. Lofty mountains exhibiting frightful precipices rise on the east shore to the height of 2,000 and 2,500 feet above the water.

Its waters are thoroughly impregnated with salt, and it has not been proved that any animal exists there. A mountain of rock salt on its south-west side, called Stone of Sodom, preserves the name of that city, ruined with others as described in Genesis xix. 24-28; and traces of towns or buildings have been seen at certain times in its bed.—A. A. H., in Golden Censer.

The Old Doctor's Story.

"I have a little story to tell you, boys," the old doctor said to the young people the other evening. "One day—a long, hot day it had been, too—I met my father on the road into town."

"I wish you could take this package to the village for me Jim," he said, hesitating:

"Now I was a boy of twelve, not fond of work, and was just out of the hay-field, where I had been at work since daybreak. I was tired, dusty and hungry. It was two miles into town. I wanted to get my supper, and to wash, and dress for singing school.

"My first impulse was to refuse, and harshly, for I was vexed that he should ask me after my long day's work. If I did refuse he would go himself. He was a gentle, patient old man. But something stopped me; one of God's good angels, I think.

"'Of course, father, I'll take it!' I said heartily, giving my scythe to one of the men. He gave me the package.

"'Thank you Jim,' he said, 'I was going myself, but somehow I don't feel very strong to-day.'

"He walked with me to the road that turned off to town, and as he left, put his hand on my arm, saying again, 'Thank you, my son. You've always been a good boy to me, Jim.'

"I hurried into town and back again. When I came near the house I saw a crowd of farm-hands at the door. One of them spoke to me, the tears rolling down his face. "'Your father!' he said. 'He fell dead just as he reached the house. The last words he spoke were to you.'

"I'm an old man now, but I have thanked God over and over again in all the years that have passed since, that those last words were, 'You've always been a good boy to me.'

No human being ever yet was sorry for love or kindness shown to others. But there is no pang of remorse so keen as the bitterness with which we remember neglect or coldness, which we have shown to loved ones who are dead.

Do not begrudge little words and kind words, especially to those who gather with you about the same hearth. In many families a habit of nagging, crossness, or ill-natured gibing, gradually covers the real feeling of love that lies deep beneath. And after all, it is such a little way that we can go together!—Youth's Companion.

Copernicus and What he Thought.

About 300 years ago there was a man named Copernicus. He lived in the city of Rome and taught mathematics in one of the great universities. He watched the motions of the sun and stars and studied them carefully. He could not believe that the sun and moon and stars, each, was fastened in a crystal arch that whirled around the earth once a day. This is what other people thought, but he believed that such beauty as he saw in the skies must be due to some simpler and more beautiful arrangement.

You remember the little rhyme,

"Twinkle, twinkle, little star
How I wonder what you are,"

but I must tell you all stars do not twinkle. If you look at them at night when the sky is clearest, you will see how lively the light of most of them sparkles and flashes, as if they were laughing at you, but if you look carefully you may find a few that do not twinkle at all; they shine with a clear and steady light. These are called planets, and if you could get far enough away from it you would see its shine as bright as any of them.

Now Copernicus saw that the sun and all these planets are in a system by themselves; the twinkling stars are far above them all. He believed the earth to be a globe, turning upon its axis once a day. He believed the sun and all the other planets to be globes too, and that they were whirling on their own axes also. He watched their motions through the heavens around the sun. They leave no track behind them, and yet their way is never lost. Time after time has each one travelled over and over again its noiseless journey in its smooth and unmarked pathway around the sun.

Copernicus hardly dared to tell the world his new ideas about the heavens, for it was then a dangerous thing to believe anything different from what others thought to be true. He who did, would sometimes be driven from his home, shut up in prison or punished with painful torture. So Copernicus kept his thoughts to himself, but he wrote them out in a little book, and not until the very day on which he died was the first printed copy of it received. What he did not dare to teach while alive, everybody has since his death, learned to be true. The sun is the center of the system, the earth and all the other planets go round him at different distances in the heavens.—Prof. L. C. Cooley, Ph. D. in Alden's Juvenile Gem.

Diary of a Rumseller.

Monday.—Took ragged Bill's last dime for whiskey.

Tuesday.—Had a visit from Charlie Piper, who swore off three months ago and signed the pledge; gave him three drinks on tick.

Wednesday.—That poor nervous fool, Dick Plaster, who gets wild and nervous after one drink, came in today; sold him a quart. P. S. Hear he killed his wife in a drunken rage.

Thursday.—Johnny Slogan's wife begged me never to sell another drop to him. She cried till I promised. P. S. Sold him enough this very day to make him smash furniture and beat his children—but ha! ha! Business is business.

Friday.—Phil Carter had no money; took his wife's wedding ring and silk dress for an old bill; sent him home gloriously drunk.

Saturday.—Young Sam Chap took his third drink today. I know he likes it, and will make a speedy drunkard, but I gave him the worth of his money. His father implored me to help break up the practice before it came habit, but I told him if I didn't sell it some one else would.

Sunday.—Pretended to keep the Sunday law to-day, but kept open my back door. Sold beer and wine to some boys, but they'll be ashamed to tell of it. But my till is fuller to-night than the church baskets are.

N. B. My business must be respectable, for real gentlemen patronize my bar—and yet, I guess I won't keep a diary, for these facts look very queer on paper.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXIV. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 17, 1885. NO. 23.

THE RESTITUTION.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR
Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.
Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

"THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the doctrines of repentance, and immersion as prerequisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Selections.

SAVING FAITH.—PART IV.

So far in the preceding on "the things concerning the kingdom of God." I now come to

III.—THE THINGS CONCERNING THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST.

The first of these is that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ, the Son of the living God.

"Christ," in Greek, and "Messiah," in Hebrew, mean in English "Anointed," "The Christ," or "The Messiah," means the Great Anointed One spoken of in the prophets.

Priests were anointed, and so were prophets sometimes; but the title, "the Christ," or "the Messiah," or "the Anointed One," is reserved for kings only.

1 Samuel ii. contains "the mother-text" of all those Scriptures that speak of "the Lord's Christ." It is there where God's Messiah is first called by that name, and nowhere do we find a better view of him as such. It first occurs in Hannah's song, and it so well fitted the lowly state of the house of David, cast back to the stem of Jesse, when the mother of the Lord visited the mother of his forerunner, that we need not wonder why Mary drew so largely from this song in her "Magnificat." Luke i. 46-55.

> The Lord maketh poor, and maketh rich.—
> He bringeth low, and lifteth up.
> He raiseth up the poor out of the dust
> And lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill,
> To set him among his princes
> And to make them inherit the throne of glory.
>
> The adversaries of the Lord shall be broken to pieces,
> Out of heaven shall he thunder upon them:
> The Lord shall judge the ends of the earth:
> And he shall give strength unto His King
> And exalt the horn of His Christ. (1 Sam. ii.)

The adversaries of the Lord are they who plot, combine, and set themselves against the Lord and his Anointed—his Messiah—his Christ, Psa. ii. They shall be broken into pieces as a potter's vessel when the Lord speaks to them in his wrath—the great day of his wrath—and thunders upon them out of Heaven. Then will Jehovah destroy the earth, Rev. xi. 15-18; and judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, appointed, and anointed King on Zion, the hill of his holiness. The heathen shall be given for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. Psa. ii. Then shall "the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever." Then shall he "give strength to his King and exalt the horn of his Anointed;" for then shall it be said, "Now is come salvation and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of His Christ." Rev. xii. 10.

Saul is called the Lord's Christ in 1 Sam. xii. 3. Samuel said before all Israel at Gilgal: "Behold, here I am: witness against me before the Lord, and before his Anointed—his Messiah—his Christ," and again (verse 5), "The Lord is witness against you, and his Anointed—his Christ—is witness this day, that ye have not found ought in my hand."

David calls Saul the Lord's Christ, in 2 Sam. xxiv. 6; "The Lord forbid that I should do this thing unto my master, the Lord's Messiah, to stretch forth mine hand against him, seeing he is the Anointed of the Lord." Also in 1 Sam. xxiv. 10; xxvi. 9, 11; and 2 Sam. i. 14, 16.

The question arises, why is Saul called the Lord's Christ? and the plain answer is to be found in Samuel's words, when he anointed Saul, 1 Sam. x. 1: "Is it not because the Lord hath anointed thee to be captain over his inheritance?"

Saul waged war against the Philistines, and when the time for assembling his forces had come, and Samuel had not come, Saul offered a burnt offering. Immediately upon this Samuel came and said, 1 Sam. xiii. 13, "Thou hast done foolishly: thou hast not kept the commandment of the Lord thy God, which he commanded thee: for now would the Lord have established thy kingdom upon Israel for ever. But now thy kingdom shall not continue: the Lord hath sought him a man after his own heart, and the Lord hath commanded him to be captain over his people, because thou hast not kept that which the Lord commanded thee." Here the Kingship or Captainsy over God's people is declared to be transferred from Saul to another man.

In 1 Sam. x. 1, Samuel says he anoints Saul to be captain over the Lord's inheritance, and in chap. xv. 1, 17, he expressly calls the anointing him King over Israel. This, then, is the original idea of God's Christ, his Anointed, his Messiah. It is "the King over Israel."

In 1 Sam. xv., we have an account of Saul's rejection from being King over Israel, and in the succeeding chapter it is recorded that the Lord sent Samuel to Bethlehem to anoint one of Jesse's sons to be king in his room. When Eliab stood before him, he said, "Surely the Lord's Christ is before him," but God said No. One after another of Jesse's sons passed before Samuel, till last of all David was brought from the sheep, and God said, Arise, anoint him, for this is he." After this David is called the Lord's Christ, in 2 Sam. xix. 21. In 2 Sam. xxii. 51 he says,—

> The Lord is the tower of salvation, for his King:
> And showeth mercy to his Messiah,
> Unto David and his seed for evermore.

And in the last words of David he claims to himself the same title:—

> David, the son of Jesse, said:
> And the man who was raised up on high,
> The Anointed (the Christ), of the God of Jacob,
> And the sweet psalmist of Israel. (2 Sam. xxiii. 1.)

We might here survey the numerous glowing words of God, which tell Israel at all times to look forward to the coming of one of the lineage of David who should bear the same high title, "the Anointed of the God of Jacob," "Messiah, the Prince," "Christ, the King of Israel," to whom should be fulfilled the promises of Hannah's song and the second Psalm. But we cannot get space for this high theme, and must therefore pass on at once to the birth of Jesus, in the City of David, a Savior, who is Christ the Lord! This is he of whom the prophets have spoken! "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end," Luke i. 32, 33. This is the Lord's Christ, Luke ii. 26.

What had David and Saul in common with Jesus that all three should be called by the same glorious title? This, and nothing else but this.—Saul was, and David was, and Jesus was, and still and ever is, the Anointed of the Lord to be King over Israel.

Instructed and led of heaven, the wise men of the east sought out and worshipped Jesus, the King of the Jews, Matt. ii. They asked Herod, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" Herod demanded of the scribes "where the Christ should be born," and the scribes answered from the prophets, "the Governor of God's people Israel shall be born in Bethlehem." Here the King of the Jews, the Christ, the Governor of God's people Israel, are used as of precisely the same meaning. And so, as assuredly as he was born in Bethlehem, according to the plain prediction of the prophet, it becomes us to believe, according to the same Scripture, that he is the Governor that shall rule over Israel, or, in other words, that he is the Christ, the King of the Jews. You may search the whole Scriptures through and through, backwards and forwards, and you can get no other meaning there for the title "the Christ," than the Captain, the Governor, the King of Israel.

When Jesus appeared the Jews were looking for the Christ. They mused in their hearts whether John were the Christ or not, and enquired, in view of this, "Who art thou?" John answered, "I am not the Christ, but he it is who cometh after me," Luke iii. John i. The disciples entertained the same idea of the office and work of the Christ as their fellow-countrymen. They believe that he would subdue Israel unto himself, rule and defend Israel, and restrain and conquer all his and Israel's enemies, and that "the Messiah abideth for ever" John xii. 34. It is a mistake to say that they were looking for a "temporal prince." They were looking for a King who should abide for ever. But it was a King over Israel they were looking for, as they were bound to do by all the prophets whom God has sent since Saul was made the Lord's Christ.

When Peter confessed to Jesus saying, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," he just meant the same thing—that he was that King of the Jews who would deliver them out of the hand of all their enemies, and reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth even for ever, exactly and literally as the prophets foretold. This is admitted on all hands to be Peter's meaning at the time.

As the two disciples were going to Emmaus, they said, "We trusted it had been he who should have redeemed Israel" Luke xxiv. 21; and immediately before his ascension, after he had taught them forty days about the kingdom, the disciples collectively ask, "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Acts i. 6. Till this time they maintain the firm faith that the kingdom is to be restored to Israel, that Israel is to be redeemed, and that it is Jesus who is to do it; and the origin and basis of their faith is that his Father who is in heaven has revealed that he is the Christ. Matt. xvi. 17; and that all the prophets bear witness that the Christ—the Anointed for the throne of David and kingdom of Israel—is to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and restore the preserved Israel, and be a light to the Gentiles, and God's salvation unto the end of the earth, Is. xlix., and that

> "The King who reigns in Salem's towers > Shall all the world command."

And so far as the Scriptures testify, the disciples never let go a particle of this faith; on the contrary, they always held that Jesus is exalted a Prince and a Savior, to grant repentance unto Israel and the remission of their sins, Acts v. 31; and they continually waited for the Hope of Israel—the hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers of Israel, unto which the twelve tribes instantly serving God day and night hope to come. Acts xxvi. 6, 7.

There is no question of the Israelitish character of Peter's ideas when he confessed that Jesus is the Christ, and there is as little room for question that Peter was in the right, for "Flesh and blood had not revealed it unto him, but the Father who is in heaven," Matt. xvi 17. Upon this rock the church of Christ is built; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against either the rock or the church. He is the Christ—the Messiah—the Anointed for the throne of David—the ruler over the house of Jacob for ever.

That he as the Christ is the King of the Jews, is the good confession Jesus witnessed before Pontius Pilate, 1 Tim. vi. 13; and sealed with his blood. It came about as follows. The high priest asked, "Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed, and he said I am; and ye shall see me as the Son of man, Dan. vii., sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven," Mark xiv. 61, 62. They delivered him prisoner to Pilate, saying that he maketh himself Christ, a King—the King of the Jews. Luke xxiii. 1-3. Pilate puts the question guilty or not guilty to Jesus, in these words, "Art thou the King of the Jews? And he answering, said unto him, Thou sayest it." Mark xv. 2. For this confession he was sentenced to suffer the accursed death of the cross, and as it was the custom to write on the cross the cause why crucifixion took place, Pilate wrote on it, in three languages, "This is Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews."

The Jews said, "He is not our King. We have no King but Cæsar." They had actually brought him to Pilate with this as his accusation, "He says he is the King of the Jews." Is he the King of the Jews, aye or no, Reader? Do you say with his accusers that he is not the King of the Jews, or do you with the disciples confess that he is the Christ, the Son of the living God? and do you therefore look for him as the redeemer and everlasting ruler of Israel, who shall also possess the heathen for his inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession? When his enemies denied that he was the Christ, the Son of the Blessed, they just denied that he was this King of the Jews—this was all they meant—and because they did not believe this, they perished in their sins. John viii. 24. When his disciples confessed that he is the Christ, they just confessed and meant to confess that he is this King of the Jews; and to as many as received him he gave power to become the Sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. Thus, if Jesus as the Christ be not the King of the Jews, his enemies were condemned for denying a falsehood, and his disciples were saved for believing it. Such a conclusion is plainly erroneous, and to get free from it we are shut up to confess that Jesus as the Christ is the promised everlasting King of Israel.

It is true that he has suffered the accursed death of the cross, that both Jews and Gentiles combined to put to death the Prince of life; but shall that make God unfaithful, who has promised that "the government shall be upon his shoulder," and that "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever?" Nor from it: "The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this." Isa. ix. 6, 7. He was put to death and laid in the tomb; but it was not possible that he could be holden of death. And so, as the apostle Peter says on Pentecost, "He was raised up to sit on the throne of David," Acts ii. 29, 30: therefore the promise that he shall sit on that throne, Luke i. 32, is more surely confirmed by his resurrection from the dead. He has indeed ascended to the right hand of God; but that is no bar in the way of God fulfilling his promise to give him David's throne and the kingdom of Israel and dominion over the nations upon earth, for, is he not reserved in heaven, till the times of restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began? Acts iii. 21. And do not the holy prophets speak of the resurrection of the scattered Israel, and of the raising again of the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and the building it again as in the days of old? Amos ix. 11. And does not James at the great congregation in Jerusalem, desire that this is to be done at the return of the Lord? Acts xv. 16. And does not Paul declare that all Israel shall be saved when the Redeemer shall come out of Zion and turn away ungodliness from Jacob? Rom. ix. 26. And do not all the prophets agree with Paul in this, that the whole creation which was subjected on account of the sin of one—the first Adam—is to be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God on account of the righteousness of one, the second Adam, when he comes as the Lord from heaven, and appears the first-born among the manifested sons of God." Rom. viii. 19-23.

It may seem to some men a small matter whether Jesus is the Christ the King of the Jews or not. They may be quite satisfied that he is King of kings and Lord of lords, and that all things shall be put under him. But if he is not the King of the Jews, he is not the King of kings and Lord of lords. If he can be proved to be King of kings and Lord of lords, then, by an hundred times this amount of proof can he be proved to be the everlasting Ruler of Israel,—that he shall reign upon David's throne for ever, and exercise dominion over the heathen unto the ends of the earth. But that can not be regarded as a small matter, that cost our Lord his life, but it is by this small matter that God tests whether we will believe Him or not; and however we may flatter and deceive ourselves and our fellow men, we may be quite sure he will not allow unbelief of this testing truth to pass unnoticed and unchallenged because we ascribe to Jesus what we may suppose (rightly or wrongly) to be an higher honor.

Lastly on this head, I remark, that Peter's confession that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, refers back to God's promise to David 2 Sam. vii., and 1 Chron. xviii. When Israel is planted, never to be moved any more, then David's Son is to reign over them according to that promise, and this Son is marked out from those other sons of David who have reigned for a time over Israel by this mark, "I will be his Father, saith God, and he shall be my Son," and "thine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee" (i. e., in thy presence.) Jesus of Nazareth is the everlasting Son of David, because he is the Son of the living God, and he shall reign most gloriously for ever on the throne of David, after David is raised up in the path of life, to be gladdened in the presence of him who is his Son and his Lord; and to believe this is to believe that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ, the Son of the living God,—one of "the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ" which was preached for salvation in all the world.

"I trust to my readers to keep this always in mind, otherwise they will fail to understand what follows, and many of the Holy Scriptures.

"In this we have a remarkable case of God testifying things that be not, as though they were" (Rom. iv. 17), for at the time Samuel spoke those words, David had not received the command to govern God's people; in fact, he was not yet born.

El Mahdi, the Mohammedan False Prophet.

One of the most conspicuous and interesting characters before the world at the present time, is Mohammed Achmet, better known as El Mahdi, "The Prophet." The name of this strange, fanatical man is on the lips of millions, and his fame has gone out to the ends of the earth. We will probably hear more of him, whichever way the war Soudan may terminate. Perhaps his downfall may be swifter than his rising. It is but about four years since we began to hear the vague and startling rumors about the new prophet, and successor of Mohammed, that has appeared in the Soudan.

El Mahdi is described as a man about forty years old—tall and slim, with dark olive complexion, muscular arms, heart pleming, eyes long and sparkling, short black hair, and long black beard, running Arab fashion, down to a point. His clothing consists of a long cotton tunic, modern sandals, and a turban folded many times about the head. In conversation he is rather reticent, giving his commands in short, quick sentences. In battle he exhibits the wildest enthusiasm. Dongola, on the Nile, is noted as the place of his birth. In early life he was apprenticed to an uncle, from whom he ran away because he received a (probably well-deserved) flogging. At Khartoum he entered the school of a celebrated Dervish, devoting much time to the Koran. In 1870, he was ordained a sheik, and at once turned himself into a Mohammedan monk.

For eight years of his life (1870-1878) El Mahdi's abode was a cave or pit, dug with his own hands, on an island in the White Nile. Here he led a life of great devotion, spending his whole time in meditation, fastings, burning incense, engaging in long prayers, and quoting long passages from the Koran. Sometimes for hours together he would repeat one of the names of God, until at last, completely exhausted, he would fall to the ground. His fame and reputation for sanctity soon spread far and wide. Every year he was visited by thousands, who left princely gifts in the mouth of the cave for the saintly dervish. Thus he soon became wealthy, as well as famous for holiness. In 1873 he had a convenient revelation from Allah to leave his cave and liberty to marry an unlimited number of wives. With an eye to business, he chose his helpmeets from the most wealthy and influential families in the land.

In May, 1881, Achmet proclaimed himself the "Mahdi" (the Guide or the Messiah). He announced it as his mission to reform and restore the Moslem faith, to preach universal equality, and a "community of goods," and to fight against all who opposed him, whether Moslems, Christians, Jews or Pagans. He is often called by his followers "The Prince of the Faith." He is greatly devoted to his religion, and is constantly murmuring prayers, counting beads, and receiving revelations. While his war is to a great extent religious, yet there is a political element in it. The cry of "Soudan for the Soudanese" is often heard in his army, referring to the control Egypt has over the land. For sixty years the Soudan has been ruled by Egyptian governors, controlled by Egyptian troops, and fortified with Egyptian garrisons.

El Mahdi bases his claim as Prophet on several different pleas. 1st. He has come at the specified time. It is a Moslem saying that the Jews had the morning, the Christians the noon, and the Mohammedans the afternoon of the world. But they say the afternoon is nearly gone and the sunset is at hand. According to ancient traditions, and universal expectation, we are living in the last days of earth. Millions on millions of the followers of Islam are now looking for the end of the world. And in these last days the Mahdi is to appear. He is to come, according to Moslem prophecy, at a time when there is no "Caliph." As the Soudan Prophet rejects the claim of the Sultan of Turkey to the Caliphate, he assumes there is no Caliph now, hence the prophecy must refer to the present time. 2d. As another claim, El Mahdi bears on his face three vertical marks, which are taken to indicate his prophetical office.

3d. El Mahdi claims a remarkable resemblance to Mohammed. He is of the same nationality, assumes to be of the same family, and even bears the same name. Mohammed's arms were of different length, and his eyes of different colors, and, strange to say, El Mahdi's right arm is longer than his left, and his eyes are not of the same color. Like Mohammed, El Mahdi is a preacher, and sways the multitude by his fervent sermons. Like Mohammed, the prophet of Soudan is a soldier, and is trying to found an empire by force of arms. Like the great founder of Islam, El Mahdi inspires his followers with the promise that death on the battle-field is a sure passport to a high place in Paradise. Both the first and the last prophet had a lowly origin; both were ignorant, scarcely knowing how to read or write; both spent a long time in solitude before their advent as prophets; both were compelled to flee for life in the early part of their "mission;" and both pretended to receive revelations from Heaven.

From the very first the would-be Prophet has had a remarkably successful career. His followers have increased a thousand-fold more rapidly than those of the first Mohammed. From up and down the Blue and White Nile, and from far out on the African plains, sheiks with their tribes, and priests with their congregations, have crowded to his standard. Hundreds of villages espoused his cause and one stronghold after another has surrendered to his arms. Over and over again has he defeated the troops sent against him. Eighteen months ago an Egyptian army of ten thousand men, led by Hicks Pasha, an English General, was entirely annihilated by the forces of the Prophet. So complete was the extermination, and so terrible the butchery, that it is said not a soldier nor officer, of the whole ten thousand, escaped death. After the fearful three days fight was over, El Mahdi, going over the battle-field, plunged his spear into the corpses, saying: "It is I, I the Prophet, who destroyed the heretics." And now at last after a siege of many weary months, Khartoum has fallen, and the standard of the Mahdi floats over the capital of the Soudan. Millions have mourned the sad fate of General Gordon, its brave defender, fallen by treachery, when his rescuers were almost in sight. By this last success it is said that 15,000 Remington rifles fell into the hands of the Prophet's soldiers.

The prestige of these successes has enhanced the claim of the False Prophet. His wild, fierce, desperate Arab hordes make terrible soldiers. Armed with spears, swords and rifles, and nerved by religious fanaticism, they dash on their foes with fearful impetuosity, and fight like tigers." They can march under a burning sun, and sleep on the hot sands, that would be death to an English soldier. They know the caravan routes over the deserts and the rocky passes over the mountains, the oases and the wells as no other army can know them.

By the proclamations of the False Prophet, and of the chiefs, we learn the Mahdi's plan. He means to sweep the Egyptians from the Soudan, then hopes to drive the "infidel dogs" and Turks from Egypt. After this, marching on to Mecca, he says he is to be anointed successor to Mohammed. Finally, overcoming the Sultan, he will be proclaimed the true "Caliph" of the Moslem world. But the Prophet will find that war in Soudan and war in Egypt are two very different things. Arabi Pasha, in his exile at Ceylon, can give the Mahdi a little experience in the line of meeting a disciplined army in a regular pitched battle. And he will find it still more difficult to cross the Red Sea, while English iron-clads patrol those waters. Many have prophesied a general uprising of the one hundred and seventy-five millions of Mohammedans in the Moslem world. But we have little fear of that. The Grand Chief of Mecca and the Sultan Caliph of Constantinople have both denounced El Mahdi as an "impostor," and the authorities of Cairo, Jerusalem and Damascus regard him as an outlaw. And even in the Soudan a formidable rival to the False Prophet has appeared, gathering around him many deserters from the Mahdi's army. What the end will be who can tell? If the British Lion is called away from Egypt to have a struggle with the Russian Bear, there will be fearful times in the old "Land of the Pharaohs."—Ralph W. Brown, in Witness.

A TREASURED BIBLE.

The old chained Bible of Canterbury Cathedral, which has for so many years been carefully preserved in the cathedral library, is now undergoing renovation. Dean Payne Smith and the Bishop of Dover have replaced it in its original position upon what is known as Cranmer's desk in the north-east aisle of the cathedral. The book is one of large size and considerable weight; and would appear to have undergone very rough usage, probably at the time of the Rebellion. A careful examination shows that the cover must have been torn off, the strength of at least three men having been, it is thought, necessary to have wrenched asunder the five thongs with which it was fastened. It is one of those known as the second edition or Cranmer's Bible, and contains two very fine engravings, one of the Earl of Leicester, and the other of Lord Burleigh. The former portrait was very much obliterated, but the old paper and lines have been restored with great care and success. The clasps and chain fastening have also been torn from the volume.

Editor Restitution:

Please to say through THE RESTITUTION that if there are any of the preaching brethren passing through this place, or within reach, I should be pleased if they would call. I have been here over four years, and have not heard a gospel sermon in that time and I am getting homesick to see or hear some of the one faith. This is a place of about 4,000 inhabitants, the different churches are represented, but I don't hear any gospel preached. Oh, what darkness there is in the churches. There are several here who seem to be favorably inclined to the truths as taught in the Bible. I have the promise of the use of the Baptist meeting house.

Things are looking in the east, as well as in our own land, as if the King would soon come to take unto himself his great power and reign.

Soon may it be. Your brother in Christ, J. B. LEWE.

Conference Notices.

The Quarterly Meeting of the Church of God will (D. V.) be held in a grove near Brother J. J. Spaid's residence, Hampshire County, Va., on Friday before the fourth Sunday of June, 1885, lasting over Sunday, and preparatory to the Annual Meeting of the Church, to be held at House of the Brethren, at Winchester, Va., of which timely notice will be given.

Bro. W. H. Way, late of Baltimore, will be present, and it is to be hoped other visiting brethren also. All lovers of the truth respectfully invited.

We need the money due us. If your subscription has expired please send us the money to renew soon.

OUR June meeting at Antioch was held according to appointment. The attendance on Sunday was very large. Brother B. Woodward, from Michigan, did most of the preaching, in the social meeting Sunday morning many brethren and sisters took part, and like other gatherings in the past at Old Antioch this meeting will long be remembered.

THREE numbers of The Berean Quarterly, have come to hand. No. 1, for January, contains "An Open Letter to the Editor of The Congregationalist." No. 2, A reply to Professor Shedd on "The Certainty of Endless Punishment," and No. 3, A reply to Prof. John Green on "Life and Death in the New Testament." These are all written by J. H. Pettingell, author of "The Unspeakable Gift," "The Life Everlasting," and other able works on Conditional Immortality, which is a sufficient recommendation of these numbers. The terms for this quarterly serial are 50 cts. a year. Address, I. C. Welcome, Yarmouth, Me.

THE long article on our fourth page "A Pen Picture of the Glories of the Kingdom Ago," by Robert Roberts, Editor of The Christadelphian, will, as we think, be perused with more than ordinary interest by all our readers. No doubt the glowing picture comes short of what the blessed reality will be when the glorious restitution shall have been effected, still, if as good as portrayed by the talented writer, it will be a very good country to go to. The piece is a reprint of a tract kindly sent by Brother S. T. Blessing, Galveston, Texas. Those tracts may be ordered at the rate of five for ten cents, or seventy-five for one dollar, at this office.

MILLWOOD, Ind., June 6, 1885.
To the brethren in Conference assembled at Antioch, Marshall Co., Ind.

Dearly Beloved.—I write this to express my desire of meeting with you in your social meetings and enjoy with you the happy associations of the same; but my state of health will not permit of me being with you. But though I cannot be present with you, my prayer to God is that you may have a good time once more. And I trust that you may be mutually edified and strengthened together, and so be encouraged to continue faithfully to the end.

It seems to me that our Lord must soon come to gather his elect ones, and to assign to each his or her portion in the kingdom. Then dear ones, let us strive to be ready when the Master calls, to answer, with joy, to the call.

But oh, how my listlessness, and unworthiness reflects on my mind, wherever I take a retrospective view of my past life. Seeing how little I have done for the benefit of my Master's cause, and how much of my time has been spent in vain! How often I am ready to cry out with one of old: O, Lord, what am I, that thou shouldst be mindful of me? Or, what is my worthiness, that thou shouldst at all remember me? Oh! Dear brethren and sisters, remember me, and pray for me, that my faith fail not; and that I may be able to stand in the great day of the Lord. We have no preaching here now. And, oh! how the people are groping along in darkness, with no one to hold up the lamp of life to them. Can not some one give us a call here, and once more raise the light to this benighted people?

But lest I weary your patience I will close; wishing you a good meeting, and a glorious happy conference.

JOSEPH HESSIMORE.

[As the above did not reach us in time to be read to our brethren and sisters at the Antioch meeting we give it a place in THE RESTITUTION to be read by all who peruse our paper.—ED. RESTITUTION.]

CITY OF MEXICO, June 14.—A tremendous waterspout broke a few miles above the town of Paso de Cuarenta, twenty miles from Lagos City. The flood was great and sudden, and practically annihilated Cuarenta. Thus far 170 bodies have been recovered. Many bodies were washed several miles down the valley, and are being discovered in fields below town. Search is going on. Paso de Cuarenta had 800 inhabitants before the flood.

In the country surrounding Salinas, Mex., a cyclone recently caused great damage to crops. Forty-five houses were demolished in the immediate track of the cyclone.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

THE IMAGE-COLOSSUS. DANIEL II.

In the second chapter of Daniel we have a view of the four great Empires of the world. These are called Universal, and they give us a very clear idea of where we stand to-day in relation to events of the greatest moment.

The great Image seen in dream by Nebuchadnezzar, and reproduced to Daniel in Divine vision, exhibited the four great Empires that were to precede the time when the saints of the Most High shall possess the Kingdom or government of this world, in conjunction with their glorious Head, and reign forever, even forever and ever.

Now, by viewing this Image, and Daniel's exposition and interpretation of its signification, we know very nearly where we stand to-day. He said to King Nebuchadnezzar, These four Empires represented by the Image begin with you. "Thou art this head of gold." Then after him arose that denoted by the breast and arms of silver. Then a third kingdom of brass, having rule over all the earth. Finally, the fourth and last, an iron kingdom, subduing all things and breaking to pieces every other kingdom.

This Image was of four different metals, and he tells us particularly what part of the Image denoted each particular kingdom. The first, the head. The second, his breast and arms. The third, his belly and thighs. The fourth, his legs of iron, and feet part of clay. Now, there is no diversity of opinion among Christians about these four Empires. It is one of the few things about which all Christendom is agreed. Nebuchadnezzar's Empire was the first: "Thou art this head of gold." This was 600 years before the birth of Christ. This Empire stood until Cyrus deflected the current of the Euphrates, marshed his army in the bed of the river, passed under the great two-leaved gates of the mighty city of Babylon, surprised the carousing, drunken Belshazzar and his licentious court, slew them all, captured the city, and put an end to the first great Empire. This occurred in 535 before Christ.

From this period dates the rise of the second great Empire, the Medo-Persian or silver kingdom. This flourished under nine successive kings: Cyrus, Cambyses, Darius, Xerxes, Artaxerxes, etc., until the time of Artaxerxes the 3d, at which period Alexander the Great hurled his Grecian Phalanx, like the mighty smiting of a thunderbolt, against this second Empire, shivered it to atoms and erected upon its ruins his own colossal Empire. This is the third great universal Kingdom, and dates from the year 330 before the Christian Era.

This third Empire flourished about 310 years. Then the hitherto invincible Grecian Phalanx was ground to powder beneath the martial tread of the iron heel of Rome's mightier all-conquering Legions. This is the portion of the Image designated by the iron legs and feet part of iron and part of clay. This is the fourth and last great Empire the world will ever see of this description. "The fullness of the Gentiles" will be accomplished under this Empire. After the unity is broken, it is divided or flattened out, so to speak, like the feet and toes of a human being. We know perfectly well when the Roman Empire lost its unity, or was broken up into what we now see the present nations of Europe to be, viz.: the toll of the old Roman Empire. They are now, and have been ever since that event, constantly about ten in number, all of them pervaded by the old Roman civilization, literature, language and jurisprudence. How exactly the prophet has delineated the character and relations, the one to the other, of the present existing nations of Europe, "Whereas, then sawest the feet and toes part of potter's clay and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided, but there shall be in it the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay. And as the toes of the feet were part of iron and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong and partly broken."

The Western Roman Empire ended in A. D. 476, and the Eastern in 1453. We have, therefore, been already living under that period denoted by the feet and toes of the Image not less than 425 years. But the little stone which was cut out of the mountain without hands was to smite this Image upon his feet.

Tell me, therefore, you skeptical historians, are you not standing to-day fearfully near to the period and the locality where that little stone shall smite the Image? "For in the days of these kings" (the kings ruling over the ten kingdoms into which the Image's feet terminate) "shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and it shall break them in pieces, and it shall stand forever."

We know, therefore, absolutely, by our position in history, that we are now living in the period denoted by the extremities of the feet of the Image. If Daniel's prophecy is true (and we know that it is so), then history itself tells us very near where our present position is—just where the little stone must strike this great Image.

This little stone cannot possibly be the Church, as is often supposed, for the Church has been in existence longer than any of these Empires, Roman, Grecian, Persian, or Babylonian. But this kingdom which is to be set up by the God of Heaven is initiated "in the days of these kings"—that is, in the days of the kings ruling over the broken and divided condition of the old Roman Empire, as it exists like the feet and toes of a human being. Daniel says that the little stone shall "smite the Image on its feet." The great Image is one. It is a unit throughout, though composed of different metals, denoting all phases of worldly, godless, Gentile Empire, and when it is at an end, broken by this little stone, and destroyed, the God of Heaven shall set up a kingdom which shall stand forever. And this shall be done just when Time has carried us to that period denoted by the last extremities of this Image. And even history itself tells us that we are just there now.

Christ's word in Matt. xxiv. indicate that we are just there now. The 1260 years during which Jerusalem was given to be trodden down under the feet of the Gentiles, proclaims that we are just there now. The 1260 years of the existence of the great Anti-Christian power, now so manifestly waning, groans like a distant muttering thunder, that we are just there now. The attitude of the "Fourth Beast," as described in the 7th chapter of Daniel, admonishes us that we are just there now. The form of godliness without the power, so strikingly exhibited every where throughout the whole of Christendom, proclaims in thunder tones that we are just there now. The certain and unmistakable marks of the "Last Time," given by Peter, by Paul, by Jude, and by John, both in the Apocalypse and in the Epistles, all proclaim to us that we are just there now. The last chapter of Daniel, in which he says, "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased," besides many other indications therein contained, announce to us that we are just there now.

The measurements in the Grand Egyptian Pyramid, if they be rightly understood, seem mathematically to demonstrate that we are just there now—just where this little stone may be certainly expected to smite that great Image, and make it like chaff of the summer threshing floor, while the little stone itself shall become a great mountain, and fill the whole earth. The manifestly very near close of 6,000 years of the world's human history, and the consequent commencement of her seventh thousand, or Sabbatical Millennium, joyfully proclaims in trumpet tones that we are just stepping upon its glorious threshold now. The glowing description given by Paul, in the 8th of Romans, of the actual condition of the whole creation as groaning in pain and longing to be delivered, is a certain indication that it shall be delivered; and he declares that it shall be brought into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

It is almost unnecessary to mention to Christian readers that the little stone spoken of by Daniel in this chapter is the kingdom which the God of Heaven establishes in the world, which shall break in pieces all world powers, grind them to powder, fill the whole earth with his glory, and exist forever, even forever and ever.

"The Times of the Gentiles," the seven years of years, or 2,520 years, "the Seven times," the double of the time, times, and half a time, the double of the 42 months, or of the 1,260 years, prominently figuring in Daniel, in the Apocalypse, and elsewhere, all admonish us that we are just upon the very threshold of the most stirring and tremendous events of the people of God and for the whole world.

The wonderful Astronomical Cycles, so marvelously hit upon by Daniel and John, hundreds of years in advance of all the world's Astronomers, foreshadow to us the most tremendous physical changes, commotions, and probable convulsions, as they culminate in the most remarkable manner in the very near future. For let us remember that it is the same Great Creator that has given the Times and Seasons and Laws and Periods to all these vast rolling heavenly bodies, who has likewise appointed and adjusted the Spiritual Dispensations to harmonize, interpenetrate, and "work together" with these lofty physical Cycles, which so amaze us, as we are able more and more, though it be little by little, to mount up to grasp these mighty Astronomical Periods, one rising above and beyond the other, more and more mighty and glorious, until our earthly Mathematics break down and succumb, and is all inadequate to frame and embrace the vast, the tremendous equation of this Spiritual-Physical harmony. Oh, for that loftier, that heavenly Calculus which mounts up and soars so immeasurably above that of Newton, of Leibnitz, or of any of their followers, that Celestial Calculus which Daniel and John employed, when, with one single stroke, they have caused to blaze before our eyes the 1,290, the 1,260, the 1,335 the 1,010, and the 2,520 years.

These periods are now known (but were not before or otherwise known save as suggested by these Heavenly Mathematicians, Daniel and John) to be the most perfect Astronomical Cycles ever yet discovered. They are certainly the most mightily burdened with Spiritual results for all the ages, both past and to come. The converging rays of light from this source also forewarn the Astronomer of the most stirring physical phenomena in the very near future. They may be of one character or of another—his experience is too limited, his field of vision too narrow for him, with any degree of certainty, to say just what may be expected. Nor it requires the aid of that Higher Mathematics, that Loftier Equation, to embrace the portending events of the near, the mighty, the wonderful future. We know that Daniel and John were not let to strike these marvelous key-notes in Astronomy accidentally, and without having events in the direct line of their thought of a Spiritual and Higher character, to develop and set forth in array every way corresponding in their magnitude and importance to the lofty region in which they were moving. These two men were not professional Astronomers, and yet they knew more than them all.

Is it possible to overlook the manifest fact, that we are now for more than four hundred years living in the period denoted by the feet and toes of Nebuchadnezzar's great four-metaled Image? We must, therefore, be far out toward the toes. But the little stone cut out of the mountain—Messiah's Kingdom—will strike this Image on the feet. "In the days of these kings will the God of Heaven set up a kingdom that shall never be destroyed, and the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom forever." This kingdom is Christ's glorious Millennial reign over all the earth. There is no Millennium taught in the Scriptures till Christ comes. This is the grand purpose for which he comes out from "within the vail."—Prof. J. C. Randolph.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY BIBLES. LATIN.

BASLE AND NUREMBERG.

In making a record of Fifteenth Century Latin Bibles we have journeyed from Mentz to Strasburg, Cologne, and Rome, where Sweynheym and Pannartz printed their Bible in 1471. There is a Latin Bible by Schoeffer, Mentz, 1472, which very closely resembles that of 1462, but these Bibles are not identical. Since writing the article we mentioned this Mentz Bible of 1462, the first Bible with a date, I see that an imperfect copy of it on vellum was sold a few days ago in London, at the sale of the Osterley Park Library, for £320, about $1,600.

Switzerland was the next country after Italy to receive printing from Germany. Doberis received it about the same time, and the third place in this respect is given to it by Mr. Hawkins. But the next Bibles on record are attributed to Basle. In the Caxton Exhibition there were three different folio Latin Bibles, which may be called the Rodt and Richel Bibles, as they are attributed to Berthold Rodt and Bernard Richel, a Basle, Switzerland. They are all without names or dates, their origin being inferred from the type used and other indications. In the catalogue they are entered as follows:

The one with 436 leaves, Rodt and Richel, 1471 (?).
" " " 437 " Rodt, 1471 (?).
" " " 463 " Richel, 1471 (?).

The Rodt and Richel Bible on exhibition in the Lenox Library corresponds with the first of these, having 438 leaves in the two volumes.

Berthold Rodt, called also Berthold Ruppel de Hanau, was a witness in the famous law suit between Gutenberg and Fust at Mentz. When these Bibles were printed at Basle, the city was not yet a member of the Swiss Confederation, but being Swiss in spirit, and about to be so in fact, it is considered as belonging to that country in this connection.

Very erroneous notions prevail as to the money value of Old Bibles, because large prices are paid for certain rare and interesting copies. It is only less remarkable to observe how small a price is asked for other examples of very early printing. In the catalogue of a London bookseller recently received, I find a Latin Bible, entered as "In the types of Rivit and Richel, Basle, about 1470, 2 vols, folio, very fine copy, tall and clean, half vellum, with ties, £5, 15s, 6d." It ought to modify the expectations of those who have old books to sell, to know that beautiful and perfect volumes, Bibles and other books, genuine incunabuli, printed by famous printers during the first half century of printing, can be bought in London and New York for ten, twenty or thirty dollars each, and often for much less.

This city has the distinction of being the first city to produce the Bible in octavo, that is, a Bible of the size of the vast majority of books now printed for ordinary reading. This Bible has consequently been called the first edition of the "poor man's Bible." The "poor man" in this connection must mean the poor scholar, for poor men in that day could not read in their own tongue, much less in Latin. It was doubtless very welcome to poor students and ecclesiastics. This Latin Bible was printed by John Froben de Hammelburck, at Basle, 1491, and is one of his first books, if not the first. The splendidly bound and illuminated copy of this Bible in the Bodleian Library does not look like a "poor man's Bible." Froben printed a quarto Latin Bible in 1495 and a folio Latin Bible in 1498.

His name is inseparably associated with that of Erasmus, the greatest scholar and man of letters of his day. Soon after the beginning of the next century Erasmus settled permanently in Basle and became Froben's editor and literary adviser. This association resulted in making Basle for the time the great literary centre of Europe, and Froben's press the most celebrated. His New Testament in Greek and Latin, and other works belong to the sixteenth century and will be considered later.

In this same year there was also a folio Latin Bible by Nicolas Keslers, Basle, 1491.

After 1474 great Bibles were multiplied in both Latin and German. Among the most famous of these were the Coburger Bibles, the first of which was the folio Latin Bible, printed by Anthony Coburger at Nuremberg, 1475. He is said to have had twenty-four presses and one hundred men employed daily, besides furnishing work to printers at Basle, Lyons, and other places. Coburger printed thirteen editions of the Bible in twenty-six years, twelve in Latin and one in German, all large and handsome folios. Copies of his Latin Bibles were in the Caxton Exhibition dated 1475, 1477, 1478, 1479, 1480. His Latin Bibles of 1477 and 1480 are on exhibition at the Lenox Library. The broad margins of the 1477 copy are completely covered with commentaries, emendations and interlineations in the handwriting of Philip Melanethon.

Some weeks ago I saw a copy of the 1477 Coburger Bible for sale at the rooms of the Presbyterian Board of Publication in Philadelphia, where it had been placed by the owner, who was waiting for an offer. This same Bible is thus entered in a bookseller's catalogue recently sent to me from London.

Biblia Sacri Latina, 2 vols. in 1, folio: in the original oak boards, covered with stamped pigskin, very rare, 1480. In regia civitate, Nuraberga, per Antonium Coburger, 1477.

A remarkably fine, clean and large copy, a number of the leaves having red uncut edges. The end papers bear the watermarks of the Bull's Head and the Arms of John the Fearless. Laing's sold in 1870 for £84, and the present copy contains a bookseller's description of one priced £100.

Nuremberg produced another great folio Latin Bible in the same year in which Coburger printed his first edition. It was printed by A. Frisner and J. Sensenschmit, Nuremberg, 1475. Another folio Bible is attributed to Jo. Sensenschmit, Nuremberg, 1476.

The first book printed at Nuremberg with a date is Franciscus de Retza's Comestiorium Vitiorum, 1470, and is attributed to Sensenschmit and Keffer. Sensenschmit is said to have been a man of wealth, who associated himself with Henry Keffer, a workman of Gutenberg, who appeared as a witness in the law suit with Fust. Keffer is supposed to have established himself as a printer in Nuremberg as early as 1469. Mr. Hawkins attributes to Keffer and Sensenschmit a book printed at Nuremberg in 1470, according to its colophon. But Nuremberg became famous in the history of printing from the extraordinary enterprise of Coburger. He was the publisher of that large and entertaining volume, The Nuremberg Chronicle, 1493, containing more that two thousand impressions from woodcuts, being a summary of history, geography and general information, edited or compiled by Hartman Schedel. It is a royal folio and is sold for more or less than $200, according to the size and condition of the copy. I have before me a London bookseller's catalogue which offers a very tall copy, 18¼ inches by 12¾ beautifully bound in morocco super extra, by Riviere, for £35. It is said that there were seventeen master type printers and many blockbook printers in Nuremberg before 1500. It was just at this period, at the end of the 15th and the beginning of the 16th century, that Albert Durer began to make his art, himself and Nuremberg illustrious. It was the Bible which made him, as well as Wicklif, a morning star of the reformation.

In another article I shall mention some of the Fifteenth Century Latin Bibles of Venice and other cities.—Wendell Prime, D. D., in N. Y. Observer.

SLEEP THEY NOT WELL?

Sleep they not well, the sainted dead?
For sorrow they have gone forever!
Your Father roused his children dear,
Before the tempest gathered near,
And bursts in thunders loud and drear.

Healed are the hearts that fully bled,
The mourning souls are comforted,
And attached the fount of every tear:
Sleep they not well?

And if, amid the Lord appear,
Earth, like a mother pressing near
To watch beside the loved one's bed,
Wraps her dark mantle round their head,
And shelters them from pain and fear,
Sleep they not well?

THE PRICELESS TREASURE.

The priceless treasure which Christ has given to all the needy and suffering is peace—peace that shall flow like a river; peace that shall multiply like the waves of the sea; peace that shall increase without end. Whosoever possesses this treasure in the heart, possesses what no earthly power can command, no earthly riches can buy, no earthly calamity can depreciate or destroy. He can be content in great want, he can be calm in the midst of agitation, he can be fearless in danger, he can rejoice in affliction, he can triumph over death. Take to your heart the gift of peace with God, and you will be rich in possessions which the world can neither give nor take away. Fire may burn your house, commercial disaster may destroy your property, competition may shut you out of all occupation, the world may have nothing for you but hard work and poor pay, still, with God's peace in your heart, you are rich in all that best satisfies the soul. You have a friend that will never fail you in time of need.

PRAYER AS A TONIC.

You have hoped that, as an answer to your prayer for strength, strength would be given, and this was a just and right hope; but, oh! so much more than this is your portion: to know what prayer itself is the spiritual tonic, and that the very continuance in the earnest communion with God is the thing that will enrich your life, renew your energy, and lift you up to a vantage-ground in respect to your temptations, by toning up the very spirit and temper of your mind. So that your struggle is no more the base, half-yielding struggle it was, but a sublime conquest, accomplished through the power of this Divine Presence in which you are abiding. We have spoken of friendship; it is a noble illustration. You have been very weak in spirit, very impoverished, and making miserable work with life. This friend came suddenly in upon you, perhaps for a few moments only, but bright, earnest, pure—radiating a life power that changed you, that warmed you, purified you, toned you, that lifted you to victory. This is like prayer in its fullest sense. You are praying, indeed most exactly for a special thing; but now you have learned that the special thing is not the only blessing. There is one much nearer, even the act of praying for it. Prayer is not crying out to a distant God, but holy continuance in the presence of the Divine Friend. Prayer is drinking from the fountain of strength, eating of the manna of life.

"We kneel, how weak! we rise, how full of power!"

What you need, what I need is far more of this kind of prayer. In prayer we close our eyes through involuntary reverence, that we may not be distracted by surrounding objects; but often we have closed also the eyes of the soul, and asked blindly, as if the thing we asked were the only blessing, and the act nothing—nothing but the means. But when we pray aright the soul's eyes are open, and fastened on the face of God, and our hands are folded in his, and prayer is companionship.—Charles Cuthbert Hall.

Conference Report.

The third quarterly meeting of the Church of God in the Abrahamic Faith in Michigan was held according to previous appointment, in the Jameson School-house, Fisher, with a splendid attendance and the best interest. The texts used through the meetings were as follows: Matt. xxiv. 37; I Cor. xv. 46; Isa. lxii. 5; Rev. xix. 7, Luke xxi. 36. Bro. Smith of Otsego, done the greater part of the speaking, assisted by brethren Hosner and Winchester. At the close of the last meeting we gave an invitation to any one who wished to be numbered with the Lord's children to manifest it. One brother responded to the call. Thank God for that, and may he grant us the privilege of being enjoying, at stated intervals, such seasons of love and true fellowship as we all enjoyed at this little feast-gathering.

Conference Report.

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, in Indiana, met as announced at Antioch, Marshall Co., Friday, June 12, 1885, and continued over Sunday.

Quite a large number of friends from different parts of Indiana, and some from Michigan were in attendance, and one more of Brother Chaplin's "Sunny Spots" in the journey of life is marked on the notch-stick of time.

The speaking was done by B. W. Woodward, S. A. Chaplin, J. L. Wince, and R. Carter, and I have only to state that old Antioch was crowded, yes, packed full of attentive listeners, and all will know the speaking was good.

We were disappointed at not seeing the friends from Rensselaer, but we learn they were detained on account of the death of Father Dwiggins, as he was familiarly called, the father of R. S. Dwiggins.

The next Conference, three months hence, will probably be held at Argos, notice will be given in due time.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Sec.

News Items.

LONDON, June 11.—The British resident of Cashmere reports that earthquake shocks of great severity continue. The towns of Baramulla and Sopur have been utterly ruined and 400 persons killed. There has also been great loss of life in adjacent villages. Many cattle and sheep have been killed.

MADRID, June 11.—Cholera in Spain is spreading, and the increase in number of cases now daily reported is causing great alarm among the people. In Valencia there have been 45 new cases reported since yesterday. Castellano de la Plank announces 18 deaths, and there are 60 suspected cases in the province of Murcia. The Spanish Government has prohibited cholera inoculation in districts where the disease has not appeared.

TIEN TSIN, June 15.—The Emperor of China has ratified the "Pakin treaty," or treaty of peace with France.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 15.—Anarchy prevails in Crete.

SIMLA, June 15.—Serious public disturbances have taken place in the Kingdom of Bootan. The causes of this popular outbreak are not made known.

Earthquake shocks continue throughout the Vale of Cashmere. There are from eight to ten shocks daily. The violence of the shocks is, however, abating.

MADRID, June 15.—The cholera is spreading westward along the Mediterranean. There are several cases now in Teruel, Alicante and Cartagena. Twelve thousand persons left Madrid during the past week, in consequence of the cholera "scare." The exodus is increasing.

At Castellon, yesterday, 114 new cases of cholera and 25 deaths was reported, and at Cartagena 214 new cases and 60 deaths were reported. The people have become very much alarmed.

Additional advices from the destructive series of storms in various parts of Iowa, Friday evening, report much loss of property and some fatalities by wind and flood. A tornado swept through Southern Nebraska last evening, leaving many wrecked and damaged buildings in its path.

The church of God at Cleveland, O., will hold meetings at 10:30 a. m. every Sunday (D. V.) in Bland and Keffer's Block, Room 36, 3745 Ontario Street, Corner of Keffer, north of Central Market. Seats free. Brethren from abroad of like faith and all searchers after truth are welcome

CHRIST DWELLING IN ME.

Oh Christ! I need to say,
Help me to come to thee;
Just as I say it now,
When Christ hath come to me:

Dost presume in my soul,
Where thou dost find thy rest?
Why seek thee in the skies,
Where dwelling in my breast?

The mother seeks her child,
When wayward it doth roam:
But seeking hath no place
When it is safe at home.

His voice is on my lips:
His ears are in mine eye,
His home is in my soul:
He cannot be more nigh.

Oh, let me be not now
A stranger that dwells apart:
But more as life with life
He dwells within my heart.

Summing up of the Times.—In the Midst of the Years Make Known.

"O Lord revive thy work in the midst of the years. In the midst of the years make known, in wrath remember mercy," was the prophetic prayer of the prophet.

In a former article, the seventy weeks, it was shown that "when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman—made under the law to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." And as God establishes his truths by two or more witnesses, we find that through the prophets Habakkuk and Daniel, it was, that in the "fulness of time" when the Son of God, the rightful heir to the throne of David should come to his inheritance, was revealed, made known to his people. We can easily understand why in the days of Herod the king, the wise men came from the east to Jerusalem, inquiring, "where is he that is born King of the Jews, for we saw his star in the east and have come to worship him." The time of the birth of the Virgin's Son of the house of David, the only begotten Son of God, had arrived. The Magi understood the Scriptures rightly of the time, and come from the far east to worship him, and offer their gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh. They did not wait until he had reached manhood's estate, at the fulness of time for his entering Jerusalem as the King of Israel, but they came at his birth, the time that he was born king of the Jews. The Magi were not deluded men, neither were they myths of imagination. They were wise men that built their faith on the Rock—Christ Jesus, the Son of God, being the chief corner-stone. They believed when they saw the infant Jesus, that which Jesus declared later when speaking of himself, "A greater than Solomon is here." Another wise man of whom Jesus exclaimed when he saw him approaching, "Behold an Israelite indeed in whom there is no guile," after a few minutes conversation with our Lord was convinced of his claims, and believingly asserted "Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel."

Yes, Jesus of Nazareth, the only begotten Son of God, was in the fulness of time born of woman, came in the midst of the years to make known, in wrath remembered mercy, and revived his work. Came as the King of the Jews, "He came unto his own, and his own received him not." When they had rejected him he solemnly declared of them, "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites; wherefore ye witness to yourselves that ye are the sons of them that slew the prophets. Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers." Then sorrowfully said, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto her, how often would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, ye shall not see me henceforth till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Luke tells us that "when he drew nigh, he saw the city, and wept over it saying, O that thou hadst known in this day, even thou, the things which belong unto peace—but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee when thine enemies shall cast up a palisade about thee, and compass thee round and keep thee in on every side, and shall dash thee to the ground, and thy children within thee, and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another, because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation."

"O Lord revive thy work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known, in wrath remember mercy." Many centuries before the prophet's prayer was uttered the Lord of Hosts reigned over the twelve tribes of Israel, and appointed judges to judge Israel. While Samuel was judge over the chosen people of God the nation became dissatisfied, and wanted an earthly king to reign over them, like unto other nations. Samuel was greatly distressed and told them the result of such a change. "Nevertheless the people refused to obey the voice of Samuel, and they said nay, but we will have a king over us, that we may also be like all the nations, and that our king may judge us and go out before us and fight our battles. Samuel went to the Lord with the matter. And the Lord said unto Samuel, Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee, for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them. Hearken unto their voice and make them a king." And when Samuel saw Saul, the Lord said unto him "Behold the man whom I spake to thee of, this same shall reign over my people." 1 Samuel viii. ix. "Unto 2300 days then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." The midst of 2300 years equals 1150 years, or the half of 2300. So just 1150 years after Israel's rejection of the Lord of Hosts from reigning over them, was Jesus pressing his claim as Jerusalem as the true heir to the throne of David, and the king of Israel, for a greater than Solomon is here. "I am the Son of God," and the Son of David. 513 years and six months, did kings reign over the tribe of Judah. 606 years B. C. was Judah carried away captive. Thirty years and six months more equals 1150 years or the midst of the years 2300—when Jesus was there in Jerusalem to revive the work, in wrath remembered mercy. His claim, I am the Son of God, was just and true, and in accordance with the fulfillment of both law and prophecy. Nathaniel believed, his disciples believed, and the poorer class of the people heard him gladly, and believed in his claims, to being the Son of God and the Son of David, the true King of Israel. But the Scribes, the Pharisees, and the rulers in Jerusalem—mark the religious people that serve in the temple, those rejected him, and "would not have this man to reign over them." Then he exclaimed, "Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers." In the midst of the years it was that "Messiah the Prince came to finish the transgression and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy." This was all accomplished in that wonderful seventieth week of years. But forty years was adjudged by the Lord to bear the iniquity of Judah, and forty years added to A. D. 30, reach to A. D. 70, when in the fulness of time, Jerusalem doomed for her iniquity, was destroyed, and there was not one stone left standing upon another of her magnificent temple, the pride and glory of Jerusalem. Says Jesus, This evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign, but there shall no sign be given it but the sign of Jonah the prophet." The burden of Jonah's prophecy was, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be destroyed." But that evil generation did not comprehend the sign as to themselves. (Just here we note in connection with Ezekiel's sign to Judah he gave one to Israel. "Thou shalt bear the iniquity of Israel 390 days, I have appointed thee a day for a year." Just 390 years after the division of the kingdom in Rhehoboam's days, all Israel was in captivity in B. C., 606, fulfilling the signs given them by the prophet.)

It is shown how in due time according to the word spoken through the prophets, Jerusalem was destroyed, her temple annihilated. Daniel in his prophecy of the work of Messiah the Prince continues: "After three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself." When Jesus rose from the dead his disciples expectantly inquire, Lord dost thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel? And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or seasons which the Father hath appointed within his own authority, but ye shall receive power when the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of earth." But as it is written, Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, for the Spirit revealeth all things, yea the deep things of God." The sword of the Spirit is the word of God. "For nothing is hid that shall not be made manifest, nor anything secret that shall not be made known and come to light."

"After" 62 weeks, which equals 434 years, more added to A. D. 70 reaches to 504 A. D. The teachings of Messiah was cut off, an apostate church had obliterated the truth, of the gospel, and her sway was onward to dominant power, which in fifty years more she had successfully accomplished, and "set up" the spiritual "abomination of desolation" of which Jesus said when speaking of it, "Let him that readeth understand." Time, times and a half were given her of 1260 years, which united to 504 reach 1764, when times must give place to seasons. But concerning the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that aught be written unto you," see also 2 Thess. ii. 1-12. "And now ye know that which restraineth to the end that he may be revealed in his own season. "Time" must end ere "season" comes. And then shall be revealed the lawless one whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the breath of his mouth, and bring to naught by the manifestation of his presence—even he whose coming is according to the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceit of unrighteousness, for them that are perishing, because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved. And for this cause God sendeth them a working of error that they should believe a lie, that they all might be judged who believed not the truth but had pleasure in unrighteousness." When the times was ended the restraining influence of the church was taken away, and the teaching of Voltaire, the lawless infidel, made itself felt throughout the Catholic world, and it culminated in the terrible reign of terror in 1793, while in the Protestant world at the same time was the subtle, pernicious, and Antichristian doctrine of the New Hypothesis, entering and leading captive the Israel of God. "For such men are false prophets, deceitful workers, fashioning themselves into disciples of Christ. And no marvel, for even Satan fashioneth himself into an angel of light. It is no great thing, therefore, if his ministers also fashion themselves as ministers of righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works." 2 Cor. xi. 13-15. "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump," says Paul, and Jesus in his parable tells of the woman (the church) that took a little leaven and hid in three measures of meal until the whole was leavened. One hundred and thirty-three years elapsed ere all of Israel was carried into captivity. If we allow this period or season for the consummation of the work of lawlessness by the wicked one in the nations, and in the churches, we find it reaches to, and includes the year 1897, the full time of Jerusalem's double warfare for iniquity and sin and the end of Gentile times. The fulness of time is here reached of the working and lying wonders of Satan and "the end of these wonders" is fulfilled. For these are days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled." We find that the "mystery of iniquity"—the apostasy, cut off the Messiah and developed into Papacy. Papacy developed into infidelity. (I do not believe the word is the underlying principle of infidelity.)

Infidelity will be overcome by Jesus coming to reign on the earth, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of Christ, and we shall reign with him a thousand years, O, blessed faith and glorious hope, that is ours who believe the all things written in the word of God.

Herein are times and seasons, which summed up extend through 3017 years, and is the last and fourth repetition to Israel from Moses of "seven times" for their sins.

The sign to an evil and adulterous generation is the sign of Jonah the prophet, for as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the sea monster, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. (Compare Matthew xii. 40, with xvi. 4; and Luke xi. 29.) To this generation of Jews, Jonah was a sign to the Ninevites, to an evil generation he was as a sign of three days and nights.

"Forget not this one thing, beloved, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years—and a thousand years as one day."

What Would Jesus Do?

"Leaving us an example, that we should follow his steps," 1 Pet. ii. 22.

When the morning paints the skies,
And the birds their songs renew,
Let me from my slumbers rise,
Saying, What would Jesus do?

Counting mercies from above
Day by day my pathway strew;
Is it much to bless thy love
Father, what would Jesus do?

When I ply my daily task,
And the record of toil pursue,
Let me often brightly ask,
What, my soul, would Jesus do?

Would the foe my heart beguile,
While in sin thoughts and words untrue;
Let me to his subtlest wile
Answer, What would Jesus do?

When the clouds of sorrow hide
Mirth and sunshine from my view,
Let me clinging to thy side,
Ponder, What would Jesus do?

Only let thy love, O God,
Fill my spirit through and through;
Trusting what my Savior trod,
Breathing, I can would Jesus do!

Self-Sacrifice.

The tower door of St. Leonard's church, Bridgenorth, Eng., was left open; and two young boys wandering in were tempted to mount up into the upper part, and scramble from beam to beam.

All at once a joist gave way. The beam on which they were standing became displaced. The elder had just time to grasp it when falling; while the younger, slipping over his body, caught hold of his comrade's legs.

In this fearful position the poor lads hung, vainly crying for help; for no one was near.

At length, the boy clinging to the beam became exhausted. He could no longer support the double weight. He called out to the lad below that they were both done for.

"Could you save yourself if I were to loose you?" replied the little lad.

"I think I could," returned the older.

"Then good-bye, and God bless you!" cried the little fellow, loosening his hold.

Another second he was dashed to pieces on the stone floor below; but his companion clambering to a place of safety.

This a true story. The record of it is preserved in the Bodleian Library at Oxford. Some tales of heroism excite one to pour forth one's admiration, one's approbation, in many words; but this one strikes us dumb, this little fellow unwittingly had followed so closely in the steps of his most beloved Master.

Lincoln's Mother.

Though President Lincoln's mother died when he was ten years of age, yet she lived long enough to inspire him with a noble ambition, to train him to love truth and justice, and to reverence God and goodness. Years after, when men were looking to him as one who might become a national leader, he said:—

"All that I am, or hope to be, I owe to my mother."

The wife of a pioneer, she shared the privations and hardships of life in a wilderness. The struggle for existence familiarized her not only with the distaff and the spinning-wheel, but with the ax, the hoe, and the rifle. She helped her husband to clear and break up the soil, to kill wild turkeys, as well as deer and bears, whose flesh she cooked, and whose skins she dressed and made into clothes. When she married, her husband could neither read nor write, but she found time, toilsome as was her life, to teach both rudiments to him and to her son. She was unusually intelligent and refined for a pioneer's wife. Her taste and love of beauty made her log-house an exceptional home in the wilderness, where the people were rugged and lived so far apart that they could hardly see the smoke from each other's cabins.

When Abraham Lincoln had gained the people's ear, men noticed that he scarcely made a speech or wrote a State paper in which there was not an illustration or a quotation from the Bible. "Abe Lincoln," his friends used to say, "is more familiar with the Bible than most ministers." He had been thoroughly instructed in it by his mother. It was the one book always found in the pioneer's cabin; and to it she being a woman of deep religious feeling, turned for sympathy and refreshment. Out of it she taught her boy to spell and read, and with its poetry, histories, and principles, she so familiarized him that they always influenced his subsequent life. She was fond of books, and read all she could beg or borrow from the pioneers far and near. Her boy early imbibed his mother's passion for books. Here and there could be found in the cabins of Indiana's "Pilgrim's Progress," Weems' "Life of Washington," and "Burns' Poems." Young Abe read these over and over again, until he knew them as he knew the alphabet.

When his mother died, the son had already received a good education—he held the truth, he loved justice, he reverenced God, he respected good men, he was fond of reading, he could swing the ax, shoot the rifle, and take more than a boy's part in subduing the wilderness and building up a home. She selected the place for her burial. It was under a majestic sycamore, on the top of a forest-covered hill that stretched above her log-cabin home. No clergyman could be found to bury her, and the neighbors took part in the simple, solemn rites. Months after, a preacher, who had been written to, traveled hundreds of miles through the forest to preach a funeral sermon under the sycamore.

The boy of ten years never forgot those sad, plain services, nor the mother whose memory they honored. She ever remained to him the incarnation of tenderness, love, self-sacrifice, and devotion to duty. When he was President he honored her training by the thought, "She placed me here!"—Youth's Companion.

My Dear Nephew:

Again I find myself absorbed in this most pleasing of all duties. The study of the blessed Word which alone is able to make us wise unto salvation. In replying to my last you express a fear, that my view of Christ's death, and the eliminating causes that led him to it—seem to detract from the glory and dignity that you had always conceded that wondrous sacrifice. To this I reply, that you certainly misapprehended my view, as you could not from it, gather such a thought. Far be it from me, in any way, to cast a shadow on or lessen the glory that for ever must environ that illustrious name "Immanuel." On the contrary my view gives to him a name and place, and office that never could be claimed by another. It leaves him alone on the plane of the flesh although partaking of our nature, in that he was made under the law of death, to which he bowed, and from which state he was brought back by the Father.

Man by wilful disobedience placed himself at enmity with his Creator; and from that condition there was no possibility of escape but by that means, and through the source—Jehovah in his infinite wisdom designed; and that source was his only begotten Son, and now your question "How does the death of Christ effect a reconciliation of mankind to God?" Secret things belong to God only but that which he hath revealed is for our benefit.

It is revealed to us that none but Christ Jesus developed a sinless character. He was ever pure, and in him was no sin.... He was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners. In this as in every other phase of character he stood alone, and did not stand as either a substitute or a representative of our soul. He stood as the one mediator between God and man, as the only means whereby disloyal man might become loyal, and thus be reconciled to God.

Observe my dear Nephew, that it never was in the power of law to either give life immortal; by continuing life as first given, neither was it in the power of law to bring back from the death state. We have no reason to believe that even if Adam in his first state, had not partaken of the tree of knowledge of good and evil that he would have attained to immortality, had he not partaken also of the tree of life. The tree of life is represented as the only source of perpetual existence. And we read, as to man's present position in regard to life, if there had been a law given that could have give life; then verily righteousness was by the law. Gal. iii. 21. But as there was no law given that should either continue in life, or bring back from the death state those who should enter there. God designed another source than the law, and that source, was, and is Christ Jesus.

He became the substitute for the tree of life when it was removed, and he represented that tree as the embodiment of immortality and he will continue to do so, until under the benign influence of his universal sovereignty the tree of life is again restored in the Edenic state; with all other blessings of that coming age of glory.

By his perfect life, and sacrificial death, he wrought out to completion God's wondrous purpose in providing for us a means whereby we may become reconciled to God. And the only means whereby this reconciliation over can be effected to our salvation is to accept the record that God has given of his Son. It is only by believing in the name (and that name is Immanuel God with us) of the only begotten Son of God that we can attain unto life immortal. The Scriptures teach us that "the blood is the life thereof." Therefore we see that through, or on account of this perfect life of Jesus, we have forgiveness of sins, we become reconciled to God.

By faith in his name we enter the baptismal waters; and through faith in the sufficiency or perfection of his blood, or life, our sins are washed away, and we rise to walk with him in newness of life. Having attained a perfect and spotless life, on which there was no blemish, as our Great High Priest he entered the most holy place, and there ratified the everlasting covenant, or the covenant of everlasting life revealed to us through his life, death, and resurrection. Amen.

Again my dear Nephew, you suggest the possibility of mistake in assuming that human beings are left perfectly free agents, to work out their own destiny in either direction, and you quote Rom. viii., to show that the race was by Adam's fall left at "enmity against God," "not subject to the law of God neither indeed can be." And then you ask—"Where is the freedom of the human will?" To this I reply, read the entire chapter and you will see it all right and clear as noon-day. Paul is here speaking of two conditions of the human mind. One of which he represents as spiritual and leading into life in Christ. The other condition is to be carnally minded which is death, or leads to death, and while in this condition man is not subject to the law of God neither can be. But it by no means teaches that he is compelled to remain in that condition.

You are correct in saying that—after Adam's transgression his condition was reversed, and that he was "condemned—dead, lost." He was, as standing on the plane of his primal, creation, and all hope of life through the means at first made known was cut off forever as I have previously shown to you in these letters. But another hope of life from the death state which he had voluntarily entered was presented to him in the "Seed of the woman"—the Christ, the substituted, and representative of the tree of life, and as Adam was free to choose life, to the tree of life before he fell, so are his sons and daughters at liberty now to accept of life in Christ.

You say a dead body cannot re-produce itself, very true of physical death but you cannot so closely apply this analogy to spiritual conditions. Perfect analogy is always confined to things of the same kind or nature.

Yes, truly "Jesus came to seek and to save the lost," and when he came he said "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." This shows that they were at liberty to come, else his words would be but mockery, and he never trifled with his stupendous work of redemption. He said too, O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto thee. How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not. This shows perfect freedom of will, life and death are set before us, and we are perfectly free to chose which we will.

The gift of eternal life is of God, most assuredly for we read that, God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life. From this we see that those who do not believe, will not have life.

Let us not grow weary in searching for truth for in due time we shall reap if we faint not.

FAITH.

Lord, I believe: help thou mine unbelief.
Mark ix. 24.

Lord, teach me how to trust in Thee,
And how, less unbelieving be!
To place on thine maternal care
Those most I love—and leave them there.

For Faith is not a mere belief
That Thou canst aid in bitter grief:
It, too, for greater blessings, Lord,
Are promised in thy gracious Word.

'Tis grasping Thee, when all are gone;
'Tis staying Thee, when sight is dimm'd
'Tis following on Thine every word,
Supported there, and free from fears.

'Tis calm assurance, "All is well!"
Though how, or where, I cannot tell:
'Tis hearkening when no voice I hear;
'Tis smiling, though I weep and fear.

'Tis living in Thy cheerful light,
Whereby I breathe, by day or night;
'Tis drinking in Thy tender love,
From all below and all above.

'Tis deep amazement, yet grateful song;
'Tis utter weakness, yet no shrinking;
'Tis clean'sing in Thy blood each stain:
And knowing pardon, peace again.

'Tis putting on the garment white,
Preparing for the blissful sight
Of the refulgent, glorious feast,
Which saints will share, from great to least.

'Tis stepping light, though hards and sore:
'Tis hating sin yet more and more:
'Tis fighting hard, and yet at rest:
'Tis broken-hearted, and yet blest!

'Tis loving with unuttered love,
Though hard the heart, and slow to move!
'Tis laboring, though it's all so small,
I count it laboring not at all.

'Tis telling Thee my every thought:
'Tis finding all I ever sought;
'Tis treading on through life's lone walk,
In sweet companionship and talk.

'Tis joining in the angel's praise,
'Tis rising high my eager gaze,
Where all is boundless love and peace,
And freedom marks the soul's release.

'Tis hurrying to a glorious end:
'Tis pressing towards my heaven Friend;
'Tis meeting Him—come, Jesus, come!
'Tis folding tent, and reaching home!

My Father! I must wear Thee
For faith like this, 'tis as bought for me:
Beneath the cross I seek, I claim
This living faith in Jesus' name!

A PEN-PICTURE OF THE GLORIES OF THE KINGDOM AGE.

While it is freely admitted that a fertile imagination supplies the details, this picture is by no means a fanciful sketch; but has its foundations in the sure word of prophecy, and will be realized in due time.

Come to the land of promise in the day of its glory—not as you are now—burdened with infirmity, with a nature easily fatigued, eye soon dimmed, power soon spent, and having but scant capacity to raise to the surrounding sublimities of the universe, or to apprehend sympathetically the subtle glories of the Spirit. Come, when it has been said to you, as to Joshua, "Take away the filthy garments from him.... I will clothe thee with a change of raiment." Come when mortality no longer weighs you to the earth, and when you know the experience of having "the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." Come when you can step lightly and joyously abroad upon the earth in the freedom and power of spirit nature; when the cup of life mantles full and sparkling to the brim; when the strong, penetrating eye looks out of a glad heart to behold in all things the unfolded love, and wisdom, and glory of God: when every thought is a joy, every movement a pleasure: every breath the inspiration of an ecstasy that can only find its expression in praise to him that sits upon the throne.

In such a state, any land, any configuration of country, would furnish suitable sphere. But God puts his jewels in fit settings. He hath called and glorified his children, and "He hath prepared for them a city"—a city having foundations, whose builder and maker is God. Abraham sojourned in the geographical area of this city—in the land of promise—as in a strange country; but that is now long past. Forsaken and hated for ages, the land is now, "an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations." God has fulfilled his promise, and has made "her wilderness like Eden—her desert like the garden of the Lord." "Come and see." We go: We stand on the hills of Judea, now no longer stern and wild. They are clad with glorious vegetation, of every form and fragrance. The hills are clothed with pleasant woods, and the valleys rejoice in the smiling beauties of a rich cultivation—field and vineyard, fruits and flowers, corn and wine. The air is clear and warm, and laden with pleasant odor. The view on all sides is magnificent and far-reaching. No smoke obscures the landscape, no fog on the valleys, no mist on the hills. The sky is cloudless, and the sun pours his healing flood of light and warmth from the ocean. The whirr of [illegible] the musical song of birds, the bleating of flocks, the lowing of cattle, the [illegible] fills the air. Near are pleasant homesteads, standing each in its own plot or portion, neatly trimmed, well kept. Below in the valley, towns and hamlets, peopled by righteous Israelites, are visible in the far receding distance, clearly visible in this transparent atmosphere, in which everything appears nearer than it is. Jerusalem is faintly visible on our northern horizon.

Let us hasten in that direction. This is only the profane portion of the land—a sense of peace and righteousness and plenty, truly, but not comparable to "the holy portion of the land." Come to the holy portion of the land—the land given as an oblation to the Lord. We approach Jerusalem, or rather Yahweh Shammah (the new name of the new city) from the south. It stands in the southernmost section of the holy portion. It is an immense city, built upon a plan of perfect symmetry and proportion. It is very unlike the huddled clusters of human dwellings called towns with which we have been familiar. The general plan is an exact square, marked by an outer wall. The square is of enormous extent, measuring nine miles through at any point. The wall is of bright stone, and adorned with towers at regular distances. We only see the south wall. It stretches away right and left further than any eye can follow. It is over nine miles long on the south side, and on all the other sides the same. There are lofty ornamental gates at regular distances. We descend from the overlooking hill and enter by one of these gates. It would be pleasant to stay and inspect the city; but we want to hurry on to the temple, and, therefore we must be content with a rapid passage through the central thoroughfare, which we have chosen, to the northern exit by one of the gates in the north wall. Just before passing on, we notice at a glance the stately character of the city. The streets are straight and wide, and shaded with trees, and at regular distances, open out into squares and crescents. The houses are not high, and stand apart in gardens except where here and there palatial blocks of buildings spring from the midst of the squares. We ask what these are, and are informed that they are reception-houses, for the accommodation of the visitors who daily come from all parts. There is an immense number of the people in the city, but the city is so vast that they do not appear numerous, except at certain points, as we pass along. Their aspect is such as we never saw in any city crowd before—so quiet, yet so cheerful; so brightly interested in everything, yet so orderly and respectful: so apparently cultured and well-to-do, yet having none of the fussiness and arrogance usually associated with prosperity. All are well clad, cleanly, intelligent, good, righteous, and happy,—no boisterous merrymaking—no foolish banter—no unseemly utterance. They are a few of the happy subjects of the kingdom of God. They have come from all parts of the earth to do homage to the King—wives and families with them, leaving behind them prosperous homesteads and occupations, to which they will return in a little season.

We hasten in a straight line along our nine-mile avenue of picturesque and happy human habitation—(we could take the help of an electric tram, if we liked: for such has been provided in all the thoroughfares, for the use of the people: but, in our new state, we prefer to walk: we can quicken our pace, when we want to do so, by gliding along in the air, skimming the surface of the road, as we dreamt of in our mortal days). We get out at the gate of Judah: opposite which, after crossing an ornamental common of about half a mile in breadth that runs round the entire city, there opens a magnificent highway running in a straight line in a northern direction towards the temple which is distant about thirty miles. Along this highway we proceed. It is very broad and of noble aspect. A line of tall trees in a broad band of turf divides it in the centre, and again in the middle of each side, giving four spacious roadways running side by side, lined with trees and bordered with turf and flowers. The country on each side is laid out in fields and estates, which are in the occupation of the Levites of the second order who serve the temple, whose lands, however, are accessible to visitors at all times. The country becomes more magnificent at every step. At certain points, side roads strike off and return in many turnings and windings to the main road again. These side roads lead through woody solitudes of paradisaic beauty. Let us go down one of these roads and behold the fulfilment of the promise that Yahweh would make the [illegible] of his feet glorious. All is quiet [illegible] there is no darkness, but only a sense of bracing relief in the shade they give: no witness on the ground, but only a pleasant soft hardness. There are no walls or fences at the side of the road. You may walk straight off the road on to velvet turf under the trees and among the shrubs. Here you find all kinds of fruit growing,—all kinds of flowers in bloom. You are at liberty to put forth your hand and do as you will. How delicious the odor everywhere! We stroll and stroll. We come upon a break in the wood where the ground descends into a gorge. We see clear out to the side of an opposite hill. A brook murmurs past where we stand. The two streams over all. What a delicious hush! What a sense of joy in every fibre of being. We enjoy the scene for a few moments when hark! there is a burst of music! It comes rolling towards us from the top of the opposite hill. What is it? A brass band? No! we have heard the last of them. It is a mixture of voices and instruments—stringed instruments. How beautiful! The voices so musical, so full and correct—the instruments so adapted to the voices. There must be at least a hundred people. It is beautiful! it is ravishing! We stand and listen. We do not know the piece, yet it seems familiar. It is a psalm of praise to God. We hear it out, and then all falls quiet. We would like to make the acquaintance of the company. We direct our steps towards the top of the hill. Going along an upward leading path, we see people coming towards us. As we go forwd, we approach them. They look enquiringly and smilingly at us: we look enquiringly and smilingly at them. We are not in the least embarrassed: only we were silent. Then the foremost of their company—a fresh elderly man of noble look—so majestic, yet so friendly—with such exquisite tenderness of manner, and yet such kingliness of carriage, broke the silence. He spoke in Hebrew, but we seemed to understand it quite naturally. He said, "You are friends, I know." We said, "We are." "Friends of God?" "Praise God, yes." "You have come in a happy time—the time to favor Zion." "Yes, it is a time we have long waited for." "So have we all. God's word is sure and has come to pass." "Whither hail ye from?" "Britain." "Oh—Britain—Tarshish—yes; the most celebrated of the isles of the Gentiles; God has made great use of her in bringing about Israel's deliverance. We have just been indulging in a psalm on the subject." "Yes, we heard you; we were greatly delighted. We should like to hear it again." "Should you? Well, there is nothing to hinder. There is an open space at the foot of the gorge where it would be convenient." We cannot express the indefinable pleasure we felt, as we walked together down the hillside towards the spot indicated. As we walked, we said, "Might we be so bold as to ask who your company are?" "They are a small band of the Lord's people, settled now in these parts, who have come out for an evening stroll. You ought to know who we are—You look as if you belonged to the Lord's people yourselves." "Well in truth, we do; and we instinctively felt that you were a company of the saints—the immortal saints. Yet we felt fain not to presume on this our first visit to this most blessed realm." "Have you been among the dead, then, my friends?" "No: we belong to the current generation. We were alive at the coming of the Lord." "Ah! you have been favored not to see corruption." "We do not feel it has been a greater favor than that enjoyed by those who, by a momentary wink as it were, escaped from the vanity of human life, as it was in the Lord's absence, into the glory revealed at his return." "Well, there is something to be said on that score. For one, I should not have liked to live all the days that divided my mortal life from the resurrection." "How long might the interval have been?" "Nigh three thousand years." "Whom may we have the honor of speaking to?" The old man (looking so young in his hoary hairs) paused. Those near him who had gathered close to us, and were eagerly enjoying our conversation, said, "Who do you think?" We looked inquiringly. "Guess?" "We cannot." "Who wrote most of the Psalms?" We bowed with unspeakable pleasure. "King David? oh happy day!" Our majestic interlocutor said, "Even so: a morning without clouds, as the Lord promised."—Arrived at the bottom of the glade, we stood together and sang the anthem we had heard them sing on the top of the hill—David leading. Oh, such voices! Oh, such blending of liquid melodies! Oh, such fervent pouring of the soul into the meaning of the words. The delight was unutterable. Preparing to resume the journey, we are asked whither bound. "The temple." "Not to-night?" "We had thought of it." "Put it off till to-morrow. Come with us. We spend the night at Abraham's palace. There we shall introduce you to a number of friends." The proposal is overpoweringly good. But we are not embarrassed. We would have been so in the old mortal. In the new man to which we have attained, we are simply at home in a perfect satisfaction. We express our pure pleasure at the prospect, and start off with our company, numbering about two hundred persons—men and women—all so lovely to look at and so bright to talk to. We find they comprise Jonathan, Asaph, Nathan, Uriah, Gath-sheba, and a number who were David's intimates in the days of his flesh. Others we did not know. We ascertained that they formed David's personal circle in the new order of things. Abraham's palace to which we were bent was some distance off. It stood within seven miles of the temple, and we were still twenty miles away. There was need for speed, as the softening light warned us of the approach of the shades of evening. So, at a signal from our leader, we resorted to the angelic mode of locomotion, and by a simple act of the will, were able to propel ourselves through the air by a slight motion of the limbs at a short distance from the ground. We went at a rapid pace, but it was not at all fatiguing, and there was no sense of chill from rushing through the air. On the contrary, it was a delightful exercise. We seemed to get along like a company on very fleet bicycles, but without their violent contortions. The air was balmy: and our progress through it only seemed to give a higher sense of its exhilirating power, and bring out more distinctly the sweetness of the odors exhaling from the paradisaic vegetation clothing hill and dale. In an hour's time we arrive at Abraham's palace—a magnificent pile, standing in a wooden seclusion. He has evidently a large company at home. They were waiting us expectantly. We are announced while yet a good way off, and they all come out on the balconies and corridors in front of the spacious building, and salute us as we pass within the grounds in front. Ornamental tables are arranged for a repast. There is a pleasant mingling on the green sward—much brilliant talking and silvery laughter—every one so bright and well. Then they all sit down—about 600 people. A venerable figure rises—not bent or aged, but noble in the air of ripe maturity—hair and flowing beard of pure white: a countenance full of gravity and kindly repose, but having no sign of weakness. He calls upon every glorified son and daughter of the Lord God Almighty to give thanks to the Possessor of Heaven and earth for the overflowing bounty of his goodness in Christ Jesus. In few meet and sonorous words, he presents the offering of thanksgiving. Then the other kingly old man stands also and says, "It is a good and a pleasant thing to give thanks unto the Lord.... Let us praise the Lord!" and the whole company rise with a readiness that seemed like an elastic bound, and all eyes on David, who raises his hand to lead, they break forth in a psalm with such fervor of shout, such emphatic enunciation of words, and such beauty of musical utterance, that the more exercise seems to rouse them into a fresh glow of heavenly ardor that is normal with them all. They then sit down, and partake of grapes and various fruits. There are cooked dishes of various kinds for those who prefer. All is partaken of with perfect gastronomic gusto. There is much pleasant talk and interchange of animate glances between persons at different parts of the table. All eat heartily, but not heavily. There are no heaviness or indigestion afterwards. It is not possible. The food partaken of becomes the subject of a slow, spiritual combustion, which assimilates every atom of it to the energy of the spiritual body: and the process of this combustion is a source of pleasure to the eater. The repast finished, there is a breaking up of the company into groups, and an indiscriminate commingling, affording the opportunity of private snatches of conversation with any who may choose. In this way, we approach Abraham, who stands in the centre of the group, conversing in a deliberate, cordial, but stately manner. We listen, and do not presume to take part, though having many questions we would like to put. We know there will be plenty of time afterwards. After two hours spent in this way, we unite in another song, after which we are all shown to separate apartments for the night. We were not tired. We had no inclination to go to sleep. We felt quite as bright as mortals usually do in the morning, and a little brighter, I fancy. Still it was an acceptable change to enter a room lightly constructed, pleasant chamber, with slight and elegant furnishings to spend the night alone. There was no darkness. There was a glorious moon overhead, showing a brightness rarely visible in western countries. The chamber was lit electrically: and, in addition to this, we felt a light in ourselves that made us feel as if darkness could not be.

The night quickly passed: sometimes we paced the room in reflection: sometimes reclined on the top of an elegant couch (no need for getting under the clothes): sometimes got up and read, and sometimes sang. When morning arrived, the sun poured her golden flood in at the windows, and we were ready for a new day without any sense of fatigue such as we should have been sure to experience after such a night in mortal days. Looking out at the windows, the eye took in a noble stretch of country, lying away behind the beautiful grounds of the palace, just in front. The country descended toward the Jordan in the distance, beyond which rose a rampart of purple hills running north and south. To the right and left, in the near neighborhood of the palace, were distinctly marked spurs of the ridge on which the palace itself stood, covered with wood. It was a picture of seclusion and peace in the morning brightness and the balmy air, yet there was no loneliness. Pleasant sounds and the occasional sight of a visitor stepping out to enjoy the scene, reminded us that we were in the habitation of intelligence and love—in one of the abiding places of the Father's house now set up on earth. Descending to a great hall on the ground floor, we found a large company mustered, joyous, bright, and gay. I observed there was none of the quiet fatigue that mortals experience after and evening's social excercitation such as we had had. All were fresh and lively. Exchanging hearty greeting with those next us, we sat down and waited the progress of events, our uppermost desire being an early departure to see the temple. Shortly a psalm was proposed, in which all took part in the effective manner of the previous evening. Then the God of Abraham was addressed by Abraham, the father of us all, in simple, earnest words that took us all with him to the throne of the Eternal. Shortly after we had sat down, we were summoned to another room for the morning meal.

Out we thronged in pleasant crowds, and were conducted to a large banqueting hall, with sky-light dome roof and walls largely constructed of glass, on which vines were trained and adorned with various ornamental plants. Bright tables occupying the hall from end to end groaned under the load of all good things, interspersed with flowers. Abraham called on David, who gave thanks with a fervor that thrilled us all, and evoked a loud "Amen" from every mouth. (We asked if Isaac and Jacob were present, and were told they were not; that they had palaces of their own not a great distance away, and that though frequent visitors, they had more often to act the part of host to the numbers that came to see them from all parts. We might see them in the course of the day at the temple, as there was to be a special gathering of all the saints. "Shall we see Moses?" "Very likely; he is always prominent on such occasions." "And the prophet like unto Moses?" "We are nothing without him. In him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." We felt almost overpowered at the prospect of seeing the Lord Jesus in all is glory.) Breakfast being over, we discovered there would be no delay in getting our desire gratified. The whole company were shortly ready, and on the road that lay in the direction of the Temple, going south and west from Abraham's palace. The road lay through a mountainous district, exuberant with the choicest vegetation, and the morning air was rich with the odor of flowers. We were not long in accomplishing the distance at a moderate walk. The intercourse we enjoyed with first one and then another in that superb company would have quickly whiled away a desert journey. What was its goodness in the holy ground of Zion, whom the Lord had comforted, as it is written "He will make the wilderness like Eden, her desert like the garden of the Lord?" Truly joy and gladness were found therein—thanksgiving and the voice of melody.

At last, the temple burst upon our view, as we rounded the corner of a hill on which we stood at a considerable elevation. How shall I describe it? It was a mile off from where we stood. It looked like a square-set, symmetrical city of palaces. It was not what we have always understood by the temple: that is, it was not a building, an edifice, however large, but an immense open structure of light and airy parts, with enormous [illegible] yet all resembling one another and covering such an area that they did not look so large as they were. What we saw from where we stood was, of course, the outer wall; but it was a very different thing from what is suggested to us by a wall. It was in reality a long line of arches standing upon a solid basement, and stretched from east to west for a distance of over a mile. There must have been nearly 200 arches in the line. Between every dozen arches or so was an entrance gate, towering considerably above the arches, and at each end of the line was an enormous tower, rising a well-marked finish to the wall. We could see inside through the arches, but what we saw seemed simply like a forest of palace like structures, with a hill top shooting through the centre, and crowned with what looked like a shrine.—We advanced towards the splendid structure—the tabernacle of the Most High—the place of the soles of his feet where he dwells in the midst of the children of Israel forever. Shortly we came upon a bridgeless stream of crystal water that came flowing from under the house, and ran due east to the Dead Sea, flanked with trees along its banks. This we crossed. You have seen boys jumping a stream. It was a very different performance from this. We simply, with a graceful movement, passed gently through the air from one bank to the other. We were now near "the house," and saw of what immense size the arches were—about 120 feet high. Though open arches, they were latticed, and plants which looked like vines were trained among the lattice work. We entered by one of the gates, and found ourselves in the first court, open to the air. Here were thousands upon thousands of people who had come for the special day mentioned at the breakfast table. It struck me as peculiar that the country we had come through was so lacking of people in view of this multitude. It was explained to me that the public access to the temple was from the south only, by the highway we had traversed the day before, and that the land to the north, and east, and west, of the temple was private to those who had to do with the service of the temple. As we passed in, the people made an avenue, and bowed themselves in sincere reverence to a company of the Sons of God. Crossing the outer court (a breadth of 200 feet,) we entered a gate of the inner range of arch-building, which resembles the outer wall, but stood a little higher; passing through, we were in the inner court, of similar dimensions to the outer court (also open to the sky). Before us, about 200 feet further on, stood the temple proper—not a square building, but an immense circle of arch building, three miles in circumference. This circle of building filled the whole view from right to left, gradually diminishing with the distance. We entered this circle by the gate opposite us, and passing through the building, found ourselves inside the inner and holiest precincts of the house, viz., an immense circle nearly a mile across, open to the sky. The floor of this circle was the ground, not flat, however, but rising gradually on all sides to the centre, where there was a walled-enclosure, about 200 feet square, containing the great altar. At the time of our arrival, this interior space was nearly empty; but by-and-bye, companies like our own began to arrive from all sides of the circle. As they arrived, they entered the circle, and took up a position which apparently had been assigned before hand; for servitors, who were in charge, all round the building, escorted the new arrivals to their places. These servitors were graceful, pleasant-mannered, young men, in loose robes. (One of our company whispered to me they were angels.) As the time wore on, the arrivals became more numerous, until there was one continuous stream from all sides. There was on all hands, a pleasant hum, as of a multitude conversing.

Presently the circle was full and the inflow ceased. Quiet and order settled down. The assembly presented an imposing appearance, packed together in a picturesque and living mass far as the eye could reach. The fellow-sojourner and servant, in the joy of faith and the patience of hope through our Lord Jesus Christ.—Robert Roberts.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXIV. Read. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 24, 1885. NO. 24.

THE RESTITUTION.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR
Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the doctrine of "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

SAVING FAITH.—PART V.

"I might here go on to treat of other things concerning the name of Jesus Christ, such as his bearing the sins of the world, and making intercession for the transgressors. The angel of the Lord said to Joseph, Matt. i. 21, "call his name Jesus: for he shall save the people from their sins." But as I have brought the Messiahship into immediate contact with the Kingdom, because the two are reciprocal terms, corresponding to king and kingdom, and because the preaching about the kingdom by John the Baptist stirred up in the Israelitish mind the enquiry whether he were the Christ or the King of that kingdom, so I think it now most profitable to bring prominently into view one of "the things concerning the kingdom of God," which was declared by John the forerunner, and by the Son of God himself, viz:

THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS AT HAND.

That John and Jesus preached this is shown in the following passages:—Matt. iii. 2; iv. 17; Mark i. 14, 15. That this message demands our most cordial acceptance is proven by the fact that both the Lord's forerunner and the Lord himself preached this message. Jesus said he was sent to preach it. "I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent," Luke iv. 43. It is quite clear that the Father attached importance to this message when he sent his Son with it. And if the word spoken of old by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompence of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect this message which the Son of God was sent with from his Father in heaven? Heb. ii. But not only did Jesus preach this message himself, but first he sent twelve, and then he sent seventy other disciples, to preach the same thing, Matt. x. 7; Luke x. 9; saying, "whosoever shall not receive you nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of thy feet. Verily I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for that city." Thus the necessity of believing that the kingdom of God is at hand stands out in bold relief, attested by the greatness of the bearer of the message, and by the curse he pronounces on those who do not receive it.

If the reader has made himself familiar with the meaning of the words, "the kingdom of God," as taught in the Scriptures of the prophets, and as held by those Jews who heard the preaching of John and Jesus, he will at once acknowledge that such a kingdom has not yet come. Indeed this is felt so strongly by all parties that it is often said the kingdom of God must mean something else than what you have shown from the prophets; it must refer to something that has come long ere this time, otherwise it could not have been said to be at hand eighteen centuries ago. This has the appearance of being a very formidable objection to what has been advanced; especially as when God speaks to man he has the most perfect ability to express his meaning in language suited to the capacity of man's understanding. If God had been speaking to beings to whom a thousand years are as a day is to man, the kingdom might have been said to be at hand, although it had been one or two or three thousand years distant; but when God says to man "the kingdom of God is at hand," it is contended that its coming cannot be above a few years distant from the time when this message is delivered. I acknowledge most fully the weight of this argument; but I cannot allow that it is fair to apply it to the words "at hand," and not equally to the words "the kingdom of God." The man to whom Jesus brought the message concerning the kingdom of God, knew of but one kingdom—the kingdom (with Jerusalem as its capital, and the Son of God as its King), which is to be set up on the overthrow of the kingdoms of men, Daniel ii. 44; vii. 22, 26, 27. The disciples whom he sent to preach "the kingdom of God," knew only of that kingdom, and by their preaching they excited in the Jewish mind the expectation that David's son was to restore again the kingdom to Israel, and reign for ever and ever in Jerusalem, the city of the Great King. If the argument that when God speaks to man, he has ability, and of necessity must adopt man's language in its popular meaning, and that therefore the kingdom preached as at hand, must have come long ago; than equally cogent and powerful is the argument, that when he spoke to the Jews about the kingdom of God, he must have meant that kingdom for which they were constantly waiting and praying.

Jesus said to his disciples, "Verily I say unto you, that ye who have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel," Matt. xix. 28; and in Matt. xxv. 31, at the time when he shall sit on the throne of his glory, is said to be "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory," etc. Thus, according to the argument urged that God adapts his language to the capacity of man's understanding, he distinctly promised to the apostles thrones over Israel in the regeneration, when he maketh all things new. In this he is most surely confirming the disciples in the common popular Jewish belief concerning the kingdom. Not all the personal teaching of the Lord before his death, nor all his teaching after the resurrection, when he was seen of them forty days, speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, abated or altered one jot their expectations that the coming kingdom was that spoken of by the prophets, and was actually to be established according to their Israelitish understanding of the Scriptures.

If Jesus had said, "A kingdom of God is at hand," then he would have given no sufficient warrant for the expectation that it was the great kingdom spoken of in the writings of the prophets. But when he said "the kingdom," they could not help concluding that it was the great everlasting exceeding Kingdom of God, so often foretold, that was now at hand. If God has many kingdoms, this is his everlasting kingdom—this is his excellent kingdom—the Kingdom of God, even as while there are many sons of God, there is one—the Son of God—who excels and transcends all others.

I am not insensible to the argument that this kingdom must have been "at hand" eighteen centuries ago. I believe it was "at hand" then, for Jesus the Messenger and Son of God preached, "The kingdom of God is at hand." And not only that, but I insist that you believe that it was the kingdom of God spoken of in the prophets, and as spoken of in the prophets, that was at hand. When Jesus delivered his message, there was not the faintest indication that God meant any other kingdom. The people were therefore shut up to believe in that kingdom; and God, who chose the words that excited this faith and expectation, thereby voluntarily undertook that this faith and hope should be fulfilled.

The Jews looked for the king and the kingdom coming together, hence the cries, "Blessed is the King of Israel, that cometh in the name of the Lord," John xii. 13, and "Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord," Mark xi. 10. The Pharisees, who did not believe that he was the Christ, the King of the Jews, said, "Master, rebuke thy disciples; but he answered, I tell you if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out," Luke xix. 40. Peter, in his 2 Epistle i. 11-16, also connects the power and coming of the Lord with the entering into his everlasting kingdom; and Paul charges Timothy before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the living and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom. Thus, the Jews were not in error when they connected the coming and kingdom; but they did err, because they did not perceive that that which is called emphatically "the Coming," was to be preceded by his coming in a low and humble condition, that by the grace of God he might taste death for every man, see Matt. xix. 18; xxv. 31; etc., Isa. xl. 9, 10, comp. with Ili. 7-10; xl. 5-16, comp. with 2 Thess. ii. 8; Zech. xiv. and because they were prone to expect to attain to the kingdom, because they had Abraham to their father, and trusted in a supposed righteousness of the law.

What, then! Why is this kingdom not come, when it was declared to be at hand so many ages since? And we may ask, too, why the Lord has not come, although he was declared to be at hand so many ages since. In the first century he was as much declared to be at hand as the kingdom was, James v. 8; Phil. iv. 5. Indeed it was the acknowledged characteristic of Christians "to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from Heaven," 1 Thess. i. 9, 10. "They looked for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ," coming from Heaven, Phil. iii. 20. Jesus laid this down as a rule for his disciples, and spake often, both by parables and plainly, to illustrate and enforce their duty to "watch, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh." There are a variety of errors abroad in regard to this matter. The coming of the Lord is said to be at death; but 1 Thess. iv. 15, 17, shows it is at the resurrection. And to this agree all the Scriptures, see e. g., John xxi. 22, 23; and 1 Cor. xv. 22, 23. Same said the Lord would certainly come in 1804 or 1806, others that he will come at the end of a thousand years of blessedness. Against all such sayings, the Lord's words stand, Watch, till the Lord come; for ye know not when he will come, Mark xiii. 34, 35. The parable of the Virgins, Matt. xxv. is instructive on this point. The virgins all believed the bridegroom would come, and all thought that he might come soon; for all went forth to meet him, ver. 1. But, all slept, both wise and foolish. At last the cry went forth, Behold, the bridegroom cometh, go ye forth to meet him. And then the foolishness of the one five, and the wisdom of the other five is shown in this, that the foolish, while expecting his coming, had not thought it was possible he should delay, and therefore had taken no spare oil with them; while the wise, thinking that he might come soon, at the same time guarded against the possibility of delay, by taking oil in their vessels as well as in their lamps. So ought we to wait for the coming Lord, as for an event which may happen, we know not how soon, and which still may not happen soon, notwithstanding our earnest longings for it. In this way we are watching for the coming of the Lord at all times, still waiting for God's Son from Heaven, as the Thessalonians waited 1800 years ago. We are always waiting for him, always serving him as wise and faithful servants, and always looking and longing for the blessed hope and his glorious appearing.

Take an illustration: We are at a railway station waiting for a friend, and the telegraph has signalled that the train is "at hand." It is only a little way off. It is stopped, say at the platform a little down the line, while the tickets are being checked or taken. But still it does not come. It was at hand five minutes ago, ten minutes ago, half-an-hour ago, and it has been "at hand" all the time. Why is this? What can it be waiting for? It is waiting for the manager's orders to move on. Even so the Kingdom of God was declared to be at hand, or more exactly speaking, "to have approached," 1800 years ago, and the Son of Man was declared to be at hand (or "to have approached") 1800 years ago; but the times and the seasons which are to usher in Christ's appearing and kingdom, are reserved in God's own power, Acts i. 6; Mark xiii. 32. When God speaks the word, the times and seasons will speedily run their course, and the King and the Kingdom come. "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise (of the coming of the Lord and Savior, ver. 3) as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." 2 Peter iii. 9. Thus it appears that one cause of delay is, that they who have obtained like precious faith with the apostles, 2 Peter i. 1, and not sufficiently repented, are not such holy and godly persons as it behoves them to be, and there is reason to fear that this shortcoming arises greatly from the fact that they do not sufficiently realize that the Lord is at hand, and that it is in their power, by diligence and increasing holiness, as Peter says, to hasten the coming of the day of God, 2 Peter iii. 2, 11. Therefore unto them, as well as unto others, the gospel-word addresses itself in a loud trumpet-tone, "Repent, for the Kingdom of God is at Hand," and, at all events, it is sufficiently clear that the kingdom of God and the coming of the Lord were preached as "at hand," by our Lord and his apostles, and this, therefore, is established as one of "the things concerning the kingdom of God," which must form apart of our faith as it formed part of the faith of the early Christians.

THE WORD MIRACLE NOT SCRIPTURE.

It may seem very strange to the Christian reader of average intelligence to be told at this late day in this nineteenth century that the word miracle does not occur in the Scriptures of the Old or New Covenant. But nevertheless it is true. There are three Greek words that have been indiscriminately translated miracle in the Common Version, the first generally, the others occasionally. The words are dynamis repute, and semeion. The first is a verbal noun from dunamai, meaning "I am able." Dunamis would therefore mean literally an act of ability, or a process in which resides ability, or in the abstract ability itself, besides in our loose reasoning it is so difficult to distinguish between the act and the result of the act.

The way in which [illegible] to be translated by our English word miracle is this: The King James "translators," so-called, were rather compilers than translators, and in their work by compilation they relied very largely upon translations already made from "The Vulgate," and they themselves, owing to the lack of complete Greek manuscript texts resorted to "The Vulgate" as a textual authority. Now the Vulgate, as every one knows who has made any study of the history of the Bible, is a translation very early made into the Latin from such imperfect Greek manuscript texts as they then had, under the auspices and subject to the dictation of the Catholic Church, and as the intelligence of this apostate Church has embalmed itself in this word so translated miracle, it is not strange that it finally groveled in the dust of Papal idolatry.

Miracle is the Latin word miraculum Anglicised. That is all, and miraculum in the Latin simply means something to be wondered at. Think of the stupidity of translating a word meaning ability or intelligent power in one language by a word meaning simply wonder in another. But "to make confusion worse confounded" theology and lexicography have wrestled with the Anglicised word miracle until the average intelligence, when asked to define it "gives it up" or says it is something that happens contrary to known law, and all this too in the face of the fact that the word constantly recurs all through the Old Covenant Scriptures, from the books of Moses on, sometimes in its most primitive sense of an act of ability, whether of God or man—and at others, in the various remoter significations, one of which is "a host," or an organized body of men called an army, or of the angels as arrayed to manifest and execute God's able purpose. An understanding of this word throws light on many passages otherwise obscure. Paul, for instance, speaks of being enabled to do all things, meaning that endued with God's power, he has God's ability. His arm is no longer an arm of flesh. His pen is no longer the pen of a man, but the pen of the living God. His voice is no longer speaking Paul's word, but God's word, and this is the confident language of the man of God always. If he is a "preacher" so-called, he understands that he is a "herald" of the King, and commissioned to proclaim his message to the people unto whom this King is presently coming, not to speculate and pluck flowers of rhetoric along the King's high way. If a prophet, he understands that he is to speak from the head, the enlightened reason, that which may be unsavory and tasteless to men of the world, but the wisdom of God nevertheless, and that which hath in it the ability of God to save; to speak from the head, I repeat, and not from the heart as "the lying prophets" of Jeremiah's time did, and as lying prophets always will, proclaiming peace and safety, when, and where there is no peace, and Great destruction is yawning for such corruption and inutility. See how it yawned for them in their day, for those who were speaking and those who were hearkening to lies spoken in God's name. God says of these lying prophets by the mouth of Jeremiah the prophet, They have spoken from their heart, (which is equivalent to saying that they had spoken as they desired, as their selfish interests prompted them to speak.) I did not send them. Nor had they stood in my hypostasis (sunestaen) (state or existence, the real state of knowledge, etc.,) would they have spoken these things, and this is only another way of saying that they were not men of faith. For "faith is the hypostasis of those who hope, a conviction of realities not seen," and every act of faith is "a miracle" because it is an exemplification of God's dynamic power to change the heart and enlighten the mind of a natural man who cannot apprehend spiritual things. The reader will then understand that a so-called "miracle" is indeed something to be "wondered at," but not in ignorant and stupid amazement. For it is simply a phenomenon that illustrates the truth that "that, which is impossible with men is possible with God."

All Christ's so-called miracles, or dynamic works, are works of ability, and not works of his own ability, he takes particular pains to tell us. For he says to the unbelieving Jews, "If ye do not believe my words, believe the works", or, "believe me for the works sake." "I can do nothing of myself" (ap emautou, that is of my own intrinsic ability or dynamis power) "no man can do these works." Yes, modern apostasy says, that means that Christ was and is God himself. Then Moses was God and other prophets were God. For they wrought similar works of ability called "miracles." No, that sort of reasoning, brethren, will not do. It contradicts every law of common sense. The plain teaching of Scripture is that there is One (Remember that the Lord your God is One Lord) who is pre-eminent, and that his ability is pre-eminent, and moreover that he imparts it to whom he will in distributions of sanctified (holy) Spirit. And this suggests another thought. Does God distribute a person called the Holy Spirit? I leave the reader to think of this. CHAS. GARDNER.

The reader who has procured a copy of the Revision will be interested, I think, in comparing the following translation with the same in the Revision. For any scholar who will do this carefully and thoughtfully, further comment will be unnecessary.

O. GARDNER.

PSALMS XIX. (COMMON VERSION XVIII.)

1. Unto the end David's Psalm.

2. Heaven (the inhabitants of heaven) discourseth the glory of God, and the firmament (the canopy) declares his handiwork.

3. Day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night declareth a way of comprehension.

4. There is no ordinary language nor words whose sounds are being heard.

5. Into all the earth though hath gone forth their utterance, and unto the ends of the inhabited their spoken (in the sense of God's spoken or oracular) words.

6. In the Sun hath he set his tabernacle (i. e., in parable language) and like a bridegroom, as it were, doth he go his way out of his bridal-chamber, like a giant as it were to run his way, will he rejoice.

7. From a verge of the heavens is his going forth and unto a verge of the heavens is the goal of his return (circular motion clearly taught) and there is no one who will hide himself from his wrath. (Parable language for the vivifying grace of God).

8. The law of the Lord is faultless, restoring lives, the testimonies of the Lord are reliable making children wise;

9. The statutes (the ordinances which justify) of the Lord are upright, rejoicing the heart; the commandment of the Lord is transparently clear, enlightening the eyes;

10. The fear of the Lord is sanctified purity, abiding even unto an age of an age (i. e., until the age that brings the greater perfection, namely, holiness). The verdicts of the Lord are truthful and at the same time have been shown to be just.

11. More to be desired are they than gold or a very precious stone, and sweeter than honey and the honey-comb.

12. Yes, indeed thy bond-servant watcheth to keep them. In the watching to keep them, there is great return.

13. Who will understand the stumbling steps of error? Cleanse thou me from my hidden errors. (Sins of ignorance here meant.)

14. And from sins that allienate, spare thou thy bond-servant. If they do not obtain dominion over me, then shall I be blameless, and I shall have been cleansed from a great sin. (The Adamic sin here meant.)

15. And the oracular expressions of my mouth will be acceptible, and the solicitude of my heart will be constantly before thee, O Lord, my responsive helper and my redeemer.

ABRAHAM.—II.

"[illegible] these things, the word of the Lord came unto Abram in a vision, saying, Fear not, Abram, I am a shield to thee, thy reward shall be exceeding great." Gen. xv. 1.

Dear reader, what can we say concerning this great promise to Abraham? It must be a "great" promise, for it is a promise of something "exceeding great." Was it the land of Canaan? was it the kingdom of Israel, or the kingdom of the world? "what shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his life." Matt. xvi. 26. If we a promise of something better than kingdoms and crowns, are these words of promise, unmeaning words to us? were they unmeaning words to Abraham? If so, what profit were they to him, or to us? Did they not reveal to him, and to us, what the nature and extent of the blessing would be that shall come to all nations in him, and in his seed? and what was the "blessing of Abraham that shall come upon the Gentiles through Jesus Christ"? Gal. iii. 14. What was it but the forgiveness of sins? and all that that implies; to-wit, resurrection and incorruption? Let us read: "Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ; to them that hath obtained like precious faith with us, through the righteousness of God, and our Savior Jesus Christ:—Grace be multiplied to you through the knowledge of God and Jesus Christ our Lord; according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain to life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue; whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by them ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." 2 Pet. i. 1-4. "That he grant you according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his spirit, in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend, with all saints, what is the breadth and length and depth and height, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye may be filled with all the fullness of God." Eph. iii. 16-19. "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body; the fullness of him that filleth all in all" Eph. i. 22, 23. "For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily; and ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power." Col. ii. 9, 10. What do these passages of Scripture mean? and a multitude of others of like import? what is it, but that the saints shall inherit Deity? shall inherit the Godhead? (like their elder brother:—"the first born among many brethren," Rom. xviii. 29, of what avail are kingdoms and crowns, covenants and oaths? of what avail are promises and prophecies, lands and royalties, without immortality? "What is a man profited, if he gain the whole world and lose his life?" Matt. xvi. 25. Paul declared with great emphasis to the Gentiles as well as the Jews, at Antioch in Pisidia," and we declare unto you glad tidings, that the promise which was made unto the fathers; God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children; in that he hath raised up Jesus again, as it is written in the second Psalm. "Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee." Acts xiii. 32, 33. What did Paul mean by the "promise," were there not more than one? There were more than one. "To Abraham and his seed were the promises made," Gal. iii. 16. Yes there was only one of supreme importance, one that overshadowed all others, and embraced all. It was referred to by Peter, when he spoke to the people in Solomon's porch. "Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant, which God made with our fathers; saying unto Abraham:—and in thy seed, shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed; unto you first, God having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities," Acts iii. 25, 26. In the turning away from iniquities, there is a taken away of sin. In the taking away of sin, there is the forgiveness of sins. In the forgiveness of sins, there is the purging of the conscience from dead works, and the resurrection of the dead. In the resurrection from the dead, is life and incorruptibility. This is the blessing published and covenanted to Abraham and his seed, for himself and all the nations of the earth: the heritage of Deity, incorruption, glory, power, not to all men; but "by the faith of Jesus Christ, unto all and upon all them that believe; for there is no difference." Rom. iii. 22. Now dear brother, seeing that the gospel is the glad tidings of the fulfillment of the promise, in the person of Jesus Christ, which is God's assurance that the same promise shall be fulfilled unto all, and upon all them that believe; why do we add to the gospel or subtract from the gospel, by preaching the promises, instead of the fulfillment of the promise, This, Paul did not do. Hear him once more, we declare unto you glad tidings, now that the promise God made unto the fathers, he hath fulfilled the same to the children," Acts xiii. 32, 33. If a brother sees Abraham every where in the New Testament; it must be because Jesus Christ fulfilled all the promises made to Abraham, as Paul declares. It cannot be because Jesus and his apostles preached Abraham unto the people for they did not do any such thing. They preached Jesus of Nazareth, declaring as proof of their preaching, that, "to him give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in him, shall receive forgiveness of sins." Acts x. 43. What if I preach Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; and the covenants and the promises? What if I preach David and his kingdom, and the oath; and Israel restored? Can any of them take away sin? Can all of them take away sin? "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," Jno. i. 29. "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved. This is the stone set at naught of your builders which is become the head of the corner; neither is there salvation in any other." Acts iii. 11, 12. Is not this stone large enough to build upon, or must we add Abraham and David to it? Or Israel restored to the land? Should one say, I am of Christ; another will say, I am of the "Abrahamic Faith." Was Abraham crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Abraham? Shall we repudiate the faith of Jesus, and call ourselves by the name of Abraham? What else is this "Abrahamic Faith" as if the faith of Jesus Christ did not embrace all the covenants of promise; and all the faith, of all the prophets and righteous men, which have been since the world began. ATHEISM and Arithmetic or Mathematical Law in Nature,—is the title of No. 18 of The Anti-Infidel Library, published by H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston, Mass. It shows that there is arithmetic in plants and plants, and that number controls even vital action. Creation as well as prophecy has, in its origination, a wonderful numberer, Dan. viii. 13, margin. It is not blind chance, but infinite intelligence that organizes and sustains the laws of the universe.

News Items.

MANCHESTER, June 13.—A terrible explosion of fire damp occurred this morning in the Clifton Hall colliery, near this city. There were 350 men at work in the mine at the time, 120 of whom have been rescued.

As a result of the earthquake in Cashmere, India, 3,081 persons lost their lives, 70,000 houses were laid in ruins and 73,000 animals perished.

MADRID, June 18.—The cholera is spreading at an alarming rate from the cities of Murcia, Valencia and Castellon. A total of 632 new cases and 151 deaths are reported to have occurred within the past 24 hours. At Madrid one death is reported and six new cases.

PARIS, June 18.—The Minister of Marine has official despatches confirming the news of the loss of the French gunboat Bayard. The Reynard foundered in the terrible cyclone which recently swept the Gulf of Aden. Every one on board, 127 persons, perished.

LONDON, June 20.—Severe shocks of earthquake were experienced this morning at Berne and Geneva, Switzerland. The extent or nature of the damage done has not yet been reported.

MADRID, June 20.—The official reports of the march of cholera in Spain for the past twenty-four hours are as follows: In Madrid, new cases 3, deaths 1; Valencia city, new cases 18, deaths 14; Valencia province, new cases 249, deaths 124; Murcia city, new cases 112, deaths 37; Murcia province, new cases 240, deaths 83; Castellon province, new cases 97, deaths 57.

A terrific rain-storm swept over a portion of Central Illinois Sunday morning, doing great damage to the growing crops and washing away fences, bridges, etc. Near Hillsboro, many fields of corn are under water.

In a field of corn on what is called the Phelps farm, near Mason City, in Cerro Gordo county, Iowa, on the morning after the passage of the recent cyclone, a boy baby was found. The infant had on only a night-dress, and lived but an hour or so after being discovered. No one knows whose child it was, nor how far he came. The tornado undoubtedly dropped him in the field. Up to the present time the mystery of the waif's parentage and home is wholly unsettled.

The Gift of Tongues.

We have lost, it is true, the gift of tongues that was possessed in apostolic days, but we have what is more than its equivalent,—a power, unknown to those times, of multiplying copies of the Scriptures indefinitely; and we have the Bible in more tongues than they ever spoke. It was five hundred years from the Septuagint to the Vulgate version, and even at the beginning of this century there were in existence only fifty translations of the Scriptures. Now there are two hundred and fifty, and the possibilities of multiplication of this wonder-working religion are entirely unlimited. The modern printing press can throw off 30,000 copies of the Psalms in an hour, and in the same time it can print 2,500 copies of the entire Bible. A single press can give to the world 4,000,000 Bibles in the same time that it would have taken the swiftest writer of the early Church to make one. We are living, indeed, in the days long predicted when the angel flies in mid-heaven "having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."—Christian at Work.

Miscellaneous.

The London Standard, in an article on the recent ravages by locusts in Roumania, says: "Again and again the various species have wrought dire havoc wherever their wanderings have taken them. Pestilence usually comes in the rear of all, and is aggravated, if not occasioned, by the effluvium from the decaying bodies of the dead cattle, or of the insects which have been blown into the sea and afterward cast up on shore by the waves and tide. A case is on record in which the stench from such a bank was carried one hundred and fifty miles into the interior, and early in the Christian era the hunger and plague combined which followed a visitation of locusts in North Africa caused the death of eight hundred thousand persons. Four centuries ago, it is narrated on what seems fairly trustworthy data, that more than thirty thousand persons perished within the bounds of the Venetian territory from the lack of food owing to the locusts having eaten up everything, and since that date locust plagues have been so numerous it is not difficult to accept the earlier tales as true.

The theory that connects spots on the sun with violent storms on the earth has derived considerable strength from the events of the past four years, during which there has been a maximum of sun spots and a very remarkable series of meteorological disturbances upon our planet. Perhaps no stronger evidence in favor of this theory has been presented than that furnished within the past few weeks. Tornadoes, cyclones, violent storms of hail and snow, and waterspouts have during that time wrought destruction in almost every quarter of the habitable globe. Coincidently with these terrestrial outbursts the sun has been frequently dotted with remarkable spots showing intense activity, although the maximum of the spots was probably passed two years ago.

Just now the sun presents a curious appearance when viewed with a telescope. Strung completely across its disk are a great number of black spots, and advancing upon the eastern edge is a huge double cluster of spots, where for millions upon millions of square miles the surface of the sun seems to be torn and rent asunder. One of these clusters presents the appearance of a cyclone action on a gigantic scale—a cyclone in whose mad whirl the earth would spin like a whipped top! All around this excessively agitated region, the solar surface is driven into flaming ridges, presenting a most wonderful and picturesque display of those tremendous fire mountains of the sun which are known by the singularly weak and inexpressive name of faculæ. If during the coming fortnight, while this great double group is crossing the disk of the sun, there should be an unusual prevalence of destructive storms in various parts of the earth, the coincidence would add valuable evidence to what has already been collected showing a direct action of solar disturbances upon the atmosphere of the earth.

In the mean time it is worth anybody's while to take a look through a telescope at the glowering countenance of the god of day.—N. Y. Sun.

LAKE MISTASSINI.

MONTREAL, June 18.—John Bignell, late head of the Government exploring expedition to Lake Mistassini, who has just returned to Quebec, says that his son in no way exaggerated the facts in regard to the big lake—Mistassini—the great unknown inland sea of Northeastern Canada. He says that some of the numerous islands which it contains appear to him to be over ten miles in length, and were found to embrace large lakes in their interior. One result of his observations was to show that the Height-of-Land forming the northern boundary of that province, and the situation of both the Great and Little Mistassini, as laid down on the maps, are altogether erroneous. The latitude of Hudson's Bay Company post is at least half a degree from that heretofore accepted as correct, and Little Mastassini, instead of being a mere arm of the big lake, is in reality a distinct sheet of water, 100 to 120 miles long by eight wide. Among other natural curiosities of the region Mr. Bignell visited an extraordinary cave, known among the local Indians as the cave "Cave of the Great Spirit." In it are stored a quantity of expedition supplies. Mr. Bignell reports that the cold of last winter at Mistassini was intense, marking 50 degrees below zero in December and 52 on March 27; but he believes that the soil of the region will be found well fitted for the growth of hardy cereals. When he started on his return to Quebec, on May 27, the ice in the bay was breaking up, but the main body of the lake still held firm.

A GREAT RIVER.

The River Congo has a course of twenty-nine hundred miles, from the Chibale range, south-south-east of Lake Tanganyika, to Banana Point on the south-west coast of Africa. Close to the twelfth parallel of south latitude across eighteen degrees of longitude, there runs an elevated ridge, of from six to nine thousand feet high,—at one part narrowed down into a mountain range, at another expanded into a table land. This is the dividing line between the Zambesi and Congo basins. Out of the furrows, recesses, and folds of its slopes, issue the streams flowing in opposite directions,—northward into the Congo, southward into the Zambesi. Near the parallel of four degrees north latitude, you must look for the dividing-line of the waters of the Bhar-el-Ghazal and Shari, which flow north, and those which flow southward into the Congo. Draw a line north and south about the meridian of sixteen degrees east longitude, from four degrees north to twelve degrees south latitude; and a slightly diagonal line from four degrees north to twelve degrees south, running from the meridian of thirty degrees east to thirty-two degrees east longitude; and, within this vast compact area, you have the basin of the Congo. Its greatest length is a line drawn from south-east to north-west, fourteen hundred miles, by twelve hundred, its greatest breadth. The number of English square miles that this area contains is one million three hundred thousand.—Henry M. Stanley.

Cities of Moab.

Perhaps of all those which we saw in our journey, none struck us more than the large towns in the plain south and south-east of Salcah. Among them, there was one in particular which made an impression upon us we shall never lose—it was Um-el-Jamel, the ancient Beth-Gamul, a very large city, and to be compared almost with the modern Jerusalem. It is very perfect, and as we walked about among the streets, and entered every house, and opened the stone doors, and saw the rooms as if they had just been left, and then thought that we were actually in the private dwellings of the people who, for two thousand years, had ceased to be a people, we felt a kind of awe, and realized in a manner that we never, perhaps could feel elsewhere, how perfectly every tittle of God's word is carried out; and whether it be a blessing that is spoken, or a curse, it continued to be so—nothing is remitted until all be fulfilled.

These cities of Moab, which are still so perfect that they might again be inhabited to-morrow, have been during many centuries unpeopled. The land about them, rich and fruitful as any in Syria, has long ceased to produce aught but shrubs and herbs, the food of the camel and the antelope. The sound of the rejoicing at harvest time, and the song of the grape gatherers, has long since died away; and for centuries, those old cities, which were once the scene of so much life and so much rejoicing, have been still; and no sound, save the cry of wild animals, has been heard in them. How wonderfully true are those words, "Moab is destroyed. Give wings unto Moab, that it may flee and get away; and the cities thereof shall dwell therein. Moab is spoiled, and gone out of her cities. Moab is confounded, and judgment is come upon the plain country, upon Holon, and upon Jahazah, and upon Mephaath, and upon Dibon, and upon Nebo, and upon Beth-diblathaim, and upon Kiriathaim, and upon Bozrah, and upon all the cities of Moab, far and near, the horn of Moab is cut off, and the arm is broken saith the Lord."

Again, in all this country there is now no fruit except at Salcah, where there are some wild vines and pomegranates, and figs, but before they are quite ripe, the Arabs of the desert plunder them. Is not this predicted: "The spoiler is fallen upon thy summer fruits and upon thy vintage.—And joy and gladness is taken from the plentiful field, and from the land of Moab. And I have caused wine to fail from the wine-presses; none shall cry with shouting; their shouting shall be no shouting. And Moab shall be destroyed from being a people, because he hath magnified himself against the Lord. "Woe unto thee, O Moab!... for thy sons are taken captive and thy daughters captives."

Can we have stronger evidence of the actual fulfillment of prophecy than comparing what we see in this country with the words of Jeremiah spoken two thousand five hundred years ago? When he spoke these words, Moab was powerful and proud, and laughed at the thought of what he said. They cried, "We are strong and mighty, and no enemy can overcome us!—How say ye, we are mighty, and strong men for the war! We have heard of the pride of Moab (he is exceeding proud), his loftiness, and his arrogancy, and his pride, and the haughtiness of his heart."—Cyril Graham—Cambridge Essays.

HOLD ON! HOLD OUT!

Hold out! there comes an end of sorrow;
Hope from the dust shall conquering rise;
The storm foretells a Summer's morrow;
The cross points on to Paradise;
The Father reigneth! cease all doubt;
Hold on, my heart, hold on, hold out!

JESUS WEPT.

When the pangs of sorrow seize us,
When the waves of trouble roll,
I would lay my head on Jesus—
Pillow of the troubled soul;
Surely none can feel like Thee,
Weeping One of Bethany!

"Jesus wept!"—that tear of sorrow
Is a legacy of love:
Yesterday, to-day, to-morrow,
He the same doth ever prove.
Be Thou all in all to me,
Living One of Bethany.

How different is peace from happiness. Happiness is the result of harmony between our wants as creatures and the world without; peace is the harmony between us as the spiritual beings and the Father of spirits. The one is changable as the objects or circumstances on which it, for the moment, relies; the other is as unchangeable as the God on whom it eternally rests. We may thus possess at once real happiness and real peace, yet either may exist without the other. Nay, mere happiness may be destroyed by God in order that the higher blessing of peace may be possessed; but never will he take away peace to give happiness. Happiness without peace is temporal, peace along with happiness is eternal.

PATIENT WAITING.

In every man's affairs there comes a time of waiting; the problem cannot be solved, it must be worked out; the difficulties cannot be banished by energetic action, they must slowly fade as the mists roll away from the sky of one who has been anxiously watching for the sun through long and weary days of clouds and rain. There are times when our affairs are taken out of our own hands as we are compelled to stand aside and wait patiently for the slow movement of evolution and progress. We have sown seed, but we must not force it to immediate harvest; we must let Nature set her shoulder to our work and do it for us. Growth is the most natural process in the world; the only really normal and healthy process; and yet it is the hardest to wait for. When our projects move slowly, we chafe and fume indignantly; when our affairs get entangled, instead of quietly waiting for the untangling of the snarl, we continually thrust our hands into the tangle and make it tenfold worse. This is a world in which the best things are grown, not made; and he who wants the best and most enduring things must be willing to pay the price of patience for them. Wait patiently, and rejoice that you have things worth waiting for.—Christian Union.

"LOOK WELL TO YOUR FAITH."

He that has faith in Christ, has all; he that wants it, has nothing. Well might our Lord say, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." It secures the heart for God through Jesus Christ; and that secures the whole man, all his words and actions; forming the whole conduct for life upon a perfect, a most infallible pattern. This, then, is the direction to which every Christian must turn his mind. Look well to your faith.

Beware of starving your faith by neglecting to lay in proper provision. —Faith comes by hearing the word of God. What the world holds forth and conveys through faith into the heart, viz.: the grace of God in Christ, is the only support of the soul. "Wherefore, as new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." "And let the word of Christ dwell in you richly, in all knowledge and spiritual understanding." It is the Spirit of Christ indeed which alone can kindle and maintain this divine flame; but it is the Christian's business to lay the fuel ready.

Beware of poisoning your faith. And this may be done either by perverse principles or practices. Both commonly go together, and mutually contribute support to each other. The milk of the word must be sincere, i. e., without mixture, in order to give nourishment; for every foreign mixture gives it a poisonous quality.

Beware of spoiling your faith by suffering it to be idle. Exercise is as necessary in the spiritual life as in the natural. By faith the Christian lives, and, of course, he only lives so far as faith is kept in constant exercise. Just so much activity and exercise as there is, so much is there of faith; and whenever it ceases to act, the Christian ceases to live. The seed of life may be in him; but life consists in the exercises of life. At the same time we must beware of attempting to live that is, to exercise faith, or any other grace, but in strength derived from the Spirit of life.

Sunday-School Song.

Dear Sunday School, we love the place
Where Christians meet together:
Where we learn the words of truth.
We learn about our Savior.

We love to go to Sunday School,
To learn about our Savior,
Sweet anthems to His name we'll sing,
And sing His praises ever.

We'll search the Scriptures through and through
It is God's revelation:
It teaches us what we must do,
The plan of our salvation.

We learn that Jesus died for us,
His life was one of labor;
That we eternal life may have,
Through Christ our own dear Savior.

He died for us but rose again,
He made death's bars to sever;
And when he comes to earth again,
He'll reign our own dear Savior.

MRS. I. O. ROBERTS.

Little Mabel.

In a prayer meeting in Boston, a middle-aged man rose and said, "I have been thoughtless and impatient till within a short time, and I will tell you how it came to pass that I am now, as I hope, a disciple of Jesus.

"On Sunday evening, I was lying on my sofa in my parlor. My wife had gone out, and no one was with me but little Mabel, a sweet child about six years old, who was at the time making a visit to us, and who sat by the centre-table amusing herself with pictures. At length, getting tired of them, she came up to the sofa, and began caressing me in her winning, childlike way. 'Uncle,' said she, putting her soft little hand in mine, 'dear uncle, I want you to tell me something about Jesus: mamma always does Sunday nights.'

"I was struck by the question, but avoided it, talking of something else. But the little creature would not be put off. Again and again she came back to the same request, 'Uncle, tell me something about Jesus.' Finding I did not comply, she said at last, opening wide her clear, blue eyes, 'Why, you know about Jesus; don't you?'

"That question awakened thoughts and feelings such as I never had known before. I could not sleep that night; the dear child's wondering words, 'You know about Jesus, don't you?' haunted me through all the long, silent hours. I felt that I did not know about Jesus, that I had not wished to know; and a sense of ignorance and guilt weighed too heavily upon my soul to be shaken off. I was distressed for days. I read my Bible with an inquiring, anxious heart, till at length I found the blessed Savior, and could say in humility and faith, 'Now I know about Jesus,' that Jesus of whom little Mabel so eagerly wished to hear."

Good Breeding.

There would be fewer broken friendships, fewer unhappy unions and family quarrels, were it not so much the custom among intimate friends and relations to neglect the small courtesies of life, to show less and less mutual deference as they grow more and more familiar. It is the foundation of misery in marriage, and many a serious and life-long estrangement has begun, not from want of affection so much as from lack of that delicate and instructive appreciation of the feelings of others, which makes a person shrink from saying unpleasant things and finding fault unless absolutely obliged; and in any case avoid wounding the offender's sense of dignity or stirring up within him feelings of opposition and animosity, for although many persons profess to be above taking offense at honest censure, and even seem to court criticism, yet it must be very carefully administered not to be unpalatable. Very kind and generous actions are often so uncouthly performed as to give the recipient more pain than pleasure, while a reproof or denial may be so sweetened by courtesy as almost to do away with any sense of mortification or disappointment. True good breeding is always inclined to form a favorable judgment, and to give others credit of being actuated by worthy motives; it does not wish or seem to know more about people than they themselves desire should be known, but it is always prepared, when necessary, to take an interest in the affairs of others, while self is not suffered to obtrude unduly. A show of respect never fails to beget respect. The stronger an individual, the more impressive is his gentleness, the wiser he is, the more gratifying and complimentary his deference; and in a world where there is so much unavoidable discomfort and unhappiness, it is surely very one's duty to cultivate those gracious manners under whose magic influence the restless and dissatisfied grow more content with their surroundings, by which the diffident are encouraged, the invalid is aroused and interested, the young are inspired with self-respect, the old are kept bright and hopeful; which, in short, beam sunshine everywhere, and increase a thousand fold the aggregate of human happiness.

Dear Children:

It is some time since I had the pleasure of communicating my thoughts to you, having been hindered by circumstances over which I had no control.

I can imagine many to whom I write enjoy to sit by a running brook, for the echo of each ripple almost whispers to the listening ear a note of music. The wild Indian expressed a very beautiful idea in calling them, "Laughing waters." To just such a spot, in a very lonely place I want you to wander with me in thought, for there a great Prophet whose name signifies, "God the Lord," was commanded to hide from a king who was angry because the prophet had warned him, that there should be neither dew nor rain for three years and a half. Beside this brook, which signifies, "Playing," the Prophet was homeless, without shelter or food, but the Lord was with him in his solitude, and after the weary journey, and perhaps a night's rest, when he awoke in the morning a breakfast was brought to him, meat, and bread already prepared, the same was sent in the evening. He was not left to wonder who it was that ministered to his daily wants, for his loneliness was broken when he saw birds bring in their own little mouths the Lord's portion for his faithful servant, and strange to say they were of such a ravenous nature they would eat up everything they could find, and according to the law given to Moses, they were reckoned among the unclean. After some time the waters of the brook failed, and no refreshing drink remained to quench the thirst of the Prophet, then the word of the Lord commanded him to go to a certain city, which signifies a "crucible" and there he would find a widow woman whom the Lord had said, should feed him. Just as he came to the gate, he saw a woman gathering a few sticks, the Prophet called to her, and said, Fetch me I pray thee a little water, in a vessel that I may drink, and as the woman was going to fetch it, he called to her again saying, Bring I pray thee a morsel of bread in thine hands, and she said, as the Lord thy God liveth I have not a cake, but a handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse, and I am gathering a few sticks that I may prepare it for me and my son, that we may eat it, and die. And the man of God said to her, fear not, go and do as thou hast said, but make me a little cake first, and after make for thee, and thy son. For thus saith the Lord God of Israel, the barrel of meal shall not waste, nor the cruse of oil fail until the day the Lord giveth rain upon the earth, and she went, and did according to the saying of the Prophet. Does it not seem remarkable that the Prophet should be sent to a poor widow who had a helpless little one depending on her scanty supply. No doubt there were many wealthy Israelites with whom the Prophet would have fared sumptuously, and Jesus declared many widows were in the city besides this one who was a Gentile, but the Lord loved her, because she had faith in his word. O, think of it my dear children, when the Prophet asked her for the last morsel, just a handful, which she had sparingly treasured up, and finding fault unless absolutely obliged; and in any case avoid wounding the offender's sense of dignity or stirring up within him feelings of opposition and animosity, for although many persons profess to be above taking offense at honest censure, and even seem to court criticism, yet it must be very carefully administered not to be unpalatable. Very kind and generous actions are often so uncouthly performed as to give the recipient more pain than pleasure, while a reproof or denial may be so sweetened by courtesy as almost to do away with any sense of mortification or disappointment. True good breeding is always inclined to form a favorable judgment, and to give others credit of being actuated by worthy motives; it does not wish or seem to know more about people than they themselves desire should be known, but it is always prepared, when necessary, to take an interest in the affairs of others, while self is not suffered to obtrude unduly. A show of respect never fails to beget respect. The stronger an individual, the more impressive is his gentleness, the wiser he is, the more gratifying and complimentary his deference; and in a world where there is so much unavoidable discomfort and unhappiness, it is surely very one's duty to cultivate those gracious manners under whose magic influence the restless and dissatisfied grow more content with their surroundings, by which the diffident are encouraged, the invalid is aroused and interested, the young are inspired with ter to trust in the Lord, than to put any confidence in man." God knows how to care for his trusting ones; it matters not where they are, in the solitude of the desert, or amid the din and confusion of a city. And everything we trace in the life of this great prophet is but a shadow of the circumstances which will surround him, when he comes in the future as a Restorer. In my next letter I will unfold a little more of his wonderful history.

Your affectionate Teacher,

E. COFFMAN.

P. S. Since you last heard from me, we have had three deaths in the family, my husband's sister's wife, and child, also her sister, since then my husband has been very sick, blind for many days, requiring all my energies to wait on him. I have greatly missed my talk with the children, but hope to be able now to resume the pleasure.

Faithfully yours, E. COFFMAN.

OBITUARY.

DWIGGINS.—At Rensselaer, Ind., June 5, 1885, Daniel Dwiggins, aged 78 years and 11 days.

Brother Dwiggins was born in Guilford Co., North Carlina, May 25, 1807. When a child his parents took him from the place of his birth to Clinton County, Ohio, where he resided until the year 1836, when he removed with his family to Grant County, Ind. He resided in Grant County until 1858, when he removed to Jasper County, Ind., where he resided until his death.

October 13th, 1831, he was married to Mary Starbuck, who survives him. They had nine children, viz: Sarah Jane Paris, Robert S. Dwiggins, Isaiah Dwiggins, Edward Dwiggins, Sue Henry, Lydia Dwiggins, Eliza Owen, Elmri Dwiggins, and Ella Dwiggins. All of whom are living except Edward Dwiggins, who lost his life in defense of his country. He was raised a friend Quaker. In 1840 he and his wife were baptized and united with the Christian or Disciple Church. In 1850 he having moved into a neighborhood where there was no Disciple Church, with his wife united with the Wesleyan Methodist Church and they retained their membership in that Church until 1858, when they removed to Jasper County. In 1860 they both united with the Church of God, at Rensselaer, Ind., and he died a member of that Church. His disease was Apoplexy, and he realized for many months and even years before his death, that he was liable to go at any time without a moment's warning. He was fully prepared and had no fear of death. He died in full faith and hope of eternal life.

He was a strong temperance man all his life. In the early days of Indiana, when it was the custom to furnish liquor at house raisings, log rollings, and in harvest time, he refused to comply with the custom and sometimes found it difficult to obtain necessary assistance from his neighbors, but he adhered firmly to his resolution not to furnish or use any intoxicants on any account whatever.

His only brother, all his sisters, except one, all his living children, most of his grand children and many other relatives from abroad attended his funeral.

PHELPS.—Simon Phelps, at Deep River, Powchiek Co., Iowa, March 4th, 1885, aged 68 years, two months and 18 days.

Simon Phelps was born in Green Co., Ohio, Nov. 22, 1816. Was married to Harriett Lampher of Ohio, Nov. 5th, 1837. Moved to Illinois in 1842, near Pesotenica, Stephenson Co., and remained until January, 1877, when he moved to the place of his death. He was baptised into the Christ in 1858, by T. J. Whitsell, and has since ever been a devoted worker in the cause of Christ, and liberal with his means toward those who proclaim the word.

He leaves an aged companion and five children to mourn their loss. But they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

The funeral services were conducted by G. M. Myers of Lanark, Ill., in the presence of a large concourse of friends, on the 6th, when the deceased was deposited in the cemetery southeast of the old town of Dresden.

Thou art gone to the grave but we will not deplore thee,
Though sorrow and darkness encompass the tomb:
Thy Savior has passed through its portal before thee,
And the lamp of his love is thy guide through the gloom!

Thou art gone to the grave we no longer behold thee,
Nor tread the rough paths of the world by thy side;
But the wide arms of Mercy are spread to enfold thee,
As Jesus bids thee come from thy bed to arise.

OCCUPIED ABOUT MUCH SERVING.

Christ never asks of us such busy labor
As leaves no time for resting at his feet;
The waiting attitude of expectation
He oft times counts a service most complete.

He sometimes wants our ear,—our rapt attention,—
That he some sweetest secret may impart;
'Tis always in the time of deepest silence
That heart finds deepest fellowship with heart.

We sometimes wonder why our Lord doth place us
Within a sphere so narrow, so obscure,
That nothing we can work can find an entrance;
There's only room to suffer, to endure!

Well, God loves patient souls that dwell in stillness,
Doing the little things, or resting quite,
May just as perfectly fulfil their mission,
Be just as useful in the Father's sight,

As they who grapple with some giant evil,
Cleaving a path that every eye may see,
Our Savior cares for cheerful acquaintance,
Rather than for a busy ministry.

And yet he does love service where 'tis given
By grateful love that pushes itself in deed:
But work that's done to reach the summit of fame
Be one to [illegible] gives but little heed.

Then seek to please him, whatsoever he bids thee,
Whether to do, to suffer, [illegible];
'Tis all matter little in what path he leads us,
If in it all we seek to [illegible].

Moses and Joshua Types of "The Last Days," "The Times of the End."

"And I saw when he had opened the sixth seal, and there was a great earthquake, and the sun became black, and the stars fell unto the earth as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind, and the heaven was removed as a scroll when it is rolled up, and every mountain and island were moved out of their places." Rev.

Jesus directs his disciples, attention to the "signs in the sun, moon and stars, distress of nations, for the powers of the heavens shall be shaken, and then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. But when these things begin to come to pass, look up, and lift up your heads, because your redemption draweth nigh." Luke xxi.

These signs are now largely in the past. History has noted the great earthquake at Lisbon in 1755," which marks the opening of the sixth seal, and the beginning of the signs as revealed to John by our Lord Jesus Christ. The darkening of the sun, when it became black as sackcloth of hair—in 1780 a phenomena so strange and wonderful that Herschel asserted neither science or philosophy could possibly account for it. The apparent "falling of the stars" in 1833, that created much excitement as being without precedent is magnificence. "The whole or full moon became like blood." I lately read an account in the Youth's Companion of an exact appearance of this witnessed in 1873, on the gulf coast of Labrador. Here is the description by a party lost on the Labrador banks. "By this time it was near noon, though the sun was hidden in what seemed to be a vast smoke cloud high up in the sky . . . the increasing blackness of the sky alarmed us much. In the course of an hour, it grew dark as evening . . . After sunset it grew lighter, later on the moon came in sight, up half way to the zenith—a full moon, but exactly the color of blood, so awfully deep red that it was enough to make one shudder to look at it."

"And the clouds of heaven as a scroll when it is rolled up," is literally described, in depicting the view at a distance, of these terrible cyclones of the present time. "Mountains and islands removing out of their places." This has been witnessed and noted in our own day. "Upon the earth distress of nations and perplexity for the roaring of the sea and the billows, men expiring for fear and for expectation of the things which are coming on the world, for the powers of the heavens shall be shaken." All these signs have been seen since the beginning of 1755.

Moses was a hundred and twenty years old when he died, after viewing the promised land from Mount Nebo—which signifies "that speaks or prophecies." And then Joshua led the hosts of Israel. Moses signifies "taken out of the water," and Joshua means, "the Lord the Savior"—and the very types of the "word of God" and the "Spirit of Christ which dwelleth within you" —in leading the children of Israel from the bondage of Egyptian darkness through "the wilderness of sin" into the land of rest. Moses' birth and life was noted in the Scriptures as was those of our Savior. And in these signs of the opening of the sixth seal 120 years plus 1755 equals 1875. Forty years were they wandering in the wilderness with Moses, as many years as days that the spies were gone to search the land, 40 years taken from 1 876 reach back to 1835, when the Advent movement started out of Egypt, which signifies "that troubles or oppresses," and is descriptive of the binding creeds held by all the various churches. At the death of Moses, Joshua took command of Israel (read attentively the first six chapters of Joshua). While encamped at Shittim, which signifies, "to turn away or divert", Joshua sent two spies saying, "Go view the land even Jericho" which signifies "his moon or mouth." At the end of three days they returned to him at Shittim, (still count a day for a year) which added to 1875 reach 1878, "early in the morning" of the fourth day, or 1879, they left Shittim and came to Jordan and lodged there, "and it came to pass after three days (after 1882) that the officers went through the host saying, Prepare you victuals, for within three days ye shall pass over this Jordan," which signifies, "river of Judgment". "When ye see the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, and the priests, the Levites bearing it, then ye shall remove from your place and go after it. Yet there shall be a space between you and it about 2000 cubits by measure, come not near unto it that ye may know the way by which ye must go." Compare margin of the second chapter, first verse, with first chapter, eleventh verse, and third chapter, second, third, and fourth verses. On the ninth day, or 1883, Joshua said unto the people, Sanctify yourselves. "Sanctify them by thy truth, thy word is truth"—for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you. On the tenth day, 1885, "The Lord said unto Joshua, This day I will begin to magnify thee in the sight of all Israel—that they may know that as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee. And Joshua said unto the children of Israel, "Come hither and hear the words of the Lord your God." "And the people came up out of Jordan on the tenth day of the first month, and encamped in Gilgal in the east border of Jericho." Gilgal signifies, "wheel, revolution heap," the same signification has Galilee, where our Lord appointed his first meeting with his disciples on [illegible] mountain in Galilee," after his resurrection. "And those twelve stones which they took out of Jordan, did Joshua pitch in Gilgal." On the tenth day they passed over Jordan. Ten years added to 1873, make 1885 years. After crossing Jordan, the hosts of Israel were circumcised, and they abode in their places until they were whole. "And the Lord said unto Joshua, This day have I rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off you, wherefore the name of the place is called Gilgal unto this day."

"And the children of Israel encamped in Gilgal, and kept the passover on the fourteenth day of the month, at even in the plains of Jericho." This reaches to the end of the year 1888, or rather in 1889 when Daniel "shall stand in his lot at the end of the days," 1335. "And they did eat of the old corn of the land on the morrow after the passover unleavened cakes and parched corn in the self-same day (1896) and the manna ceased on the morrow after they had eaten of the old corn of the land (1901,) neither had the children of Israel manna any more, but they did eat of the fruit of the land of Canaan that year." "And it came to pass when Joshua was by Jericho that he lifted up his eyes and looked, and behold there stood a man over against him with a drawn sword in his hand, and Joshua went unto him, and said unto him, Art thou for us or for our adversaries? And he said, Nay, but as Captain of the Host of the Lord am I now come. And Joshua fell on his face to the earth, and did worship, and saith unto him, What saith my lord unto his servant. And the Captain of the Lord's host said unto Joshua, Loose thy shoe from off thy foot for the place whereon thou standest is holy. And Joshua did so." Here is evidently a type of the coming of Christ, the Captain of our salvation, but unlike it does not give the day he comes. It was after the crossing of Jordan, and possibly before Jericho was taken, but not positively so described, as Joshua was by Jericho when he saw him and heard the words. As Captain of the Host of the Lord am I now come. No man knoweth the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh. Watch and be ready is the command. We here catch a glimpse of the meaning of the words of our Savior, "You shall not have gone through the cities of Israel till the Son of Man be come."

Ye shall compass the city, (Jericho) all ye men of war, and go round about the city once. Thus shalt thou do six days, 1891 and six equals 1897. The last year of Gentile times. "And it came to pass on the seventh day, 1898, that they rose early, about the dawning of the day, and compassed the city after the same manner seven times, only on that day they compassed the city seven times, and it came to pass at the seventh time, when the priests blew with the trumpets, Joshua said unto the people, shout for the Lord hath given you the city. And they burnt the city with fire, and all that was therein, only, the silver and the gold, and the vessels of brass and of iron, they put in the treasury of the house of the Lord." A grand and glorious epoch dawns upon earth in the year 1898. Now read the victories of the conquering hosts in chapters seven to twelve, and you all find that counting each day mentioned therein, as "I have appointed thee a day for a year" they reach 1914. So Joshua took the whole land according to all that the Lord said unto Moses and Joshua, gave it for an inheritance unto Israel, according to their divisions by their tribes. "And the Lord rested from war." Satan's rule is broken, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of his Christ. And when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished. Dan.

We will now return to our own time of 1885, the year according to the type we pass over Jordan—the river of Judgment. Within three days preceding this time we were commanded to prepare victuals, 1883. "I am the bread from heaven," says Jesus. I am the Son of God. If ye eat of this bread ye shall live. We live by faith in the Son of God, for the bread of God is that which cometh down out of heaven, and giveth life unto the world. Many left him for these sayings. Jesus said to his disciples, "Would ye also go away? Lord to whom shall we go, thou hast the words of eternal life, and we have believed, and know that thou art the Holy One of God." "And after these things Jesus walked in Galilee," the same signification as Gilgal.

"Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." "Jesus took bread and blessed it, and brake it, and gave to his disciples and said, Take eat, this is my body. And he took the cup and gave thanks, and gave it to them saying, Drink ye all of it, for this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins. But I say unto you, I will not drink hereafter of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's Kingdom." "Much more then, being now justified by the blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him." For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life; and not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement."

"Thy words were found and I did eat them, and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart, for I am called by thy name, O Lord God of Hosts. Therefore thus saith the Lord, If thou return, then will I bring thee again and thou shalt stand before me, and if thou take out the precious vile, thou shalt be as my mouth—let them return unto thee, but return not thou unto them, and I will make thee unto this people a fenced brazen wall, and they shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee, for I am with thee to save thee and deliver thee, saith the Lord. And I will deliver thee out of the hand of the wicked, and I will redeem thee out of the hand of the terrible." In the day corresponding to the year 1884, Joshua commanded the people to sanctify themselves, and we all know that in that year we examined and researched and found the truth concerning Jesus of Nazareth, "The only begotten Son of God," and we do know that "he died for our sins," and "redeemed us out of the hand of the terrible" by the shedding of his precious blood. Sanctify them, by thy truth. Thy word is truth, for "ye were bought with a price," even with the blood of the Son of God. No wonder, my brother, you have been overwhelmed with articles on the "Sonship" . . . until you called enough for a while.

The Manner of Christ's Second Coming and Events connected with it.

The Lord came from Sinai, and rose up from Seir, and shined forth from Mount Paran and came with ten thousand of his saints. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praises; he had horns coming out of his hands, and there was the hiding of his power. His ways are everlasting, the perpetual hills did bow; I saw the tents of Cushan in affliction, and the curtains of the land of Midian did tremble. Are these texts literal? do they mean just what they say? so we believe and so we affirm. They are burning words of sound sober Truth; uttered by God's holy prophet under the influence of the Holy Spirit. They are a part, and only a part, of the utterances of God's Prophets who wrote and spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit; there is no subject in the Bible described as the second coming of Christ and the manner of his coming. We are well aware of the strong opposition to the Bible view, we entertain of the manner of Christ's second coming. We shall write plain, and give a thus saith the Lord, for every point we name or assume, you will not have any occasion for quarrel with us, but we leave it with you to settle with the word of God.

Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven, this same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go up into heaven. The burden of this passage is this literal personal coming again to earth. Let not your hearts be troubled, ye believe in God, also believe in Me. In My Father's house are many mansions if it were not so I would have told you, I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go away I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am there ye may be also. This passage, like the one quoted before, gives the positive assurance that as true as he went away so sure he would come back again; but says nothing of the manner of his coming, he has left that to be learned from other Scriptures. If you are any way inclined to be sceptical on what we have and shall say on positive Scriptures, ask yourself a few plain questions; where is Sinai, where is Seir, where is Mount Paran? for where these places are located, will appear the Son of God made immortal by a resurrection out from among the dead ones; and with him ten thousand of his saints; more than that, his glory will cover the heavens and the earth will be full of his praise. He having performed the offices of our great High Priest at the right hand of the Father, to which he has been exalted for 1900 years, vacates that position, assumes that of King, and comes back to earth to set up his Kingdom, and to rule the world in righteousness for one thousand years; when he delivers up the Kingdom to God the Father that God may be all in all.

I am aware that a strong feeling exists with some of the household as to the manner of Christ's second coming, but if what we write is not Scripturally true, let it be shown, and where clearly wherein is one mistake, and it shall be acknowledged. It will not be satisfactory for men of ability to say of what we write there, is a pin loose, because we differ from them. To our own Master we stand or fall, we admit that what we write is not all original with us, nevertheless we believe it is strictly true.—The Lord came from Sinai and rose up from Seir, unto them and came with ten thousand of his saints. I need not ask where these localities are located, this scene has not yet transpired, but these are the words of God's inspired prophet, and as we most fully believe, will have a literal and exact fulfillment to the letter. Our care and great anxiety is to be ready to take a part in the transactions of that grand and glorious day which is so near at hand. Blessed and holy is he that shall have part in the first resurrection, on such the second death will have no power. Then shall the Lord my God come and all the saints with thee, and his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives; which is before Jerusalem on the East. This passage does not militate against the one first quoted—the Lord came from Sinai, rose up from Seir and shined forth from Mount Paran, and come with ten thousand of his saints. Previous to this the saints are raised up from their long sleep, the righteous living changed to immortality, caught up to or away to meet their Lord in the air; so shall they ever be with the Lord! With the Scriptures we have quoted and many more of like import we believe that Mount Sinai with his saints is the place where they first strike terra firma. From this they take up their line of march for Jerusalem the Capital of the Kingdom of God. But there are many deeply interesting things uttered by God's holy prophets relating to God's well beloved Son and army of immortalized ones of which we can name but a few; the prophet Isaiah sees him on his line of march, and cries out. Who is this that comes from Edom with dyed garments from Bozrah travelling in the greatness of his strength? The answer is given, I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save; I have trodden the winepress alone and of the people there was none with me.

I will tread them in mine anger and trample them in my fury, for the day of vengeance is in my heart, and the year of my redeemed is come. I need not ask where Edom is or where Bozrah is, the ordinary Bible reader well knows. For the day of vengeance is in my heart, and the year of my redeemed is come. Webster says of vengeance the infliction of pain on another in return for an injury or offence. If the Savior's heart is filled with vengeance against his enemies let it fall where it belongs on Daniel's fourth beast, the Papacy, whose dominion has been taken away; and who is waiting in fearful suspense for the coming of Christ and the setting up of God's holy kingdom which is to stand for ever. Amen and amen.

The prophet asks the question, Who is this that cometh from Edom, etc., he answers his own question and very satisfactorily. If I were to answer all that is said of his march from Sinai to Palestine it would be repeating another (Dr. John Thomas) which I do not care to do, yet I have learned much from his able pen, the incidents that occur down the valley of Arabah, and as they cross over at the head of the gulf of Akabah over into Palestine, are both interesting and profitable, but we are not familiar with the facts or history of that region of country to vouch for their accuracy. They are now in Palestine the land of Judah and his Brethren, and also of the Blessed Son of God, whom he lived and sojourned in the flesh; where he lived, died and was buried, from thence he arose from the dead a mighty triumphant conqueror over death and the grave, was seen of many witnesses, after which he ascended to the right hand of the Father in the heavens, made so after the power of an endless life, first ripe fruits of the harvest of holy ones, many of them that slept come out of their graves after his resurrection and went into the holy city and appeared unto many. The things to be noted are of profound interest, but must be left for another article.

It would be base ingratitude in us if we were to withhold our acknowledgement of the especial blessing of our Heavenly Father and the Holy Spirit while we have been anticipating the coming again of the beloved Son of God, coming in power and great glory with an innumerable company of holy ones, who once suffered with us in the flesh, but made all immortal through the atoning blood of the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

All hail hark! a voice crying King and Lord
Coming with glory from afar,
Blessed harbinger of spirit's day
He is the bright and morning star.

His work and mission to the world
Crowned with diadem Royal Power
To raise the dead, remove the curse,
All things restore, his victory's hour.

On grand, sublimest, lofty car,
That takes in Messiah's train,
All ye bound with peace and joy,
Ride glory, glory, in his train.

Lift up your heads, God the white robe,
Go forth, take each his flambeau bright
To meet the Bridegroom, King and Lord,
Behold he comes in robes of light.

Up unto the righteous quick and dead
Away to meet him in the air,
All clothed in garments white and clean,
The marriage festival to share.

All hail the power of Jesus' Name;
Monarchs and kings before him fall,
Behold forth the many stars crowned
And crown him King and Lord of all.

NAWELL BOND.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., June 11, 1885.

Brother Grant:

Your "privilege" was a signal one in London; and you did bring out God's land marks as to "the tribulation" through the papal—"iron rod"—rule, and signs. There is no symbol for, in precept in association with the horns of "the 4th beast" which goes to the "judgment" on the Gentile world—to be succeeded by the Son of Man's—the saint's—the 5th kingdom. "The 4th"—Dan. ii. 7; Zech. i. 18-22; fill out the measure of Gentile times—leaving no place or time or "thought of God" for another "Anti-Christ." That expose was beautiful, grand—"Godly in Christ Jesus"—worthy the occasion. But allow another equally plain and settled point of Revelation which involves its veracity and consistency—with corresponding certainty, viz: "The 7 times." Lev. xxvi. 28-42; Dan. viii. 14; The 2300 days,—and Matt. xxiv. Mark viii. Luke xxi. Rev. xiii. 10th;—are concurrent and reach "the end" of Gentile times! Therefore, the Restoration from Babylon was only partial—Judah and specimens of Israel—that "loved Zion," etc. Judah's tribeship—"sceptre"—was not to depart till Shiloh come.

By consequence, "Jerusalem" was rebuilt and the Mosaic, Davidic, Solomonic, temple worship, restored; all of that age, by that portion of that people. However, their restoration was not at "the judgment" on the Gentile world; but under their countenance by "Cyrus, Darius," Alexander the Great, and Rome, which had the appointing power to Herod Archelaus, etc. Nay, the most prolonged portion of "the 7 times"—2300 days etc., of Gentiles treading down did reach on 1800 years, to the present. Hence, the rebuilding, at the return from Babylon was only (and partly at that) a restoration in the Mosaic age—"the law;" and order of worship by Moses (confirmed by Joshua and so on to Solomon).

That order, then so restored from Babylon under the superiority of the Gentiles, was broken up by Rome, to complete "the 7 times; 2300 days," and corresponding New Testament prophecy.

Now, omitting particulars, these "times of the Gentiles" are nearing their "end"; hence, the Pope, Grand Turk and subdivisions of old Rome ("the 4th" and last in that series of world governments) are themselves among "the signs of the times"—that you gave.

Thus the prophecy of Ezekiel xxi. 25, 27; xxxvii. 1, 28; etc., becomes (about) due. Thus, "God will remember his covenant with, Jacob, Isaac, Abraham, and the land, "Lev. xxvi. 42-44; Dan. viii. 10; Matt. xxiii. 37-39; Luke xxi. 24; Rom. xi. 25-29; Heb. viii. 8, 12; Rev. xi. 1.

Then the manifold wonders—the antitype of Israel's Exodus from Egypt will appear, Isa. x. 24-26; xi. 10-16; Hos. 2, 15; Micah vii. 15-20.

The resurrection of the dry bones, the union of Israel and Judah, Ezek. xxxvii., and all the opening scenes of the kingdom and age to come, belong there.

"The temple and its order of worship is far better known to the Lord for the Millennial age, than to any or all of us, who now just see a little "through a glass darkly." 1 Cor. xiii.

When we come to see as are seen, we'll adore and glorify God for his divine protection.

Most seem to think of the future, as if at an infinite distance and isolation from the present; but it will come consistently rising out of the present as did the Gospel age from the Mosaic, in accord with the Word.

Imagination takes the lead with some, and the 1000 years shrink to a day or "moment"—as if the Lord is not God and the Great King—whose counsel must stand.

Yours in hope. J. B. COOK.

Conference Report.

The twenty-eighth [illegible] meeting of the Michigan Church Conference was held according to appointment in the Brick School House three and one half miles North of Mendon, St. Joseph Co., commencing Thursday evening June 4, 1885.

The meeting was called to order by the President, D. P. Spencer, and after prayer by Bro. Hoyt, H. S. Miller, L. H. Chaseborough and A. R. Richardson were appointed committee on arrangements.

Bro. Hatch was requested to speak, took for his text "Receiving the end of your faith." 1 Peter i. 9. At the request of Bro. Hatch, Bro. Hoyt followed with appropriate remarks. Friday June 5, social meeting opened at 9:00 a. m. by Bro. Hatch who read from Rom. xii.

At 10:30 Bro. Hoyt spoke from 1 John ii. 28. "And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." At 12:00 m. Bro. Simons took for his subject the Gospel, Text Gal. i. 8. In the evening a sermon from Bro. Hatch on the Gospel of Christ from Rom. i. 15-16.

Saturday June 6. Social meeting opened by Bro. Hoyt at 9:00 a. m., by reading from 1 Thess. iv. v. The brethren and sisters present occupied the time until 10:30, when Bro. Spencer requested that all who felt that they were not living as near to Christ as they should, and were resolved from that time on to follow more closely the example of the Master, to become more obedient to his will and to make their lives more nearly perfect, would rise to their feet. The response was prompt by all the brethren and sisters present.

At 10:45, the business meeting was called to order by the President. The reports of the secretary and treasurer were read and accepted. J. S. Hatch State Evangelist reported thirty-six days labor during February and March. On account of the severe winter the amount of work done was much less than might have been expected had the weather been favorable. The Local Evangelist reported a limited amount of work. The committee on revision of the constitution recommended the following changes which were adopted. Article I was amended by striking out the words "one Vice President for each quarterly conference," substituting "nine" for "five" members of the Executive Board, and providing that the members of the Executive Board may be chosen by acclamation if the conference so directs.

Section 2 of the By-Laws was amended by striking out the clause requiring the Executive Board to meet quarterly. Section 4 in regard to an annual sermon was struck out. Section 6 was amended by substituting "permitted" for "invited" in regard to speaking at the close of a public discourse.

The election of officers resulted as follows. President, D. P. Spencer of Pine Creek, Secretary H. S. Miller of Mendon, Treasurer Wm. McCrodan of Dutton, members of Executive Board, L. C. Chase, L. H. Chaseborough, G. W. Coats, H. C. Hammond, E. Hoyt, J Lemon, G. B. Myers, H. L. Perry, C. H. Richardson.

At 12:45, p. m. Bro. Chase delivered a sermon from Prov. xxi. 3; "Every way of a man is right, in his own eyes: but the Lord pondereth the hearts."

In the evening Bro. Chase gave a clear and candid exposition of the prayer of the Penitent Thief, Luke xxiii. 39-44. Sunday, June 7. Met at 9:00 a. m., for social meeting which was opened by Bro. Simonds reading John xvii.

At 11 o'clock Bro Chase spoke upon "Obedience" from Acts xvi. 30. "What must I do to be saved." After the close of the sermon a number of friends assembled at the water where one brother was buried with Christ in baptism. The brethren returned to the school house at 3 o'clock to partake of the Lord's Supper. The conference closed in the evening with a sermon from Bro. Chase: text Isa. xxv. 9.

At a meeting of the Executive Board, the following appointments were made: State Evangelist J. S. Hatch of St. Joseph, Berrien Co. Local Evangelists L. C. Chase, of Adrian, L. H. Chesseborough of Galesburg, E. Hoyt of Grand Rapids, and James Watkins of Clayton.

This meeting was well attended throughout, the best of feeling prevailed and we think all present enjoyed a pleasant and profitable meeting.

Editor Restitution:

You will please find inclosed two dollars to renew subscription on my paper. Would be so glad if some of the preaching brethren would come here to live and preach for us. I think there would be more good done here according to population than in more thickly settled states, where there is so much preaching. We have but very little preaching here of any kind. It is a pleasant place to live I think. May God bless you in your labors as Editor, and if it be his blessed will enable you to continue in his service till the Master comes.

Yours in hope, MARY A. CLOUGH.

The Pennsylvania Company will sell cheap excursion tickets to and from all stations on the various lines operated by it, on July 2d, 3d and 4th, good to return until July 6th, inclusive.

This will be an excellent opportunity afforded the people living along its numerous lines to visit friends at a distance, or to form pic-nic or excursion parties, for the purpose of enjoying the Nation's Birth-day.

REMEMBER

When sending your remittance that many sums of money are lost every year by the careless manner in which many send their subscriptions to newspapers; so please get a Post Office Money Order, a Bank Draft, an Express Money Order, or have your letter Registered. Do not send Bank Checks as it costs us from twenty-five to forty cents to collect each one. If you are compelled to send postage stamps buy those of the one or two cent denominations. We do not want large ones.

CLOSING SONG.

MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.

Lord dismiss us with thy blessing,
Keep us in the narrow way;
May thy Spirit ever guide us!
May our footsteps never stray.
We are weak, dependent children,
Lean'd on by a Father's hand;
We are prone to wander from thee:
Pilgrims to fair Canaan's land.

'Tis not pride, fame nor power,
All with these must pass away;
But true wisdom we implore thee,
With thy grace from day to day.
We are weak, dependent children,
All our help comes from thee;
Thou art able, thou art willing,
We will put our trust in thee.

When temptation's with us surrounded,
And our hearts are weighed with grief:
Then to thee we fly for refuge.
Thou alone can give relief.
We are weak, dependent children,
Stand us with a watchful eye:
Thou alone can guide, direct us,
On thy word we will rely.

IF OUR FOUR GOSPELS ARE UNTRUSTWORTHY, WHAT THEN?

If our four gospels are untrustworthy, what then? Without much consideration we might be ready to say,—"Nothing would be left; Christ himself would vanish, his teaching would vanish also; and what is reckoned Christianity would disappear." Such a conclusion we might arrive at, even though we knew that here and there, outside these gospels, in Pagan literature, we caught a glimpse of Christ, little more however than the name. So that it becomes a serious question, this which we are about to investigate.

We are all more or less aware of the inroads of rationalism, and that it has been settled long ago by a certain class of thinkers that the four biographies of Christ, by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, are unworthy of credit, because they were written by men who did not witness what they described. The events connected with the life of Christ occurred near the beginning of the present era, but the writers lived at the end of the second century or during the third, and so their testimony is not that of eye-witnesses. Besides, they were filled with philosophical theories—the writer of the fourth gospel, for example, was a mystic—and they took the historical Christ (a religious teacher of Judea) and made him the mouthpiece of their own speculations. But that the actual Christ ever spoke or did what we find recorded, is not for a moment to be supposed. He is no more than a lay figure now expressing one opinion, now another, according to the ideas of the various writers.

Other rationalists are prepared to admit that the records were put together by the companions of Christ; but, as nobody ever witnessed a miracle, every section which of necessity pre-supposes the miraculous, or in which the miraculous is directly postulated—all such is unhistorical and mythical, because opposed to our experience. Regarding Christ there were hundreds of fabulous narratives in circulation, and, unfortunately, the scribes laid many of these under contribution and inserted them in their Life of Christ, inserted for pictorial effect what they know had never happened. Or, at all events, if Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John did not in their histories utilize such legends, their transcribers or editors did, and the result is the same: the miraculous proves the narrative to be untrustworthy.

Now these attacks are being popularized, and the common people made to feel the ground shaking beneath their very feet. Our newspapers and reviews have long since taken up the cause; and, in certain quarters, it is, invariably assumed that the gospel narratives have been exploded; and woe to the writers who accept them as genuine! They are sneered at or commiserated, or ridiculed as old-fashioned, or ignorant of what they choose to call "the higher criticism."

One of the things which one of the (many) divisions of that devoted band insists has been settled is, that miracles never happened because they never ought to have happened. Now, Christianity rests on two miracles, the incarnation and the Resurrection of Christ; and if the miraculous is incredible, what becomes of Christianity? If we have no life of Christ, no Acts of Apostles, what have we? We must face that question.

Well, the most advanced detachment of the Tubingen school has declared the genuineness and authenticity of Paul's epistles to the Romans, to the Corinthians, and to the Galatians to be unimpeachable; and these four epistles are at our service. What can we make of them? At first sight their use appears to be slight; but ere our investigation is concluded, our opinion may undergo a change. What we have to try to do is to cast from our minds all ideas of Christ and of Christianity we have received from the forbidden sources, and with open unbiased minds address ourselves to the allotted Pauline writings. We must not examine them from a Christian standpoint. We must not read into them what we have learned from the Four Gospels or from the Acts. Our Fifth Gospel must be built entirely out of these epistles—epistles which, it is admitted, were in circulation substantially as we have them, within twenty-five or thirty years after the death of Christ.

What do these epistles contain? To answer this question as it ought to be answered would require a volume: all I can do is to select some of the points which I consider of chief importance.

In these trustworthy documents we find repeated reference to the Resurrection of Christ. For example, he was declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead." Rom. i. 4. He "was delivered for our offences and was raised again for our justification." ib. iv. 25. "Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of his Father." ib. vi. 4. "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." ib. viii. 11. "It is Christ that died, yea rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God." ib. viii. 34. See also x. 9, and xiv. 9.

In the epistles to the Corinthians similar language is used; and in chapter xv. of the first epistle the resurrection of Christ is constantly referred to and a remarkable testimony offered. It appears that a section of the believers in Corinth held that there was no resurrection from the dead. How does Paul deal with this error? By resting his whole argument on the resurrection of Christ. In Corinth there were great differences of opinion; but the whole Church was united on this at least—Christ had risen from the dead. Now the Corinthians could not have been witnesses of this: how then could they have received it as a fact so indisputable that it was one of the cardinal articles of their belief? Was there anything in Greek thought to foster such an idea? Ask such a question to any one who is acquainted with even the borderland of Greek philosophy and he will smile at the simplicity. For the resurrection there was neither soil or sustenance in cultured Greece. How then could such a doctrine find lodgment in Corinth—a doctrine so completely antagonistic to all their systems of philosophy? Paul had taught the resurrection when he was in Corinth (see verse 1 of this chapter); and he adduced his own personal testimony, for he had seen Christ after his resurrection, had received commands from the Risen One, and had been made an apostle by him after the resurrection. He adduced the testimony of the other apostles and of the greater portion of five hundred of the Jerusalem church. And the Corinthians were convinced by the testimony he produced. So that by throwing aside the Four Gospels we have not rid ourselves of the miraculous, for we have the resurrection of Christ preached by Paul and accepted by the believers all over the world.

The rationalist is bound to explain how this matter arose, and what peculiar circumstances favored its growth in Jerusalem, for example.

But Paul preached the crucifixion as well as the resurrection of Christ. "We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness." 1 Cor. i. 23. "For I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." ib. ii. 2. "Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us for it is written, 'Cursed is everyone that hangeth on a tree.'" Gal. iii. 13. "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross our Lord Jesus Christ." ib. vi. 14. And it is a Jew who writes thus! He tells us so himself in these very epistles. He calls himself an Israelite, Rom. xi. 1; a Hebrew, 2 Cor. xi. 22; he speaks of his kinsmen according to the flesh who are Israelites, Rom. ix. 3; and he had persecuted and wasted the church of God ere his conversion, Gal. i. 13.

But there is more, much more, in these epistles regarding the death of Christ. He is represented as a propitiation for sins, Rom. iii. 25; He was reconciled for [illegible], ib. iv. 25; he died for the ungodly, ib. v. 6; God delivered him up for us all, ib. viii. 32; He was sacrificed for us, 1 Cor. v. 7; He died for our sins according to the Scriptures, ib. xv. 3; He gave himself for our sins, Gal. i. 4; ii. 20. Here it may be noted, in passing, that the four Gospels are full of expressions identical with these, and (whether genuine or not) make the same astounding declarations.

Let us examine the Pauline utterances to find out what they imply. In all these expressions there is one common idea—an idea ever present to the Jewish mind—viz., that in order to be acceptable to God the sacrifices offered to him must be unblemished. This was one of the fundamental laws of the Jewish economy. A great gulf stood between man and God; and sacrifice—the sacrifice of an innocent unoffending animal, signifying the righteous penalty due to the sinner—was instituted and sinlessness declared to be an essential qualification of the offering. So whatever else was in Paul's mind when he uses such a phrase as "Christ was crucified for us," this at all events is clear: he declares, simply by using such an expression, that Christ possessed this all-important qualification, in other words, he was a Sinless Person. And, let it be noted, he does not put this forward as a thesis to be proved: he is alluding to one of the articles of their common faith, and is not introducing anything new or amplifying what was already held by the early church at this time. Where could this zealous Jew get the idea of a Sinless Man, when every institution connected with his religion taught man's inherent corruption and the impossibility of perfect righteousness before God? Search all literature outside the Bible, and where do you find such a claim advanced? Yet Christ is presented as having this unique character, notwithstanding the fact that in the eyes of a devout Jew it was nothing less than blasphemy to recognize a fellow-man as perfectly holy.

But it is said, Paul was a Gentile as well, and the broader side of his Gentile training would qualify many of his Jewish habits of thought. It is though we regard Paul as a Jew furnished with a broad Gentile culture, the difficulty still remains. For what importance did the Gentiles attach to holiness? As Dr. Matheson says—the Gentile "attached no importance to sinlessness at all. He would have deemed it great impiety to have doubted the physical strength of the immortals: physical strength was the ideal of his aspiration; but he did not himself hesitate to attribute to the immortals the most ignoble vices. He had no horror of sin as a moral principle. If St. Paul had possessed nothing but a Gentile consciousness, and had he designed to create a Christ out of his own imagination, the Christ his imagination would have produced would have been not only different from, but the very converse of, the one he has depicted. He would have been a man whose life revealed the force of the Divine, not by his power of self-surrender, but by his power of self-aggrandisement; not by pouring out his own blood, but by shedding the blood of his enemies.... He has presented to the world a Christ who is not the natural outgrowth either of the past history of Judaism or of the past history of heathendom." Put briefly then, it was morally impossible for a Jew to depict a sinless man, and sinlessness was the very quality with which the Gentile would not have invested his hero. Yet this was the conception of Christ that was current within thirty years after his death, current throughout the Roman world! It was an accepted fact among the Christian communities that the Founder of their faith had lived a blameless life, and that he had died for the sins of the world. But there is more: they believed that though in accordance with law and as a fulfilment of the requirements of the law, the sacrifice was voluntary. "He gave himself for our sins that he might deliver us from this present evil world." Gal. i. 4. "The Son of God loved me and gave himself for me." ib. ii. 20. Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor that ye through his poverty might be rich." 2 Cor. viii. 9.

And again I call attention to the fact that whether or not the Four Gospels are genuine, they represent Christ as going on his life's journey with the weight of the knowledge of the dark end before him. He is there represented as a willing Sufferer, as One who freely offered himself for the world's salvation.

But there is still more. Christ is not only the great propitiation, the risen and everliving Savior, but he is the Source of life! Ayo, of eternal life! Oh, what a delusion to suppose that if we could get rid of the four Gospels all the miracles regarding Christ would vanish! Taking our friends at their word we have found miracle upon miracle. The miraculous is in the air. One surprise comes after the other until we are at a loss to imagine anything more wonderful in store for us. What can be more astounding than that the Son of Man is immortal, and has the power to communicate immortality to whom he will? Here are Paul's words in our fifth Gospel:—"For if by one man's offence death reigned by one, much more they who receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by (dia) One, Jesus Christ." Rom. v. 17. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through (en) Jesus Christ our Lord." ib. vi. 23. "For as in Adam all die, even so in (en) Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. xv. 22. "He who raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by (dia) Jesus and shall present us with you." 2 Cor. iv. 14. He who dieth no more; He who can ransom from the power of death; He who can bestow on his followers the unfading crown of immortality must be Divine. But there are other testimonies. He was "born of a woman born under the law," Gal. iv. 4; but he is also "Son of God", Rom. i. 3; 2 Cor. i. 19; Gal. ii. 20; God's "own Son," Rom. viii. 3, 32; "the Image of God," 2 Cor. iv. 4; "the Lord from heaven," 1 Cor. xv. 47; "by whom are all things," 1 Cor. viii. 6. And what are we to say of such expressions as:—"Grace to you and peace from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ," Rom. i. 7, and occurring in other three passages, 1 Cor. i. 3; 2 Cor. i. 2, Gal. i. 3? Again; "There is but one God, the Father, by whom are all things and we in him; and one Lord, Jesus Christ, by whom are all things and we by him." 1 Cor. viii. 6. "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Spirit be with you all." 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

God sending his own Son—the Maker of all—the Rich One becoming poor—what do such terms contain but the mystery of incarnation? And you cannot imagine a Jew joining together the name of Deity and that of a mere mortal, however good—"God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ." It would be blasphemy. Yet Paul speaks quite calmly of the divinity of Christ, both in figures of speech, not in highly-wrought passionate poetry, but in the most logical prose: not as a proposition to be proved, but as a well-known article of their faith.

The teaching of the Four Gospels agrees on this point also. The Fourth Gospel, for example, is full of it. Jesus is there represented as saying—"He that hath seen me hath seen the Father;" "I and my Father are one;" "I am the Son of God;" "I came forth from the Father and am come into the world;" "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die;" "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life;" "I am the bread of life;"—let these suffice as samples.

And this same One whom Paul declares to have ascended into heaven, Rom. viii. 34, was expected to return. The Corinthians, for example, are said to have been "waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," 1 Cor. i. 7, to raise his sleeping saints from death, to crown them and the living with immortality, and to reign with them until he hath put all enemies beneath his feet, 1 Cor. xv. 25; and this kingdom which is "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit," Rom. xiv. 17, will realise the promise made to the Jewish nation, for Paul speaks of Christ as being born "of the seed of David according to the flesh," Rom. i. 3, and of him being Abraham's seed, Gal. iii. 16, who is to bless all nations; to fulfil the promise made to Abraham and to David; to set up that universal and holy kingdom into which no impurity can enter, Gal. v. 19-21; and "as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.... and if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." Gal. iii. 27, 29.

Again the Four Evangelists are in complete harmony with our Fifth Gospel. They state that are Jesus appeared in man's likeness the angel declared to Mary.—"He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." They state that he was born King of the Jews: that in presence of Pilate he claimed to be king of the Jews and that he was crucified as King of the Jews. They state also that he promised to return and reward his faithful followers. Whether the narratives are genuine or not, issued in what century you please, the writers needed to invent nothing on these points. Such beliefs were in the air and accepted by the early Christians.

Many other passages I had noted for review—the field is such a magnificent one—but I must forbear: those who find the task congenial may pursue the inquiry for themselves, and they will be rewarded at every step. Ere concluding just let us see what our position is. By critically inspecting the certified documents we have found that neither Christ or Christianity disappears. All the great doctrines have been preserved to us in our Fifth Gospel, in the letters to the Romans, to the Corinthians, and to the Galatians, written by Paul and admittedly in circulation, substantially as we have them, all over the world from 25 to 30 years after the death of Christ, at a time when many persons must have been living who would not have allowed any one to develop the teaching of Christ. The Incarnation and the Resurrection remain; the unique character of the Master; his perfect purity; his humility; his self-sacrifice; his poverty; his work on earth; his death for sin; his ascension; his power and promise to give life eternal; his Messiahship and his coming again to subdue all things unto himself—all these remain though the Four Gospels were to disappear: all these were believed by those to whom Paul wrote. So that with all his ability the Rationalist has not removed a single difficulty. Let the Four Gospels go; he has still to explain how Christianity became a fact. And I hope that our scrutiny, necessarily limited and merely suggestive on many themes of the deepest moment, may, on the one hand, help to expose the pretentiousness (to use no harder word) of some writers who are for ever dinning into our ears that the Gospels are a series of exploded myths; and, on the other, serve to show that our faith fears not the most searching criticism.—J. Mill, in Messenger.

Tablet from the Temple of Herod.

While many ruined cities had been explored, and various memorials of the past brought to light, Jerusalem, the holy city, has been passed by. To do away with this reproach to a Christian people, and in order to make a scientific exploration of the Holy Land, the "Palestine Exploration Fund" was formed in England, and a party of royal engineers was sent out to explore the ruins of Jerusalem.

Much of interest was the result in this investigation; but very few memorials of the past, or inscriptions, were brought to light. On examining the east wall of Herod's Temple, on one of the stones was found three letters painted in red. On stones in other parts incised characters were seen representing the letters H and J.

On making this discovery the exploration party communicated with the Palestine Exploration Fund, and the late Emmanuel Deutsch, an Oriental scholar then employed in the British Museum, was sent to examine the inscriptions. He pronounced the characters Phœnician, some of which were quarry-signs, but the exact meaning could not be determined.

The most important of the discoveries was made by Clermont Ganneau, who was a commissioner of the society. While examining a portion of the temple he had occasion to pass through a grave-yard near the spot, and noticing a slab on the ground, he cleared away the soil on its face, and found there an inscription in Greek—not pure Greek, but such as was used in Jerusalem. On deciphering the inscription he found it read, "No foreigner to proceed within the partition wall and inclosure around the sanctuary; whoever is caught in the same will on that account be liable to incur death."

Josephus, in describing the temple, says, "When you went through these first cloisters into the second court of the temple, there was a partition made of stone all around, whose height was three cubits; its construction was very elegant; upon it stood pillars at equal distances from one another, declaring the law of purity, some in Greek and some in Latin letters, that no foreigner should go within that sanctuary; for that second court of the temple was called the sanctuary, and was accessible to by fourteen steps from the first court."

Here, then, after being buried nineteen centuries, came to light once more this warning tablet of Herod's Temple, which forbade all foreigners to penetrate beyond the court of the Gentiles. In this court were the animals required for the sacrifices, and other sacrificial requirements which were sold for the purpose. The money-changers sat here and once when they intruded beyond the limit the Savior drove them out of the temple.

On one occasion Paul took with him to Jerusalem an Ephesian named Trophimus. It is not known whether he introduced him to the Israelites' court or not, but this was the supposition of the Jews. A great uproar ensued, and Paul was roughly handled by the mob, being rescued with great difficulty by the Roman guard.

This tablet explains a passage in the Epistle to the Ephesians to the effect that Christ had "broken down the middle wall of partition between us;" that is Christianity was offered to Jews and Gentiles alike. Paul had seen this tablet threatening death to all strangers that passed beyond the partition which separated the court of the Gentiles from that of the Israelites. The tablet, placed on the partition, was plainly visible, and doubtless was in the apostle's mind when he used the simile.

In the Temple of Solomon only Jews were admitted, but when Herod rebuilt the temple, anxious to conciliate the Egyptians, Romans and Greeks residing in Jerusalem, he added an outer court in which they could assemble, but the warning tablets prepared them for the consequences if they penetrated beyond.

It will be seen, by reference to the tablet, that all the letters are in capitals; and, with few exceptions, the words are not divided, but run into each other. This tablet is the most important of the discoveries yet made in Jerusalem.—Demorest's Monthly.

A Picture from the Holy Land.

In London we have lately been saturated with rain, and many thought that they had more than enough of it. But few persons have an idea of the fearful straits to which the poor people of Palestine are put from year to year during the dry season, and more especially if the drought last beyond the usual time. We translate the following letter, dated April 18, 1885, from a Jewish paper published at Pesth and called Pesther Judische Zeitung.

"It would be useless to try and give you an idea of the boundless joy that has been reigning in our city for the last few days. As Europeans you cannot form a notion how a heavy rainfall is apt to change the deepest dejection to the highest degree of jubilation. But you must consider that if in our country the rain keeps off when wanted, we are not only in danger of a famine; but, what is much worse, we have to endure frightful pains of thirst. And this year the rain was waited for in vain for a great length of time.

"The cisterns in the city were perfectly dry, and outside Jerusalem there were but few wells with any water in them. It was heartrending to see the people, who cannot pay much for that valuable commodity, turned away with empty jugs by the traders who supply water to the city from the large Ayoub cisterns. Things had come to such a pass that the needy who could only just manage to earn a mouthful of bread, could not earn a drink of water. Heartless usurers had bought up the contents of a few cisterns situated outside the city, and they sold water at the most extortionate prices. The poor gave their clothes and what few articles of any value they might have had left in their hands, for a small jug full of water.

"To make things worse, the heat was greater than had been experienced for many years. Depressed, dejected, famished with thirst, if it may be expressed thus, the majority of people went about like walking shadows. The Jewish communities held fasts and days of penance and humiliation, the Christians and Mohammedans set public processions on foot, and in all churches and mosques rain was prayed for day and night; yet it would not come, and it seemed as if God were more than ever angry with us.

"A fortnight ago, some thick black clouds made their appearance on the sky. Thunder and lightning commenced which made our very hearts thrill. A comforting and blessed rain came down upon our city, filling all cisterns, giving new life to all the seeds, and calling forth joy, gladness and hope everywhere. It lasted without interruption for ten days, forming regular ponds, and from every feeling breast—the usurers, of course, excepted—a shout of gratitude rose up to the Almighty. The Ayoub cisterns, called Bir Ayoub, that is Joab's fountain, by the Arabs, overflowed and formed a perfect brook, running through hill and valley, and gladdening the heart of young and old."—Israel's Watchman.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:
THE RESTITUTION advocates the full restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King, and the immortal saints as joint rulers with him in the government of the earth; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead, the immortalization of the righteous, and the annihilation of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the simple gospel, repentance, and remission of sins through the forgiveness of sins, and of only life through the living Mediator.

SAVING FAITH.—PART VI.

PUTTING ON CHRIST.

The disciples of John the Baptist believed that the kingdom was at hand, and that he who should come after John would be the Christ, the Anointed for the throne of the Kingdom, and they become Christians by adding to this, the faith that Jesus is the Christ, and being baptized into his name. It is that make them Christians. Now the same faith, and the same baptism will make Christians now; and unless we have the same faith and baptism as they had, the one faith and the one baptism, we are not of the same One body.

It may be asked here, why mention baptism as needful to make us of the One body? Because baptism is the divinely appointed way by which believers "put on Christ." "So many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ," Gal. iii. 27. Whether we acknowledge it or no, baptism was deemed of great importance in the days of the apostles. It was a putting on Christ. When Peter startled the Jews who heard him on the first Pentecost after the Lord's ascension, he said unto them "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ," etc., Acts ii. 38. When the Samaritans believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized" Acts viii. 12. Baptism is so natural a sequence of faith in the things concerning the kingdom and the name, that it followed as a matter of course in those days. When Philip met the eunuch of Ethiopia, he "preached unto him Jesus," and that preaching called forth the spontaneous observation, "See, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?" Acts viii. 35, 36. This shows that baptism had, in some way or other, a divinely appointed place in preaching Jesus.

John's disciples at Ephesus had been baptized unto John's baptism before Paul found them, but when they heard that he who should come after John was Jesus the Christ, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. The connection between the cause and effect does not seem very clear to us now-a-day; but it appears to have been sufficiently plain and obvious to those who heard the word of salvation in the days of the Apostles. It is said they were baptized into Christ, or into the name of Jesus, or into the name of the Lord. This mention of the name of Jesus Christ, or the name of the Lord, leads us to connect baptism with "the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ," which were preached, as we have seen, in connection with "the things concerning the kingdom of God."

"Know ye not," says Paul, Rom. vi. 3, "that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life (as he does). For if we have been planted together (with him) in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Baptism into Jesus Christ is here called a baptism into death, and the object or the reason for baptism is given that we may walk in the newness of the resurrection-life, even as he was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father. I cannot give a better reason for baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, and no better is needed. When one attains to a knowledge of the glorious resurrection-life in the kingdom of God, and wishes to escape the bondage of corruption and to become a joint-heir of the kingdom along with Christ, there is one course open for him, viz., to be baptized into the name of Christ. If any of my readers has hitherto thought that baptism is of no consequence, let him ponder well on these things, and on the saying of our Lord also, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God." John iii. 5.

But observe this also, that all the cases of baptism recorded in the Scriptures are baptisms of believers. There is not great need for enquiry into this point; for all who practice the baptism of infants do so on the ground that they are the children of believing parents, or that they are adopted "godchildren" of the following sponsors. But what if the sponsors or parents are unbelievers? Then of course the baptism of the child is from the very first vaunted to be the real requisite of faith! Baptism is in our days looked on rather as the sprinkling the object to be a member of an ecclesiastical corporation, than a ceremony on Christ or a being baptized into him who is dead. But in most down and liveth evermore, and the mode of initiation into the candidature for the ecclesiastical membership is so different from the apostolic mode of baptism that the terms that express the one are utterly incompetent to express the other. Baptism was therefore proved to a burial with Christ in order to share in his life in baptism; "the old man" was buried, and for ever doomed to rot and mortify, with all his lusts and deed, but I suppose there is not a man living who could discern an resemblance of this either in the mode or design of the baptism of infants. I plead for a return to the apostolic mode and design, and also that the person baptized should not rely on any other man's faith for his own Christian standing. If baptism be merely with a view to visible church-membership here, I do not much care how it is done or to whom it is administered; but if it be, as the apostle calls it, a baptism into Christ, then the faith of the things concerning the kingdom of God and belief that Jesus is the Christ are essentially required previous to baptism. Whoever would be built upon a rock, must understand and believe the message which Jesus preached, that the kingdom of God is at hand, and believe and acknowledge him to be what he claimed to be, viz. the Christ of God, the Messiah, the King of Israel. I hope that the preceding observations on the meaning of these terms render it unnecessary to refer to that subject. A mere use of the word is not sufficient, without a clear comprehension and faith of their true meaning. If a person says, "I believe the message of God's Son, that the kingdom of God is at hand, and I believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God," there is a great probability that he is making an erroneous statement, if, at the time, he does not know the true meaning of the terms contained in that confession.

I give a prominence to baptism, because it has a prominence in the Scriptures. I am insisting on baptism, but it is on believers' baptism. It matters not whether "the subject of baptism" be an infant or an adult, if the faith be absent. I know many people who were baptized in their adult years, but I cannot call their baptism believer's baptism, because, they did not (like the Samaritans) believe the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, when they were baptized. Many of them think lightly of God's promises to the fathers, and of the words spoken before of the holy prophets 2 Peter iii. 2, and have never considered what was the true primitive Christian faith, in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Many of them I number among my friends and acquaintances whom I esteem highly; but I press upon them this—and that all the more strongly, because I esteem them and love them—that they are not in the right, true, safe position unless they possess the primitive faith; and that their baptism is not valid, because administered to persons wanting the true primitive faith. Some friends in this position are dearer to me still, because they so far possess the primitive faith, and I rejoice that those that acknowledge it are more and more increasing in numbers, and in their love for it; and to these I submit, in all kindness, and for the honor of him whom they as well as I call Master, that they ought thoroughly and candidly to examine their position, and see and know whether they are witnessing for primitive faith and the Messiahship of Jesus according to his appointment. Let them take the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ to understand by the primitive disciples before baptism, and compare them with their own faith before baptism, and see whether they correspond. I say, compare the confession with their own faith—not their notions—or speculative opinion before baptism, and prove and see whether their baptism was not the baptism of a believer of "the kingdom of God, and those things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ."

There yet remains one matter to be treated of, pertaining to "the name of Jesus Christ," that does not yield in importance to any point already referred to, viz.—

JESUS THE MESSIAH DIED FOR OUR SINS, AND IS NOW AN HIGH-PRIEST IN THE HEAVENLY SANCTUARY.

If God's kingdom were to come and find us in our sins, we could not inherit it; for it is a kingdom of righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. If we should be found in our sins when the Lord comes, we should be shamed away from him at his coming, as Adam and Eve were shamed away from the presence of the Lord when they sinned. But the Christ died for our sins, and we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins. We are naturally under the sentence of death on account of sin. The wages of sin is death. If Christ had not died we must have died for ever. But the Son of God took part of flesh and blood, that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil: and deliver them who through fear of death were all their life-time subject to bondage. He was made for a little while lower than the angels for the suffering of death, that he, by the grace of God, should taste death for every man, Heb. ii. In nothing does the wickedness and malignity of fallen human nature appear so strikingly as in the crucifixion of the Righteous One, the Prince of life, God's well-beloved Son; and nowhere is the love of God so abundantly shown as in his giving his Son, and exposing him to the temptations of humanity, and the sufferings of sinners, and the oppressive fear of death, and death itself, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life. Well may we take up the latter-day confession of Israel and say, "He was wounded for our transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was laid upon him: and by his stripes we are healed," Isa. iii. "Among the first things" is to some—not "first of all" but "among the first things") which Paul declared to the Corinthians was this, that Christ died for their sins, according to the Scriptures, 1 Cor. xv. 3. And so we must hold this "among the first things" most surely believed by us. But we must believe that it was "the Christ" that died for our sins. It was he of whom the Scriptures foretold that he should die for the transgressions of Israel. It was he who should be the everlasting king of Israel. We use the word "Christ" as a mere personal name; but it was not so understood in the synagogue at Corinth, when Paul entered it, reasoning and persuading the Jews and the Greeks. We can get a good idea of Paul's declaration of "the first things" by comparing Acts xviii. 1-5 with chap. xvii. 1-3. Paul's "manner" is described in chap. xvii. He "reasoned with them out of Scriptures, opening and alleging that the Christ must needs have suffered, and risen from the dead; and that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is the Christ." I write "the Christ" because it is universally agreed by the learned that that is the proper translation of the original text. Dr. Campbell of Aberdeen states that the article "the" is the almost invariable prefix to "Christ" in the original text of the Gospel and the Acts, and laments that the omission in the English translation makes the term "Christ" to be considered rather as a proper name or surname of than as an appellative, or name office. The Jews were looking for the Son of David who should be their deliverer and everlasting king, and the title by which they most commonly referred to him was "The Christ." Paul went into the synagogue and, finding there the common Jewish faith concerning the Christ and the Kingdom of God, he without bringing at first into view who the Christ was) reasoned with them out of the Scriptures that the Christ must needs suffer and rise again from the dead, (comp. Acts xvii. 3 with Luke xxiv. 46. The crucifixion of Jesus was a stumbling block in the way of the Jews acknowledging him to be the Christ. Paul wisely and warily—all was this manner—came first to the prophets that the destined Messiah of Israel must suffer death, and rise from the grave, before sitting down on the throne of his father David; and, when he had thus prepared them for the further knowledge he added the proof that Jesus of Nazareth, who had died and been buried, is most certainly the long looked for Messiah, and that he is alive for evermore. That Paul did not bring at first into view that the Messiah had appeared, and that Jesus of Nazareth is he, is established by reference to Luke's account of Paul's preaching in the synagogue at Corinth. It is said Acts xviii. 4, that "he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks," but we are not here told what he reasoned. Luke leaves us to understand it from his immediately preceding account of Paul's manner: but ver. 5 is significant as showing how he had, for Sabbath after Sabbath, taken care to abstain from all direct mention of Jesus, for it says, "when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in the spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus is the Christ." Till that time it appears they had heard him patiently; but now it is added that they opposed themselves and blasphemed. But let us be gladdened and rejoice that when the Christ died, it was for sins, and that he was buried, and that he rose again from the dead, seeing that by this we have opened for us the way to a glorious immortality in the kingdom of God. When Paul sets himself to demolish some Corinthian errors, he puts the death, and burial, and resurrection of Christ in the foreground, as indispensable to forgiveness of sins and inheritance of the promises, and then he goes on holding up item after item of the gospel as he preached it unto them. The death of Christ for sins, his burial, and resurrection; the future resurrection of the dead by him at his coming; his subsequent reign till the end comes: his subjugation of all enemies during his reign, and the destruction of death the last enemy: the delivering up the kingdom to the Father, that God may be all in all; the kind of body the resurrected saints shall possess, and the glory they are to receive to fit them for inheriting the kingdom of God; the transformation of the faithful contemporaneously with the resurrection; and the Church's victory over the gates of hell through Jesus Christ the Lord. So great and extensive was the range of doctrine preached by Paul at Corinth. So great and glorious is the high prospect before us, if we be in Christ and abide in him, and be found in him, having the righteousness of God, which is by faith in Christ Jesus. Well might the Apostle say, "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service," Rom. xii. And well may the redeemed ascribe all worthiness to the Lamb, and sing—

"Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation.
And hast made us unto our God kings and priests;
And we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. v. 9, 10.

But it is not enough that we gaze at him on the cross. We must do this, and we must believe rather that he is the person whom the cross declares him to be, "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews." He went down into the dark valley of the shadow of death, as the good Shepherd who laid down his own life for his sheep. But he did not remain there. It was not possible he could be holden of death. He passed down into the valley, as many, perhaps most, of his flock had to do; but in his coming out a glorious and a mighty conqueror there is given a full pledge that his flock shall come out of that valley too. And not only that, but he ascended into heaven, and presented his own blood in God's presence in the heavenly sanctuary, and he offered, with acceptance, the one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God. The blood of the yearly sacrifices, under the law, had no atoning efficacy till sprinkled by the high priest on the mercy-seat within the veil, and the worshippers waited without till the high priest should come forth to bless them. So Christ entered once for all, and by one offering of himself hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified, and confirms that look for him shall he appear in a little while, unto the saving of the soul. Yes, in a little while and the coming one will come, and the justified-by-faith shall live, but if any man draw back from the patient waiting for of Christ, they will not receive the promise.—Heb. iv. 14-16, x. 36, 39.

Of the things thus brought under notice, this is the sum. The divinely appointed way of salvation is—

1. Believe what God has revealed for faith in order to Salvation. No other word has saving efficacy. We cannot be saved without a sincere faith; but this sincere faith must take hold of the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation.

2. Believe that God is to establish the kingdom of Israel anew, gloriously, and for ever, under the government of David's Immortal Son, the Son of God, and that that Divine blessings bestowed upon them shall overflow to the Gentiles, who shall do homage unto him who shall reign in Mount Zion and Jerusalem.

3. Believe that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ, or the Messiah; that is, that he is the anointed, or destined monarch for the throne of his kingdom.

4. Believe that this kingdom is near to come, and therefore wait and watch for the coming of Christ in this (his) kingdom.

5. Believe that Jesus, the destined King of the Jews, the Son of God, died for our sins, and was raised for our justification, that he ascended into the heavens, and that there, as a priest having power of the endless life, he made an offering for sin, by presenting his own blood in the presence of God; that he is the Lord that hath power of hades and death, and will give eternal life to all that call on his name.

And, thirdly, Be baptized. Baptism into the name of the Lord Jesus Christ can only take place after faith in these things. When one believes these things he should, like Paul, arise and be baptized, and wash away his sins, calling on the name of the Lord.

If space had permitted, we might have gone into the practical deductions which naturally follow from the various positions advanced, and demonstrated how eminently such a faith, duly realized, is calculated to incite us to repentance, to morality, to a growing likeness to our Master and Redeemer, whether in his filial trust, and reverence, and obedience of God, in the purity and nobleness of his character, his sympathy for the fallen and the erring, or in his willingness to help them, and give himself for them, or in preaching to them the gospel of the kingdom. The time is short: therefore we must be self-denying, and holy, and painstaking, and loving, and diligent, otherwise we cannot make our calling and election sure, nor turn many to righteousness. The saints who have lived since the exaltation of our blessed Lord, have greater privileges than those who lived before he came; and it is well to notice this, and think often and earnestly upon it. Those who lived previously to his coming, believed that God would establish his kingdom for ever in accordance with the words of his Holy Prophets, and that whatever might be the vicissitudes in the fortunes of David's family, yet David should never want a man to sit upon the throne of that kingdom—the throne of the house of Israel, Jer. xxxiii. 17. We know who that man is, and we know he is reserved in the heavens until the times of the glorious resurrection. Acts iii. 21. His name has been held forth as the refuge from all danger, and the guarantee of all promised glory; and we have been called to be baptized in to that name, and so put on Christ. We know that "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. James v. 9, and that he is now delaying it, at least in part, on account of the long-suffering to sinners. Let us therefore lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and look unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith, who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of God. Let us therefore labor to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief

We need the money due us. If your subscription has expired please send us the money to renew soon.

We must defer notices of some books that have come to hand till next week.

FROM Eld. D. T. Taylor we have received some interesting items relative to the Afghans and the Jews that we have not room for in this issue. Will place them before our readers in a future number. Thanks to the sender.

ON Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this week the Pennsylvania Company will sell Excursion tickets at half fare for the round trip for any distance not exceeding 200 miles. See advertisement in another column.

FROM two consecutive numbers of the New York Independent, June 18, and June 25, we clip the following editorial brorities on the marked change that is taking place in Europe and America regarding the doctrine of eternal punishment. In a private letter to the Editor of THE RESTITUTION, Mr. Edward White alludes to his election to the chairmanship of the Congregational Union of England and Wales by the vote of 506 to 290 as an evident sign of coloration of his views of Conditional Immortality. The huge errors that Papal Rome has foisted into popular creeds will vanish when brought into the clear light of God's revealed truth. The following is what the Independent says:—

Dr. Pressense, writing in the Christian World of conferences of Protestant ministers in France, says:

"The most notable feature of the late pastoral conference, as it appears to me, was this: that no one was found to stand up for the doctrine of eternal punishment, at least in its old form. The greater part of the assembly were divided into adherents of Universalism, pure and simple, and of conditional Universalism, which allows the possibility of man's casting away his soul, but never excludes the possibility of repentance, believing that the God of love will always retain his prerogative of saving that which is lost, but will never abrogate the great laws of his moral kingdom. I enter into no discussion of these various doctrines. I merely bring them before your readers as representing the present beliefs of the Evangelical Churches of France. They are very significant of the change which has passed over the Christian thought of our day. In view of the formidable array of modern infidelity, true believers are uniting their forces to guard the ramparts of the besieged city, and are taking anew as their watchword the famous saying of Irenæus: 'In necessariis unitas, in dubiis libertas' in omnibus caritas.'"

We gave last week the statement of Dr. Pressense that the old form of the doctrine of eternal punishment is no longer held by the evangelical ministry in France. The election of the Rev. Edward White to the chairmanship of the Congregational Union of England and Wales may be worth noting in this connection, he being by far the most pronounced and prominent advocate of the doctrine of conditional immortality. He is a thoroughly evangelical minister, if we except this particular divergence; but the election of such a man, by a vote of 506 out of 720, indicates that a decided majority of Congregationalists there do not regard this particular hypothesis in eschatology to be a sufficient barrier to the choice of a chairman for the year. Some years ago, the late J. Baldwin Brown, whose views were in the direction of Restorationism, was selected to fill the same position. These facts indicate that there has been, within a generation, a marked change of attitude regarding the question of the destiny of men dying impenitent. In this connection it may be noted that the Congregationalist declares that at Andover the hope of a probation in the next life, for those to whom the historic Christ has not been adequately presented in this life, is now taught unhesitatingly.

FAITH IN GOD'S WORD.

The word of God liveth and abideth forever. 1 Peter i. 23.

The Bible purports to be a revelation from God, through the medium of prophets, apostles, and his Son Jesus Christ. "Thus saith the Lord" is the stamp which it puts upon itself. The first question to be asked is whether this claim is true; and, if this question be answered in the affirmative, that, so far as the faith is concerned is the end of all questions, with the exception of those that relate to the meaning of the language used in the Bible. What we are to do with the book, after having accepted it as of divine authority, is to read it, understand it so far as we can, and then believe what it says. God himself is the best possible authority; and what he says must be true. He can neither lie, nor be deceived; and, if we believe that the Holy Scriptures contain a record of his sayings through the inspiration of men, and through the teaching of Christ, then, in order to be consistent with ourselves, we must believe in the truth and authority of the sayings, and accept them as the infallible rule of faith and practice in respect to all the matters which they embrace.

We are strongly of the opinion that this is just the sort of faith for men to have, whether as preachers in the pulpit or hearers in the pew; whether as actors in the duties and work of life, or as persons hearing the summons of death; whether as Christians rejoicing in the hope of glory, or as penitents coming to God through Christ for forgiveness and salvation. It is the only sort of faith that possesses real power either to rule the life or bless the soul with its comforts. The power of the Bible to affect and move the human heart depends in part upon the ideas which it contains, and in part—and by no means a small part—upon the authority which stands behind these ideas. The ideas are great and good, whatever may be their source; yet, being God's ideas, his thoughts, doctrines, and rules for man, they are of infinite moment. When he speaks let the world hear. When he commands let men obey. A revelation from God is imperial in its source. It is his prerogative to dogmatize for humanity. Reason is never more reasonable than when it believes what God has said, and because he said it. A revelation from him ascertained is the end of all dispute touching the matter to which it refers.

If one refuses to believe that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, then, so long as he thus refuses, he will not apply to Christ for salvation, and will not be saved by him. Belief in the doctrine of redemption by his blood is the first condition of profit from that doctrine. So, if one substitutes blind and unintelligent laws and forces for the Christian doctrine of God's direct and immediate providence, alike general and particular, and the former only because it is the latter, and thus manages in thought to get God out of the world; he will practically have no God for the world, certainly none to whom he can pray, or whose forgiveness he can ask or enjoy. If one has a theory of inspiration which divorces God from the words of the Bible, then those words have lost their power with him as divine words and no one can play with them at his pleasure. If one denies the Bible doctrine of future punishment, then he assumes to know more on this subject than the author of the Bible, and in effect cancels that fearful emergency in human condition, for the relief of which Christ came down from Heaven. There was no need of the atonement made on the cross, and there is no need of pardon, if the punishment of sin be a mere fable.

The plain dictate of common-sense is that if we accept the Bible at all as of divine authority, we should accept it absolutely, believing what it says and doing what it commands. We must not in the same breath accept and dispute a divine revelation. He who is afraid of his doubts, and yet has not the courage of faith, is in a sad plight. He is troubled with the one, and not comforted by the other. There is no danger that we shall believe God's Word too strongly. It is only when one believes it with all his heart that he will be able to say from his experience: "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Then he can look up to the great Father of spirits and say: "In the multitude of my thoughts within me thy comforts delight my soul." Ah! then the Bible, with its high authority and sweet message of love, is a power alike to govern and to comfort. Those who believe with conditions, qualifications, modifications and reservations, and, hence, mingle what faith they have with a set of half-way cavils, which at best are semi-disbeliefs, and may be even worse, know very little of this power. They do not treat the Word of God in a way to get the power out of it. Its blessings may lodge in other souls, but not in theirs. They are too wise in themselves to be the best sort of believers. They know too much in and of themselves to be well taught of God.

If there is any one thing which we would emphasize more than another, that one thing is simple, child-like, trustful, unhesitating, loving and complete faith in the Word of God. This will do more for the soul, for its sanctification and its joy, than all the speculations of the speculators that ever lived or died. It will answer were they to live a thousand years. It will place the soul in the guest chamber of the great King, and feed it with manna that comes from the skies. Try it, ye doubters and cavilers, and after that you will have no heart to try anything else.—N. Y. Independent.

Christ the Exalted Redeemer.

"Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins." Acts v. 31.

"Behold, my servant shall deal prudently, he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high."

Observe the three words, "exalted and is extolled, and be very high;" language pants for expression. Our Lord is now exalted in being lifted up from the grave, lifted up above all angels, and principalities, and powers. The Man Christ Jesus is the nearest to the eternal throne, ay, the Lamb is before the throne. "And I beheld, and, lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain." He is in his own state and person exalted, and then by the praise rendered him he is extolled, for he is worshiped and adored by the whole universe. All praise goes up before him now, so that men extol him, while "God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name, which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Deep were his sorrows, but as high are his joys. It is said that around many of the lochs in Scotland the mountains are as high as the water is deep; and so our Lord's glories are immeasurable as were his woes. What a meditation is furnished by these two-folds and incalculable heights and depths! Our text says that he shall "be very high." It cannot tell us how high. It is inconceivable how great and glorious in all respects the Lord Jesus Christ is at this moment. Oh, that he may be very high in our esteem! He is not yet exalted and extolled in any of our hearts as he deserves to be. I would we loved him a thousand times as much as we do, but our whole heart goeth after him, does it not? Would we not die for him? Would we not set him on a throne as high as seven heavens, and think that we had not done enough for him, who is now our all in all, and more than all.

You notice what is said, concerning the Christ, as the most astonishing thing of all, "So shall he sprinkle many nations." Now is it the glory of our risen Lord, at this moment, that his precious blood is to save many nations. Before the throne men of all nations shall sing, "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us unto God by thy blood." Not the English nation alone shall be purified by his atoning blood, but many nations shall be sprinkled with his reconciling blood, even as Israel of old was sprinkled with the blood of sacrifice. We read in the tenth chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews, at the twenty-second verse, of "having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience," and this is effected by that precious blood by which we have been once purged so effectually that we have no more consciousness of sins, but enter into perfect peace. The blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctified to the purifying of the flesh, and much more doth the blood of Christ purge our conscience from dead works to serve the living God. The sprinkling of the blood was meant also to confirm the covenant: thus Moses "sprinkled both the book and all the people, saying, this is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined unto you." Our Lord himself said, "This is my blood of the new covenant, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." But is it not a wonderful thing that he should die as a male-factor on the tree, amid scorn and ridicule, and yet that he is this day bringing nations into covenant with God? Once so despised, and now so mighty! God has given him "for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles." Many nations shall by him be joined in covenant with the God of the whole earth. Do not fall into the erroneous idea that this world is like a great ship-wrecked vessel, soon to go to pieces on an iron-bound coast; but rather let us expect the conversion of the world to the Lord Jesus. As a reward for the travail of his soul, he shall cause many nations to "exult with joy," for so some read the passage; the peoples of the earth shall not only be astonished at the griefs, but they shall admire his glories, adore his perfections, and be filled with an amazement of joy at his coming and kingdom. I can conceive nothing in the future to great and glorious to result from the passion and death of our divine Lord.

Enclosed is an article written for, and sent to one of our city papers, but for some reason it did not appear, although put on file for insertion.

If you find space in THE RESTITUTION, please send me two or three extra copies.

It is now about 8 months (on the 17), since thy servant was stricken down, with a violent attack of lung fever from which I did not recover until inflamatory rheumatism set in to increase my suffering from which I have not yet recovered.

Myself and aged and infirm companion are entirely alone in this part of the country, far from any relative to care for us in our affliction, and adversity. But our Father has ever been mindful of our need and has not suffered us to want. It was seven months before I was able to ride as far as the Post Office, (7 blocks away.)

Yours in the patient waiting for a part in the better life, an invalid of 43 years. J. D. SHERIDAN.

A Reminiscence.

We both had embarked in the unoven sea of wedded life: but with broken oar, we each were driven in ashore after a short voyage of eighteen years for the better, and seven years for the other half.

Twenty-five years ago to-day, we with united oars, undertook to renew the voyage. Not without opposition we set sail. But notwithstanding our frequent encounter of adverse winds, and tides, we succeeded, by the constant assistance of an arm that is stronger than ours, to add a little to our store of supplies for bad weather.

Before our voyage was half complete, we were driven ashore for repairs. On examination, it was evident that our frail bark could not be made seaworthy. Therefore we have been content to make the best of an unsuccessful voyage, by coasting, which could give but small returns, for much labor.

And as we have repeatedly, been met by the boisterous winds of adversity which threatened our bark with utter destruction; we have been constrained to adopt the language of another:

"I have a heart,
And there's a hand
We feel but cannot see:
We've always been provided for
And we shall always be."

That heart and that hand has "never left nor forsaken" us. But when passing through deep waters of affliction and sorrow it has ever been present, to raise up friends, to care for and comfort us, by rendering timely and substantial aid.

May heaven's best blessing ever rest on all those who have been mindful of us, in our trouble and need.

We shall not feel like giving up the ship, until we are ready to land in the haven of eternal rest. And that will be in the land of Canaan, which God promised Abraham and his seed (the Christ) "for an everlasting possession." And the apostle Paul says, "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." See Gen. xvii. 15; Gal. iii. 16, 29; and Rom. viii. 16, 17.

If found faithful and worthy at the end of our journey, we expect to exchange our present poverty for enduring riches. For we are heirs of him who alone can claim the earth, and all things therein, as his own, see Psa. xxiv. 1. To share such wealth in the world to come, will pass us beyond the possibility of poverty, or want.

During the last part of our voyage through shine and storm—this hope has been our ever ready anchor that has enabled us to cling to the immovable Rock.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 19, 1885.

"To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise."

Last Sunday I sauntered into one of the fine edifices of the city, which edifice is ornamented with a tall steeple, and furnished with elegantly upholstered slips—a fashionable resort, for fashionable Christians—and seated myself with the Bible Class, which was composed of men; most of whom were past middle age. The lesson was Heb. ix. 1-12. After the usual orthodox course had been served up, and the talk began to lag, I stated that I would like to speak concerning a point which I thought was strongly set forth in the lesson, permission was at once granted. I said: The writer of the epistle mentions in verse seven the fact, that the high priest went alone into the second tabernacle, which act of his was a type of Christ entering into the "Holiest of all—the holy place," verses eight and twelve, and if the type shadowed correctly, and the antitype conformed to the type, then Christ has gone into the "Holiest of all,"—into heaven—alone, unaccompanied by any of his people, and even as the people saw the high priest no more until he came out to bless them, so the people see Christ no more until he "come again" from out of that heaven, with blessings for his waiting people. An intelligent gentleman immediately remarked, "That is a new, striking, and it seems to me, sound and Scriptural position." The leader hastened to say that, "We must not carry types too far." A slight flurry was perceptible in the class; finally an elderly gentleman turned to me with the question, "What will you do with the answer of Christ to the thief, To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise?" I replied that if it would not be regarded as inopportune, I would let the Scripture settle that question—that kind of a settlement was immediately desired, and I proceeded as follows: Jesus said on a certain time, "As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." Matt. xii. 40. On another occasion he asked his disciples, "Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" they made answer. He continued, "But whom say ye that I am?" Peter answered: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus immediately endorsed the declaration as being a revelation from his Father in heaven. Matt. xvi. 13, 17. Now, I continued, if Jesus is accepted as ultimate authority on this question, which I presume no one here will venture to deny, the absolute and undeniable conclusion from his own language is, that, "The Christ the Son of the Living God," was three days and three nights in the heart of the earth—the grave—and as that covered the entire period of time, between the crucifixion and resurrection, he—the Christ, the Son of the Living God—was not in Paradise during that interval of time; and still more, it is be claimed that Christ meant by "me," in Luke xxiii. 43, the spirit, it would not alter the case; but only prove that the spirit was not the Christ; for the "I," and the "me," in Luke, are beyond question, the exact equivalents of the "Thou," in Matt. xvi. 16, and that was—Christ, the Son of the Living God. One of two conclusions is inevitable; either Jesus contradicted himself, or the popular conception of Luke xxiii. 43, is an error, and contradictory to Scripture. I insist on the latter position being an error, and antagonistic to the whole tenor of Scripture, and that the personality of the "I," and the "me," of Luke xxiii. 43, was the Christ, the Son of the Living God, and that he was three days, and three nights, in the heart of the earth. A look of blank surprise was visible in the class; a moment's silence succeeded, then the superintendent's bell tinkled to close the lesson; a gentleman leaned toward me with the remark, "The hour is all too short, if we only had another one for this subject." Singing had now commenced, and I came away.

I have lived neighbor to B. F. Zink for about 14 years. I am a Methodist and of course we do not agree on all points of doctrine. We however work together in Sunday Schools and meetings.

We live about 50 miles from the Pacific Ocean on a strait line and in Benton County. East of us is the Willamette Valley and west of us the coast range of mountains.

Oregon may very properly be called the land of variety, for here we have almost every kind of a country, from the highest mountains piled into every shape imaginable, to the lowest and most beautiful valleys and plains spreading out in all directions.

We have also a variety of soil and climate, and the same may be said of everything in the state. And perhaps there is no country in the world that has a greater variety of people and sentiment and especially religious sentiment. We need all religious influences we can get, on this coast, for Infidelity is here in all its worst forms. Ministers who come here to advocate the "doctrine of Christ" need to be well posted as well as men of strong faith and deep piety. Not that we believe that the power is in man but we need the pure gospel, boldly, ably and clearly preached. J. D. WOOD.

AN ANGLO GERMAN ALLIANCE.

LONDON, June 29.—The Berlin Post, in an article supposed to have been inspired by Prince Bismarck, hints at a desire on the part of Germany for an alliance with England.

The Novoe Vremua, of St. Petersburg, says Russia ought not to forget that the Marquis of Salisbury and Lord Randolph Churchill have always been anxious to form an Anglo-German alliance against Russia.

PARIS, June 29.—The Memorial Diplomatique reports that Lord Salisbury will have an interview with Prince Bismarck in August.

During Saturday and Sunday there were over 2,000 new cases of cholera in Spain, and over 1,000 deaths. Among the deaths is that of General Calvis, Director of the Military Academy of Toledo, in the province of that name.

Advices from Asia report a raid across the border into Afghanistan by a force of Afghan rebels from Russian Turkestan, capturing a city of Khanu-I-Had, after a battle, and getting possession of $5,000,000 in treasure belonging to the Ameer. Should it turn out that this new invasion of Afghanistan is by Russian connivance, the war feeling in England will soon be at fever heat.

There is said to be bad blood springing up between France and England. Reports are to the effect that France demands the withdrawal of British troops from Egypt, and De Lesseps predicts that war will result. On the other hand, to-day's dispatches mention rumors of a probable alliance between Germany and England. As soon as Gladstone was out of the way, Bismark began to warm up to Great Britain, and there is the closest friendship between the two empires. It will be recollected that Queen Victoria's oldest child, the daughter who proceeded the Prince of Wales into the world, is the wife of the German Crown Prince, and will be Empress of Germany whenever William, now 88 years old, shall pass away. Undoubtedly England is immensely stronger in its foreign relations under Salisbury than it was under Gladstone.

Damage to the extent of half a million dollars in the aggregate was done in the city of Baltimore and vicinity yesterday, by a heavy rain-storm, which for a time resembled a deluge. Many buildings were flooded.

Miscellaneous.

According to the Jewish Chronicle, an English journal, the revised Bible was issued on the very day—the eve of the Feast of Pentecost—"on which the first edition was published," as it was then that the revelation took place on Mount Sinai. It is presumably only a coincidence, but it is certainly a remarkable one.

The first book published in Philadelphia was Atkin's "Almanac," 1686—an unpaged pamphlet of twenty pages, only two copies of which are known. One of the first copies fell into the hands of Col. Markham, Penn's deputy, who reported to the Provincial Council that it declared Pennsylvania to have been begun by "Lord Penn." The council emphatically disapproved of this euphemistic falsehood, and directed both author and printer (William Bradford) "to blott out ye words 'Lord Penn,'" which was done.

THE OLDEST NEWSPAPER.

The oldest newspaper in the world, the Pekin Gazette, has lately taken a new lease of life, says the London Pall Mall Gazette. This venerable journal, alone almost in a changless land, has changed its form. Established in the year 911, the Pekin Gazette has been published regularly since 1351. Under the new arrangement three editions are published: the first, the King-Paou, printed upon yellow paper, constitutes the official gazette of the Middle Kingdom; the second, the Hsing-Paou (commercial journal), also printed upon yellow sheets, contains information interesting to the trading community, while the third, the Tien-tsi-Paou (provincial gazette), printed upon red paper, consists of extracts from the other two editions. The total circulation of the three issues is 15,000 copies. The editorship is confined to a committee of six members of the Academy of Han-Lin.

ARKANSAS CENTENARIANS.

The Fayetteville, Arkansas, Sentinel gives the following remarkable account of the longevity of some of its citizens:

"Whether it is the effects of our wonderful climate that people live to a greater age in Washington county than almost any other place in the world, we cannot say, but, nevertheless, it is a fact. There are scores of both men and women in the county over eighty years old. It was only three years ago that Peter Mankins, Sr., died at the age of 112 years. 'Young Peter,' his son, is hale and hearty at the age of ninety. Yet a case of greater longevity than that of Mankins is produced. Thomas Tonnant, of Vineyard township, has been in 1771, now 114 years ago. He came to Arkansas about the year 1819 and settled near Little Rock, where he followed the calling of an itinerant Methodist preacher. He came to this county and settled in what is now called Vinyard township in 1819, and has lived here ever since. He represented the county in the legislature at an early period of its history. He has lived a most exemplary life and is revered by all who know him. He is one of the oldest men living, and probably the oldest minister in the world."

IS THE COLOR OF THE SUN BLUE?

It may be asked what suggested the idea that the sun may be blue rather than any other color? My own attention was first directed this way many years ago, when measuring the heat and light from different parts of the sun's disk. It is known that the sun has an atmosphere of its own, which tempers its heat, and by cutting off certain radiations and not others, produces the spectral lines we are all familiar with. These lines we customarily study in connection with the absorbing vapors of sodium, iron and so forth, which produce them; but my own attention was particularly given to the regions of absorption, or to the color it caused; and I found that the sun's body must be deeply bluish, and that it would shed blue light except for this apparently colorless solar atmosphere, which really plays the part of a blue glass, letting a little of the blue appear at the centre of the sun's disk where it is thinest, and staining the edge red, so that to delicate tests the centre of the sun is a pale aquamarine and its edge a garnet. The effect I found to be so important that, if this all but invisible solar atmosphere were diminished by but a third part, the temperature of the British Islands would rise above that of the torrid zone, and this directed my attention to the great practical importance of studying the action of our own terrestrial atmosphere on the sun, and the antecedent probability that our own air was also and independently making the really blue sun into an apparently white one.—Prof. Langley, in Science.

"THE FASHION OF THE WORLD PASSETH AWAY."

We've no abiding city here,
This life is but a breath!
The young, the old, the grave, the gay,
Sweep down the stream of death.

We grasp all earthly pleasures,
And fondly call them ours,
And dream of years of happiness,
And the future blissful hours.

We clasp the loved and beautiful,
And gaze on youth's fair face;
But still the locked in love's own arms,
They fade in the embrace.

The fair young brow will furrow,
The laughing eyes grow dim,
The rosy cheek will pale its glow,
Scathed by the blast of time.

Then O, for that promised land of rest,
That home of endless joy!
That realm of purest happiness,
And bliss without alloy!

Eye ne'er beheld such beauty,
Thoughts rise to nought so fair;
Ear ne'er heard such melody,
Death never enters there.

There the young are ever lovely,
And the loved are ever young;
There every breeze is balmy,
And every sound is song.

There life's fair river rolling,
Its crystal waters bright!
The golden sands o'erflowing,
In that pure land of light.

The city is of purest gold,
Its walls are precious stones;
Transparent in its beauty,
Each gate a pearl alone.

The sun has sevenfold glory,
The moon rises as the sun,
So radiant is the brightness,
That night can never come.

There they cease not ever praising,
And their song is ever love:
There the Lord God is the temple,
And the Lamb the light thereof.

LIFE IN MODERN PALESTINE.

An Incident that has Damaged American Prestige.—A Quarrel with Carmelite Monks that may have Important Consequences.

HAIFA, May 25.—The most important event of the month here has been the arrival of the United States steamer Quinebaug, having on board the American consul for Syria, who came down to make further inquiries into an incident which took place a year ago at Acre, and to which I alluded in a letter at the same time, and which gave rise to one of those interminable questions which occur so constantly between the Porte and foreign Governments, and which invariably end in smoke. In this case it did not even end in smoke, for the Quinebaug has not a saluting battery. Perhaps it is not ended, but in any case her visit here, and her departure re infecta, was a distinct mistake. I do not now enter into the merits of the question, which, from having been a very simple one at the outset, has been encumbered with all manner of complications quite foreign to it. Whether the honor of the American flag has been compromised or not is a question about which the American Government, if it has any regard for its own dignity, should make up its mind before it sends men-of-war down here, with no other mission, apparently, but to sail away amid the jeers of the populace. This is the second naval demonstration which we have had in connection with this single incident, the Kearsarge having put in an appearance last fall, and so little importance did the Government of Acre attach to the exaggerated rumors afloat that the Quinebaug was coming to demand satisfaction for the presumed insult, or in default thereof to bombard the town, that he ostentatiously left it the day before her arrival, leaving his subordinate to receive the consul. This latter functionary could of course only obey his instructions, which apparently limited him to an interchange of civilities, and no possible blame can in any way be attached to him in the matter. Far be it from me to impute blame either to the Turkish Governor, who was also probably only obeying his instructions, or to the Government of Syria, which denies the justice of the American claim, and which has a perfect right, if they choose, to treat it with contempt, more especially as they seem aware that they can do no with impunity. The blame lies with a Government, which, it should be remarked, is not that of President Cleveland, which has not learned from the experience of European powers the utter futility of impotent naval demonstrations, and the injurious effect they are likely to produce upon the ignorant native mind. The joke in the Bazaar is that the Quinebaug came here for a cargo of horseshoes. I don't exactly see the point of it, but there can be no doubt about its spirit, and of course it does not improve the American citizens, of whom there are about thirty in this place, or add to the prestige of United States diplomacy.

But this is by no means the only incident which has enlivened the monotony of existence here. There is another which has arisen out of a comparatively trifling matter, but which may assume proportions of very considerable magnitude, as it involves the most dangerous of all elements in a dispute, that of religious fanaticism. The Monastery of Carmel, as your readers are doubtless aware, is situated on the spur of the mountain which projects in a point at an elevation of about 500 feet above the sea. From this point the mountain gradually rises until it attains a height of about 900 feet, immediately behind the town of Haifa and the German colony. The mountain here spreads into an elevated plateau of some extent, affording extensive pasture ground and good arable and vineyard land. For some years past the claims of the convent over a large area of this plateau has been a matter of dispute, but it only reached an acute stage the other day, when the towns people were called upon to pay taxes on it. They naturally objected that they ought not to pay taxes on land, the use of which they did not enjoy, and access to which was forbidden to them by a wall which had been built by the convent as the boundary of its possessions. In order to bring the matter to an issue, some thirty of the German colonists and as many of the Moslem inhabitants of the town went up in a body and proceeded vi et armis to tear down the wall. While thus engaged some of the monks emerged armed with spiritual weapons alone. One of them elevating his cross, pronounced a solemn curse, first in German and then in Arabic, upon the profaners of their sacred soil. The convent being under the protection of the French Government, a formal complaint was lodged against the action of the Germans in the matter, and a deputation, consisting of the German and French Vice-Consul, were sent down from Beyrout to inquire into it. Meantime the Turkish Government interfered, as it had a right to do, seeing that many Ottoman subjects had participated in the act complained of, and decided that the right of the convent to erect the wall was a matter for the local tribunals to decide upon, as well as the question of the validity of their title to the part of the mountain claimed by them. In the mean time instructions were given that, pending the decision of the court, the wall should be replaced in exactly the same position and in the same dimensions as before its removal. Advantage was taken of this order to rebuild the wall much more solidly, and to increase its height far beyond the limits prescribed in the order, and the result was the removal of the local Government for negligence in not seeing that the instructions were properly carried out. Meantime the town instituted a lawsuit against the convent, calling upon them to substantiate their legal title to the land.

Now, one-third of the population of Haifa is Moslem and Jews, and about two-thirds are Christian. The Christians are all under the direct influence of the convent, and the spirit of religious fanaticism runs high on both sides. On measurement being made of the land claimed by the convent it was found to amount to an area of about twelve square miles. According to Turkish law the whole of this would originally belong to the inhabitants of the town for their common use, unless the town council had at some time or other legally parted with it for an adequate consideration. This it was denied on the part of the municipality that they had ever done, and search was consequently made in the records for the act of sale, which would have been registered. On the other hand, the monks had a duly signed document under which they claimed, but which, on further investigation, was found to be practically a fraud, as none of the formalities had been complied with, and the seal had been affixed illegally by an officer who had been induced for a certain consideration to perform the act. It is not contended that the monks were a party to this irregularity. They seem, indeed, rather to have been the victims of their agent at the time, who perpetrated it, leaving them under the delusion that they possessed a valid title, but the discovery left the court no alternative but to pronounce judgment against them. Against this judgment they have appealed to Constantinople, and it would be difficult to see how it could be reversed, were it not that the interests involved are of such a peculiar character that the purely legal side of the question may be overlooked.

The prestige which the order of bare-footed Carmelites enjoys in all Catholic countries is so great that the most powerful influences will be invoked, and possibly not invoked in vain, in their favor. Strong articles have already appeared on the subject in the continental press of Europe. The Emperor of Austria has, I understand, been personally appealed to, while the pilgrims, who, to the number of about 400, have already visited the sacred shrine this year, are every one of them missionaries who will be so many Peter the Hermits, invoking once more the faith of the true believer to protect the sacred mountain from the grasp of the infidel. But there is an element in the affair which removes it from the simple category of Cross versus Crescent, and that is, that the interests of some 300 Germans are involved. As forming part of the population of Haifa, they enjoy equal rights with the rest of the townspeople, and Prince Bismark is not a man to see their rights tamely abandoned to the monks. It is true that the question is one which affects exclusively the Turkish Government, and there can be no doubt that it would not willingly deprive an Ottoman population of twelve square miles of mountain if they are legally entitled to it, but the united pressure of Catholic Europe might be too powerful a force for the Porte to resist single handed. It is a different matter when they have the Government at their back, and this quarrel over a right of way and a patch of hillside may yet be pregnant with important consequences. Had the convent entered upon large agricultural operations, their rights over land thus brought into cultivation could not be disputed. The complaint of the population is that they neither cultivate it, themselves, nor allow others to cultivate it, or even to graze their flocks upon it. The exclusive possession thus claimed has deprived the German colonists of one of the most important desiderata for the success of their colony.

A retreat from the heats of summer is almost essential to the health of the colonists. If they had the right of way claimed they could with ease construct a wagon road to the top of the hill overhanging the colony, where, at an elevation of 900 feet, they would be in full enjoyment of the sea breeze, while only half an hour distance from their homes. The money necessary for the construction of such a sanitarium was provided under singular circumstances a few weeks ago. I was riding just outside the town, on the Nazareth road, when to my surprise I met a foreign lady riding by herself, accompanied only by an Arab, an unusual sight in this country. Following her was a covered litter. On returning to the colony an hour later I found that the litter contained the body of the husband of the lady I had met. He had died in it on the road from Nazareth a couple of hours before I met the poor widow, a perfect stranger and unable to speak a word of the language, forming the solitary attendant of her husband's corpse. These painful circumstances enlisted the warmest sympathy on the part of the colonists, whose kindness and consideration so overwhelmed the lady, who was herself a countrywoman, that before leaving she presented the colony with a check for $7,500. These simple people had no idea when they were lavishing their kindness on the widow that she was a lady of large fortune, and this was their unexpected reward. And it is with this money they hope to build their sanitarium.—N. Y. Sun.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY BIBLES.

LATIN.

Piacentia or Piacenza, Italy, is credited with the first Bible printed in Quarto. It is a Latin Bible printed by Johannes Petrus d' Ferratis, Piacentia, 1475. Copies of this Bible are in the Ambrosian Library at Milan and the Althrop Library, England.

In the Caxton Exhibition there was a folio Latin Bible attributed to Strasburg, 1476, with no name of printer, lent by Dr. Glusburg. His collection of Bibles numbers two or three thousand editions, including many of the earliest and rarest in different languages.

1476 was a remarkable year for splendid folio editions of the Bible in Latin. No less than five are well known, one of which, by Sensenschmit, has already been mentioned in connection with Nuremberg.

Another of these folios brings us to France, the next great country after Germany and Italy to receive the Art of Printing. Guillaume Fichet and Jean de la Pierre, members of the Sorbonne, induced three German printers, Ulric Gering, Martinus Crantz and Michael Friburger, to come to Paris, where they fitted up a room for them in the Sorbonne, in which they began to print in 1470. There is a copy of their Bible in the Lenox Library, which is marked as by Gering, Crantz and Friburger (1476?), folio. The first Bible printed at Paris. Panzer says that there were 85 printers and 790 works printed in Paris during the fifteenth century.

Another folio Latin Bible printed in this year brings us to Naples, where printing was introduced by Sixtus Riessinger, a priest of Strasburg, in 1471. Florence, Bologna, Ferrara and many other Italian cities received it about the same time. Matt. Moravus printed at Genoa with Michael de Monachis in 1474. He removed the next year to Naples, and in the year following printed his folio Latin Bible, a copy of which is in the Lenox Library, entered as by Matt. Moravus, Naples, 1476.

Two other Latin Bibles of this date were printed at Venice, and will be considered later. In this year was printed an edition of the Aurea Biblia, by Johan Zeiner de Rentlingen, at Ulm, 1476. This is a manual of Bible Histories which had been previously printed in one dated and several undated editions.

Venice occupies a proud position in the early history of printing, both for the amount and excellence of her work. Even among the unlearned the names of some of her great printers are better known than the names of her wealthiest merchants or most magnificent rulers. It is estimated that Venice produced 2,000,000 of volumes during the first half century of printing. This may lessen our wonder that nearly every lover of old books in Europe or America has in his library more than one book over four hundred years old. Before 1500 Venice had had more than two hundred printers, who had printed about 3,000 editions, including Venetian Bibles to the extent of twenty editions.

Her first printer was John de Spiro, supposed to have been of Spiro on the Rhine. His first dated work is a folio of 125 leaves, Cicero's Epistolæ ad Familiares 1468.

Two translations of the Bible into Italian were printed at Venice in 1471, one by Vindelin, brother of John de Spire, the other by N. Jenson. But the first Latin Bible printed at Venice is the small folio by F. de Halberan and N. de Frankfordis, 1475. Halbrun printed a Latin Bible in Quarto, 1490.

In the next year two folio Latin Bibles appeared at Venice—one by these same printers, F. de Halbrun and N. de Frankfordis, 1476; the other by Nicholas Jenson, 1476. There is a copy of this 1476 Jenson Bible at the Lenox Library, in the same case with three other Latin Bibles of the same date, all of which have just been mentioned.

Jenson is pre-eminent among printers of the fifteenth century for the perfection of his work, his skill as an engraver enabling him to surpass his rivals in many respects. He had been employed at the mint in Paris and was sent by Charles the Seventh in 1458 to Mentz to learn the new art from Gutenburg. Louis XI. did not encourage his father's project, and Jenson was unable to establish a press at Paris. He removed to Venice, where his books in improved Roman type soon made him famous. He received a title from Pope Sixtus IV., and died in 1482. Mr. De Vinne says: "As a type-founder, printer and ink-maker Jenson had no rival and left no proper successor. Another folio Latin Bible by Jenson, Venice, 1479, was in the Caxton Exhibition, lent by the British and Foreign Bible Society. There were two folio Latin Bibles in the previous year, by different printers, one by Leonardus Vulid de Ratisbon and N. de Frankfordis, Venice, 1478, the other by T. de Reynsburuk and Reynald de Novimagio, Venice, 1478. Among the numerous Bibles of the closing years of the century were a Latin folio, by Herbort de Siligenstat, Venice, 1488, and another Latin folio by Paganinis, Venice, 1495.

Two Quarto Bibles have been mentioned in this connection. Another Quarto Latin Bible, by Georgius Ravabenis, Venice 1487, is the first Bible with a separate title-page. There were Quarto Latin Bibles by Simon Bevilaqua, Venice, 1494 and 1498.

The Latin Bible, by Hieronimus de Paganinis, Venice, 1493, is the earliest Bible with an illustration on the title-page. There is a Latin Bible, Octavo, by the same printer, 1497.

It may be that some of our readers have Latin Bibles of the Fifteenth Century, which are not mentioned in the articles, for I have mentioned merely those that I have seen in public and private libraries and others that are recorded in the catalogue of the Caxton Exhibition. Though these are very few, yet I believe that they include the most interesting of the great number of editions that were issued.

HEBREW AND GREEK.

The first complete edition of the Bible in Hebrew was printed at Soncino by Abraham ben Chayin de' Tintori, 1488, folio. The Pentauch had been printed by the same printer at Bologna in 1482, and other portions of the Old Testament later.

The Psalms were printed in Greek and Latin at Milan, 1481.

But the great editions of the Bible in Greek belong to the next century, and are to be considered hereafter.—By Wendell Prime, D. D., for New York Observer.

How Easy It Is!

How easy it is to spoil a day!
The thoughtless word of a cherished friend,
The selfish act of a child at play,
The strength of a will that will not bend,
The slight of a comrade, the scorn of a foe,
The smile that is full of bitter things—
They all can tarnish its golden glow,
And take the grace from its airy wings.

How easy it is to spoil a day
By the force of a thought we did not check:
Little by little they mold the clay,
And little fires may the vessel wreck;
The careless words of a white-winged hour,
That hold the blessings we have had sought,
The sudden failure of wealth or power,
And, lo! the day is with ill fraught.

How easy it is to spoil a life—
Ere many are-spoilt are well begun—
In hours bright darkened by sin and strife,
Or downward course of a cherished one!
By toil that robs the form of its grace,
And undermines till health gives way;
By the restless temper, the frowning face,
The hopes that go and the cares that stay.

A day is too long to be spent in vain;
Some good should come as the hours go by;
Some tangled maze may be made more plain,
Some lowered glance may be raised on high.
And life is too short to spoil like this;
If only a prelude, it may be sweet;
Let us bind together its threads of bliss,
And nourish the flowers around our feet.

No More for Mother.

"Is there a vacant place in this bank which I could fill?" was the inquiry of a boy, as with glowing cheek he stood before the manager.

"There is none," was the reply.

"Were you told that you might obtain a situation here? Who recommended you?"

"No one recommended me, sir," calmly answered the boy, "I only thought I would see."

There was a straightforwardness in the manner, an honest determination in the countenance of the lad, which pleased the man of business, and induced him to continue the conversation. He said: "You must have friends who could help you in getting a situation; have you told them?"

The quick flash of the deep blue eyes was quenched in the overtaking wave of sadness, as he said:

"My mother said it would be useless to try without friends." The gentleman asked him why he did not remain at school a year or two and then enter the business world.

"I have no time," was the reply. "I study at home and keep up with the other boys."

"Then you have a place already?" said the man. "Why did you leave it?" "I have not left it" answered the boy quietly.

"But you wish to leave it; what is the matter?" For an instant the child hesitated; then he replied, "I must do more for my mother!"

Brave words! They sank into the heart of the listener. Grasping the hand of the child he said, with a quivering voice, "My good boy, what is your name?"

"You shall fill the first vacancy for an apprentice that occurs in the bank. If, meantime, you need a friend, come to me. But tell me why you wish to do more for your mother? Have you no father? Tears filled his eyes as he said, "My father is dead, my brothers and sisters are dead, and my mother and I are left alone to help each other. But she is not strong, and I wish to take care of her. It will please her, sir, that you have been so kind; and I am much obliged to you." So saying the boy left, little dreaming that his own nobleness of character had been as a bright glance of sunshine into that busy world he had so tremblingly entered. A boy animated by the desire to help his mother will always find friends.

Dear Children:

The Scriptures do not unfold to us the parentage of the prophet whose name signifies, "God the Lord," but simply introduces him as an inhabitant of a place which signifies, "The heap of witness," but he was the first ever known to restore life to a dead one. The widow to whom the Lord sent the prophet, was the mother of a sweet boy, whose life had been sustained for nearly two years, by the meal which wasted not, and the cruse of oil which did not fail. Although the great drouth had caused famine everywhere, she could securely rest in the promise of the Lord. The prophet also was fed from the same source, and remained with her until the word of the Lord was fulfilled. During the prophet's sojourn with her, the precious boy fell sick, and his dear mother could do nothing to restore him to health; at last there was no breath left in him, and in the bitterness of her grief she said to the prophet, "What have I to do with thee, O thou man of God, art thou come unto me to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son?" The loving, tender mother still carried her only one in her bosom, as though she was trying to rob it from the cold grasp of death, but her embrace could warm her precious boy no more. The kind hearted prophet said, give me thy son, and he took him into a loft where he abode, and laid him upon his own bed, and he cried unto the Lord and said, O Lord my God, hast thou also brought evil upon the widow with whom I sojourn, by slaying her son? and he stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried unto the Lord, and said: O Lord my God, I pray thee let this child's life come into his inward parts. And the Lord heard the voice of the prophet, and the life of the child came into him again, and he revived, and the prophet brought the child to his sorrowing mother, and said, See, thy son liveth, and the woman said to the prophet, Now by this I know thou art a man of God, and that the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth. Would it not be reasonable, dear children, to expect, that the first one resurrected would have been an Israelite, and one who had developed a blameless character? but here we have a little one, whose mother confesses she had committed sin, which she dreaded should be brought to remembrance, an unclean Gentile child, and through such an one the mighty power of God to restore is made manifest, simply by earnest prayer, and the impression of the great prophet in Israel, and as the third day brought a resurrection to our glorious Redeemer, so the third impression brought life to the dead child. God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began, of a restitution. The great prophet in Israel could not give eternal life, this precious gift cometh alone from our Lord Jesus, the Life Giver, but he restored, or brought back the former life of the child. This was a wonderful work, and it sealed forever that the testimony of Jehovah in the mouth of the prophet was true. I can only join with the "worker" in exclaiming, "O the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" You will perceive, my dear children, there was a spiritual death in the house of Israel, as well as a terrible famine, and amid these trying circumstances the prophet of the Lord was nourished by unclean birds, and an unclean Gentile woman, and when he comes again as a Restorer, perhaps he may be surrounded by like circumstances. The sweet singer of Israel sang, "God hath spoken once, twice have I heard this, that power belongeth unto God. Also unto him belongeth mercy, for he will render unto every man according to his work." Children beloved, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding." "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths."

Your affectionate teacher.

"ARE YOU A MINISTER!"

Dear Restitution.

I am just twenty miles west of Baltimore in one of the richest sections of Maryland, doing some work. One year ago I delivered a lecture here on Sleeping in Church, during the preaching of the Gospel.

The Methodist ministers advised their people to keep away; but they didn't. The house was filled. After my speech, a man came up to me and said, "Well Mr. Mo, you have certainly done what no man has ever done." What is that, I asked? "Why you have kept Ben Harper awake from the opening to the finishing." I believe God used me on that occasion in sowing a few truth seeds. Two weeks ago I spoke here nearly three hours on the Christian hope. Before I began reading THE RESTITUTION, I found it up hill business to speak to any one, anywhere, about Jesus the Christ. Now it is—I had like to say, meat and my drink.

The truth is, I had nothing to talk about—nothing. It is the wonder of my life that the truth, now so plain—should have been so long concealed. I cannot think that my salvation depended on my knowing all about God's purpose towards literal Israel or the rest of mankind; I might understand much about this and yet have no part or lot with them.

I was talking to a person the other day about things to come, and after giving me most careful attention he remarked,—If ye know these things, happy are ye if you do them." The text came to me at once,—"but be ye doers of the word, etc." I am doing a little now and then as I have opportunity towards spreading the truth. Last Sunday I was in Baltimore, and I found about 50 men in Marsh Market willing to listen to me talk about Jesus feeding a multitude of people with a little bread and fish. After speaking of the power given him by God Almighty to relieve afflicted humanity, I closed by calling their attention to the wonder of wonders, viz., raising the dead. Of course I would much prefer speaking in a pleasant room, nicely seated, if I could get the privilege. Our Maryland pulpiters are not in the habit of asking laboring men like myself up on the platform. "Oh dear no." A few weeks ago I was at a little country church during night service, and after the preacher had finished his talk I asked the privilege of saying a few words. The little Pope asked me with a look of surprise "Are you a minister?" I told him if preaching for wages was what he meant I was no minister, my answer was heard all over the church. He saw plainly that the people were anxious to hear me, and they did.

I must close these desultory thoughts by asking you to put the inclosed $2.00 to my credit.

ISAAC MCQUARRY.

P. S. Since I've been up here I have made a discovery.—"The house where I am stopping is only a few feet from the Rail Road track and the passing trains prevented sleep the first few nights, now it has no effect whatever. Why is that, do you ask? I answer that mere noise if uniform soon ceases to startle one. I sincerely believe this is why people usually want to sleep in church. The average preacher like the passing train, simply makes a noise, noise, "only this and nothing more," and the saddest thought about it is "the people love to have it so."

Editor Restitution:

Dear sir, I am in receipt of a letter, from a brother near here, asking me to correspond with some preaching brother who could come here and hold services, but as I do not know of any one who is near here at present, I thought the best way to reach such an one would by be a request for correspondence with some of the brethren through THE RESTITUTION.

The Dakota field is large, and I presume the brethren are very much scattered, but think good might be done here.

If you will kindly publish a request for such a correspondence you will greatly oblige. Yours in the Faith.

"THY KINGDOM COME."

Drifting down the silent ages
Come the swiftly rolling years:
Solemnly unfold their pages,
Steeped in misery, blood and tears;
Woe, there's sorrow, pain and anguish,
War's red carnage, pain and death,
Fire and famine, flood and earthquake,
Come to earth upon their breath.

Still the seasons in their grandeur
Alternately come and go;
Springtime's beauty, summer's glory,
Autumn's splendor, winter's snows;
And the sun's majestic glory
Floods the day with golden light,
While the moon, in silver radiance,
With the stars keeps watch at night.

Sad and awful contradictions—
Joy and sorrow, light and gloom,
Heat and cancel, pain and pleasure,
Life and death, and blight and bloom.
Ever thus in solemn measure
A-ring their sad refrain;
Still—sweet chord, grand, triumphant,
Never fails to swell the strain.

And upon life's stormy-tossed ocean
Stands a figure grand, sublime;
Heaven and earth are locked in rapture
Since upon the shores of time
He, the star-crowned King—Glory,
Our sad earth in mockery trod,
Speaking pardon peace and mercy,
Love to man and love to God.

"Peace on earth, good will to men,"
Thus the angels sang his birth,
And it—blessed words are ringing
Grandly, sweetly round the earth:
Ages amidst the strife and anguish,
The ugliness and blight in dark and long,
If we pause and listen softly,
We shall hear the glorious song.

Peace! Yes, peace will reign when Jesus
Comes once more to claim his own,
Blood-bought millions, souls he's ransomed,
Gathered round his heavenly throne.
There no more shall pain or anguish
Blight one joy, nor blast our home;
Never more shall thy saints languish—
Come, then blessed Redeemer, come!

AN OUTLINE OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY: 1880—A FATEFUL YEAR.

I consider it to be a solemn and responsible privilege to take part in a meeting of this character. I hold strongly the fundamental truths which are taught here—the Lord's pre-millenial advent.

The previous speaker Mr. Baxter, has referred to the Missionary Institute in Bow-road, to which my time is given. I should be ashamed to believe in the nearness of the Lord's Second coming and do nothing to gather in the harvest—to gather in precious souls. One of the points in which I sympathize with Mr. Baxter, is his effort to evangelize. He edits a paper largely evangelical, and sends out evangelists to preach. So we should all do what we can to hasten the Lord's coming.

Now, dear friends, with reference to the subject before us—Unfulfilled Prophecy—the best preparation for the study of unfulfilled prophecy is, to study fulfilled prophecy. If we want to know how the unfulfilled prophecies are going to be fulfilled, we must study how those which have been fulfilled have been accomplished.

It is distinctly stated in connection with prophecy that it is not God's intention that the wicked should comprehend it. It is revealed in a mysterious form, "none of the wicked shall understand;" but it is also revealed and declared that the wise shall. We may take it for granted that there are those who understand the prophetic word.

In order to understand the prophecies, the first requisite thing is wisdom. "The wise shall understand." And it seems clear that that wisdom involves—rectitude of character. "None of the wicked, but the wise," and those are wise who are engaged in saving souls. "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever." In addition to this grace, a studiousness of mind and judiciousness of disposition, which may be characterised by the word wisdom, are indicated. Mark, not the foolish nor the wicked, but the wise—those who are righteous, spiritual, studious, and judicious. "The wise shall understand it." This is God's assurance.

It seems to me the most judicious way to seek to understand these Scriptures is to begin with what is simple, certain—almost self-evident in the study of prophecy, and advance from the simple, certain, and self-evident to that which is deeper and more difficult. Begin with the clear, and advance from the clear to the less clear. In doing this let me say that the best way is not to begin with the book of Revelation. This should be reserved. The best way by far is to begin with simpler prophetic Scripture. The simplest and grandest prophetic outline given in the whole word of God is Nebuchadnezzar's Fourfold Image in the second chapter of Daniel. It is the first of the series of prophecies in the book of Daniel.

The book of Daniel contains only five prophetic portions or visions, viz.: The metallic image, the four wild beasts, the ram and goat, the seventy weeks, and the vision in chapter xi. concerning the kings of the North and South.

I wish to speak exceedingly simply to-night. I remember that nearly thirty-five years ago I got a disgust to the study of prophecy, which lasted for years, through hearing an injudicious address on the subject. Prophecy is a system in itself, and many speakers mystify both themselves and their hearers in dealing with it; and certainly the speaker did this on the occasion to which I refer. The minds of thousands are prejudiced against these things, largely owing to injudicious treatment by unwise teachers. I hold it is possible to teach great prophetic truths with as much clearness and certainty as any other revealed truths,

As regards this simple outline. The first of the series of visions in Daniel is the vision granted to Nebuchadnezzar, the first of the line of Gentile Monarchs—to him was granted a vision of the entire course of the world's history right away to the very end of it from the time then being.

The vision represented these four great empires which were to succeed each other, and to be followed by another of a totally different character, illustrated by the stone cut out without human agency, by which the whole image is destroyed, which stone grows to a mountain and fills the whole earth. Nothing more sublime, and nothing more simple. Let us impress this on our minds. That is the divine outline of Universal History from the days of Daniel to the end of the world in its leading aspects. The kingdom of the mountain is the kingdom of the Millennium.

Now then, having got that outline and fixed it firmly in your minds, you have the framework, and all you have to do is this: take the succeeding visions of the book of Daniel and fit them into that framework.

They must of necessity fit into this framework. The four empires referred to are—1. The Babylonian. 2. The Medo-Persian. 3. The Grecian. 4. The Roman. Daniel said to Nebuchadnezzar, "Thou art that head of gold." Therefore the other kingdoms are represented by the three parts which come after.

In the eighth chapter the names of the Persian and Grecian monarchs are actually given. So you have the first identified as Babylon, 2nd, Medo-Persian, 3rd, Grecian, and 4th, Roman. In the New Testament you get the Roman Empire—for instance, "There went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus that all the world should be taxed, etc." These are the four universal monarchies, and the fifth is the kingdom of God, and that kingdom exists in two forms. First of all, the initial stage in which it is being shaped, and cut out without human hands, and then it falls on the image, and the whole image shall perish, and come to naught; the stone shall then grow to a mountain, but not till it has removed the empires figured by that image.

The fifth kingdom, I say, exists in two stages—first as contemporaneous with the Roman, or fourth kingdom; and then a stage subsequent to it, the kingdom of the stone, and the kingdom of the mountain.

When you pass from the vision in the second chapter to that in the seventh chapter you find the four empires under the form of four wild beasts, but there in the seventh chapter you get details which you do not find in the second, and under a different aspect. In the second chapter they are seen by Nebuchadnezzar, but in the seventh they are seen from heaven as shown to Daniel—one aspect to the natural, the other to the spiritual. Man sees them as a magnificent image; heaven sees them as wild beasts.

I believe that the study of prophecy is a sanctifying thing. Some study it to satisfy curiosity, but studied aright it is a sanctifying thing.

These great kingdoms are represented as beasts—wild beasts. These wild beasts, and kingdoms, and governments, are to be succeeded by the kingdom of man—the Son of Man. After the beasts, the man.

The geologist rolls back the rock leaves on which are traced the records of the pre-human. Before man the earth was inhabited by great and fearful monsters. We may say of the earth's history:

"From the beginning one harmonious plan,
One reign of monsters, then the reign of man."

The wild beasts are still here; we have not yet got the reign of man, but that is coming, and will be soon. The Son of Man is coming—there is a glad time coming for God's children, and the meek of the earth, and the poor among the people, and the sons of the Most High. "Blessed are the meek, who have never drawn the sword, for they shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in a new thing—the abundance of peace."

Now, in chapter vii. we have further details about these four empires; you observe that the fourth of these occupies three-fourths of the whole chapter, and it is described there as great, strong, terrible ("iron teeth") and ten horns. You find that whereas the second of these empires is spoken of as two-horned, and the third as four-horned, the fourth is described as having ten horns; a very remarkable feature.

Now when you turn from the book of Daniel to the Apocalypse you find the same fourth empire, and it appears there as a ten-horned beast (Rev. xiii.) This links together the two books, and leads you to connect these two parts of one prophecy. In order to impress that great principle on the mind, Daniel may be called first John, and John, or Revelation, may be called second Daniel.

On comparing them together the fourth wild beast of Daniel appears in the book of Revelation in the xii. xiii. and xiv. chapters, and in each case has ten horns, and there can be no doubt it is the same empire, because it is ten-horned, and because of other features; and to this we may further add that when the Apocalypse was written the first kingdom had passed away; Persia and Greece had also passed away, and as there remained only one more, the Roman, the Apocalypse must deal with the Roman and the subsequent kingdom of God. Now, when you come to look into this you find the book of Revelation adds certain other features, because prophecy is progressive. This ten-horned beast is represented as seven-headed. You do not find that in Daniel.

This vision is seen three times in the Apocalypse, the ten horns are mentioned in each case. Chapters xii. xiii. xvii. In chapter xii. you see the horns uncrowned, the heads are crowned. In chapter xiii. the heads uncrowned, the horns are crowned; in chapter xvii. the heads and horns are uncrowned, but on the beast now sits a woman—she is regnant, the crowns have gone from the heads and from the horns. The woman is arrayed in scarlet, upon her head is the name written, Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots, and abominations of the earth—"drunken with the blood of saints, and martyrs of Jesus."

It is very remarkable that this is the only vision which is interpreted to us in the whole book concerning these kingdoms. There are only two interpretations in the whole Apocalypse, one of the seven candlesticks, and the other of the woman on the seven mountains. In opposition to the pure and apostolic church symbolised by the seven candlesticks; there is another church seated upon seven mountains, and seated in another aspect on a wild beast, and the beast is interpreted, the seven heads interpreted—the woman and the waters all interpreted. What is the woman? Turn to the interpretation: "The woman is that great city which reigneth (present tense) over the kings of the earth." Rome and none other. Rome therefore in some form or other. The fourth empire is Rome, and the woman is Rome. In what form? Rome in its first form, Rome pagan? or, in its second form, Rome papal?

The horns precede the woman; the ten horns did not precede Rome pagan; Rome was not ten-horned before she was pagan; the ten-horned condition followed the fall of pagan Rome. This ten-horned condition did not precede pagan Rome, but it preceded papal Rome—papal Rome followed this ten-fold division of the Roman empire. You have the mystery of two women in the Apocalypse—the Bride, the Lamb's wife, and the woman, Babylon. This interpretation is no new one; I did not invent it; it was not brought up this century; you can trace it back to the sixteenth century, it was the common view of the reformers. Luther held it, Calvin and John Knox held it and preached it; in the fifteenth century the Lollards held it; in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries it was the belief of Wickliffe, Jerome, and Huss; even to the beginning of the Waldenses themselves, and for six to seven hundred years this has been the view of a large number of intelligent students of the prophetic word.

It is my solemn and deep conviction that the Holy Ghost, being the guide and comforter of the Church, foreseeing the great danger which lay before the Church of being led into the errors of Romanism, and foreseeing the great troubles, persecutions, and frightful oppressions and martyrdoms—that the Divine Spirit, foreseeing all this, was pleased for the preservation of the Church, to dictate the Apocalypse; and whatever else this great prophecy has done it has upheld the faith of God's persecuted ones, and enabled them to testify against the Church of Rome—"Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots, and abominations of the earth."

If you accept this view, you accept the historical interpretation of the Apocalypse, and are using the Apocalypse as meant to be used in comparison with the facts of Christian history, and drawing from it practical light and guidance.

Had I time I should like exceedingly to show as simply as possible the teachings in the book of Daniel with reference to the two little horns—the western and eastern. I cannot attempt to do so now, but those who wish to follow up this subject further can do so.

Among the ten horns grows up a little horn. Great is its intelligence and assumptions—its mouth speaking blasphemies. It plucks up three of the ten horns, grows mightier and becomes the persecutor of the saints. It continues until the session of the Ancient of Days. If you compare what is said of that little horn in Daniel, you find it perfectly identical with that in Revelation xiii.

In the study of prophecy we must take up a certain line; we must either regard things as symbolical or literal; and on reading certain passages it would be impossible and absurd to interpret them literally. You are compelled to interpret the whole Apocalypse as symbolical. The beasts are symbols, and the duration of the little horn, three and one half years, is a symbol. You find one vision of times which has unquestionably been fulfilled. Seventy weeks—490 days. The period in which Messiah came was 490 years, therefore the 490 days are symbolic, and this is a clue to the rest.

If you deny the year-day view, where are you? You have absolutely no chronological prophecy to guide you unless it is a traditional one of the 6,000 years. Besides, when you compare this chronological prophecy with the chronology of history you find those prophecies have been fulfilled on the year-day scale.

Where are we? Living in the supplementary times which follow the three and one half times. A brief period is added of 75 days, or years, to the 1260, terminating in an era of blessedness. We are living in that period. In Daniel viii. you find a little horn. The one in chapter vii. grows out of the fourth empire; the one in the viii. grows out of the third, connected not with the West but with the East, and if you study attentively the doings of that little horn, it is connected with the taking away of the daily sacrifice, with the treading down of the sanctuary. The Western horn has nothing to do with either of these, but is a persecutor of the saints of the Most High. The Eastern horn is connected with the treading down of the daily sacrifice, and springs not from the fourth empire but the third. You thus find as a matter of fact from the third sprang the Seleucidæ, and ruled in Babylon and Syria, right over where the Turks rule now. The Turks own the Euphrates and Tigris, and Armenia—and where Eden stood—and away into Europe, including Palestine and Jerusalem.

In that region rose the Seleucidæ, and then followed a whole line of their monarchs, and the eighth of them took away the daily sacrifice, and persecuted the Jews most tyrannically—168 years before Christ. This monarch, 168 years before Christ, set up in the temple of Jerusalem a statue to the worship of Jupiter. The emperor Adrian, after completing the work began by Titus, erected on the foundation of Solomon's temple, a temple to Jupiter, and there, on that very spot, where was set up this "abomination of desolation," on that spot, and in the Holy of Holies, he placed an image of himself for worship. There, on the same site Omar, the successor of Mahomet, in 637 erected the mosque, which stands to this day. In the 800 years of the history of the Turks you find fulfilled most completely the history of that little horn. It is remarkable that Othman, or Ottoman, means bonebreaker, or destroyer of men.

We are within four years of the end of the 1260 lunar years (and the Turkish year is lunar, not solar) connected with the desolation of the sanctuary and the destruction of the destroyer. From the completion of this desolating work a period of 1290 days or years should extend. Now the Turkish year is lunar, and if you take the reckoning from A. D. 637, 1290 of their interminate is 1829, and we are within four years of that.

Now before there was an expectation of a war, or before a blow was struck, I was led to indicate the year 1880 as one of probable crisis in connection with the Turkish empire and eastern woe. I cannot be certain about it, but judging from the fulfilment of prophetic times in the past, in all probability the year 1880 will bring the crisis. Before there was a breath of this possible war between England and Russia I thought this, and now that there is a prospect of peace, and people think the whole thing will blow over, I mention it. I believe that the Turkish power is destined to come down that God's control may be restored. Our position is very perilous; we are standing on the rails; the express is coming. Lord Beaconsfield pledged us to maintain the Turkish power in the East, in Asia Minor, including Syria. He made a treaty—a Jew did it—to maintain the power and independence of the doomed Ottoman Empire.

England is in a dangerous position, as I believe she all over her policy when the Turkish power is overthrown she will fall too. Let her take warning and stave off the blow!

May we be among those who understand the days in which they live, who diligently study the Scriptures and occupy until the Master comes.—A Lecture Delivered at the Prophetic Conference, London, May 6, 1880.

HE HAS DIED.

DIED.—At Galesburgh, Kan., May 20, 1885, George Ball, aged 35 years.

Geo. Ball was born in Southport, Lancashire, England, Feb. 7, 1850.

He came to his death by the overturning of a load of hay by which he got his leg broke. He became unconscious in a short time and remained so for six days, in which the enemy death, relieved him of his suffering. He came to Kansas with his parents at an early day, where he remained till his death. March 20, 1881, he was married to Miss Emma Clough, and four years brought them two little boy babies, but, alas, the little boys, have no father, and Emma has no husband. George has gone to the grave, the house where we must all go. He made no pretence of religion, belonged to no church, yet he was honest in all his dealings and had a host of friends outside of his relations, and those that knew him best liked him most. Although his sisters and only brother belong to the church, the brother belongs to the Campbellite, the sisters to the Methodist, and his wife holds with us, and as I had joined them together in matrimony, Emma called on me to administer to them words of comfort. On May 2, 1885, we met at their residence. When I repaired to the Campbellite Church at Galesburgh. The house was full of citizens, some three or four ministers of the different sects, and with the sisters belonging to the Methodists, and brother to the Campbellites, it put me in a strait betwixt two. I hardly knew what to preach, so I concluded to leave all theology out of my sermon, except Bible theology. I took for my text, (Romans v. 12;) "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men; for that all have sinned." From this passage we showed whatever kind of a death that came into the world through One man, Adam; we all had to pay. I also showed that death was not the gate to Paradise, the opening key to Heaven. But that death was an enemy. For proof I read to them, Hebrew ii. 14. Also, 1 Cor. xv. 16; "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. For since by man came death; by man came also the Resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order; Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."

From this we showed to the friends that God was a God of order, and order was God's first great law. Acts xv. 18. "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." I also showed to the friends that there was order in the resurrection. First in order the Christ, the head of the body, the church. Second those that are his at his coming. Third, all in the graves will hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth. Why? For the Son of man is come to seek and save that which was lost. Luke xix. 10. I also showed to the clergy that their idea was erroneous about a good man going to heaven at death, and a bad man to hell. That there was no use of a judgment, and that doctrine would make the mission of Christ of none effect. That Christ has abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. 2 Tim. i. 10. I also showed the way that they interpreted death, or rather gave a definition of death. They have three kinds of death, natural, spiritual, eternal. Two definitions are no death at all, and if it were true that Adam died a spiritual death, it is also true that universal salvation is true. For if all die a spiritual death in Adam, all will be made spiritually alive in Christ. I further showed that without a resurrection of the dead, no future life, and Ingersoll had the truth and we were all without God and hope in the world.

I showed that the same one that died, that knew before it died, did not know any thing after it was dead. They are asleep, they are at rest, and if never a one alive will never know any thing more. There were many anxious listeners there, and one lady said to Bro. Payne that although she did not believe the doctrine, she could have sat still till evening to listen to me on the hope of the resurrection and coming of Christ. After I was through we took our last look at George Ball, the only George that I saw, and if there was another it was not the one that we was acquainted with. The one in the coffin was the one that I joined in marriage to Emma Clough, and the one that we all mourned for, our neighbor, Emma's husband, the father to them little orphan children.

George left two children, a wife, two sisters, one brother, and a host of friends. After we all took a last look at George we laid him away in his resting place, in the hands of that Judge that will do just right with him, give him just what he deserves, or what is due him. Now friends let us all take warning by this, and know that in the midst of life we are in death. Let us all prepare to meet our God, and so let us live that we may have a part in the first and better resurrection. Here is a question let us ask ourselves: If a man die shall he live again. Job xiv. 14. If I wait the grave is my house.

Jewish Notes.

While digging the foundation for the new House for Pilgrims of Greek Church at Jaffa, a number of ancient Jew tombstones were discovered. One has been recognized as marking the resting place of Rabbi Judah, who is mentioned in Midrash Rabba 20.

The Palestrelh, our Jerusalem Jewish contemporary, in a recent issue dwells at length on the overcrowding of Jews in Jerusalem, and points out that a very large proportion of the immigrants, who now walk the streets of the Holy City unable to earn their bread, might find work and food enough if they were judiciously distributed over the country of Palestine.

THE BRIGHT DAY DAWNING.

Our esteemed contemporary, the Liverpool Daily Post publishes an elaborate editorial on the visit of Dr. Adler and Mr. Benas to Jerusalem. Speaking of the Jews it says:

"Other peoples have been destroyed and absorbed by newer and stronger nations, others have lost vitality and strength in the process of the ages, but the Jews of to-day are as numerous, as active, and as powerful in their influence upon the world's affairs as they were when Solomon in all his glory raised the temple upon the hill of Zion, and, above all, scattered though they may be, they are as distinct a people. In language, creed, customs and methods of thought, and in physical characteristics, they are like none of the races who surround them."

Concerning the Holy Land it says: "The Jew remembers that for Palestine his fathers fought, that there amid a deluge of dark and cruel superstition they kept burning the brightest light of pure and noble faith which the old world knew. Every foot of it is hallowed to him by exquisite and inspiring traditions. The sweetest singers of mankind lived and died there, prophets and teachers, whose words are still a comfort and an inspiration to the whole civilized world. Great rulers were born in it, whose codes and maxims are the foundation of all modern social order; and high-souled heroes lived in it, the thrill of whose deeds still vibrates upon the earth. Who can wonder that the eyes of the Jews always turned, and still turn, towards Jerusalem? Many of the best of them ardently cherish the beautiful tradition which speaks of the restoration of the sceptre of David."—The Occident.

THE REVEALED MYSTERIES.

"But it is written, eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." 1 Cor. ii. 9.

The above text has been looked upon as proving that God's promises are so shrouded in mystery, as to be incomprehensible.

It is claimed that all those great lines of prophetic truth which were revealed in ancient times to the prophets, are not to be understood until after their fulfilment; and whenever an attempt is made to interpret those prophetic words, the above text is quoted with an air of assurance, that God's purpose is so clothed with mystery as to be beyond mortal ken; but the text is simply a quotation from the prophet Isaiah. (Isa. lxiv. 4.) If the reader, however, will examine the next verse, he will learn that God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit. "For the Spirit searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God." 1 Cor. i. 10. Hence, the apostle speaks of the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom which God ordained before the ages unto our glory.

Many things connected with the work and mission of Christ were called mysteries, but in each case the mystery has been revealed through the Spirit of the Divine Father. This can be illustrated by the Scriptures. Take for example, the parables of our Lord, as recorded in Matt. xiii. Jesus says to the apostles, "It is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom heaven." Matt. xiii. 11. This group of parables illustrated the growth of the kingdom of heaven on earth. Christ is presented to us as the future King. The earth, renovated and redeemed from sin, is to be the location of the kingdom of God; the time of its establishment is denominated the end of the world or age, variously denominated or called, The harvest, the time of resurrection, and the period of the coming of the Son of man. This kingdom of God, of which the gospel is good news, will succeed all earthly kingdoms and become a universal kingdom, which shall fill the whole earth, as set forth in that sublime prophecy of Daniel, ii. 44, 45.

Take another example: "Israel has been scattered among the nations of the world. Jerusalem is in ruins, and trodden down by the Gentiles. The temple service has ceased, and Israel is scattered among the nations." This is one of the mysteries of our dispensation. The apostle Paul in Rom. xi. makes the following clear statement in regard to the otherwise great mystery. "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part is happened to Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, and so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written, 'There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob, for this is my covenant unto them when I shall take away their sins.' As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sakes, but, as touching the election they are beloved for the fathers' sakes. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance." Rom. xi. 25-29. From this it appears that blindness came upon Israel in consequence of unbelief and disobedience, which blindness will remain until the period of our Lord's return to Zion, at which time Israel will exclaim, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Matt. xxiii. 9.

Take another example. The resurrection of the holy dead is one of the mysteries now revealed. The apostle clearly presents to us a solution of this supposed mystery. He says, "Behold, I show you a mystery. We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump,"—the seventh in the apocalyptic series, which brings to our world our absent Lord, the union of the holy dead, the eternal kingdom, the time of judgment or reward to his people and the overthrow of the power of sin. Then immortality will be conferred upon those who shall be found worthy of the "well done."

The resurrection was looked upon by the apostle as necessary in order to a participation in the glory of Jesus the Messiah, and as a time when the holy dead should receive their reward. This resurrection includes the bringing forth from the state of death all who shall be found worthy of immortal life in the kingdom of God. The apostle clearly sets forth that this supposed mystery will find its solution in the resurrection of those who are thus to be crowned and blessed. Therefore, the supposed mystery has been revealed.

Another example in connection with a revelation of the mystery is presented to us in Eph. iii. The apostle states "How that by revelation he made known to me the mystery, as he wrote afore in a few words whereby, when ye read ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ, which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit. That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs and of the same body and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel."

The Jews claimed that the promises made to the fathers were to them exclusively, and that the Gentiles were in no way to enjoy the blessings of Abraham, but Christ is not only the heir of those blessings, but has extended the offer of a joint participation to all the Gentiles who have become believers of the gospel. This was to the Jewish people a mystery, and, to this day the mystic veil of unbelief is upon their hearts. But when the Redeemer comes to Zion, ungodliness shall be turned away from Jacob and the long-looked for day shall come. The mystery of God shall be finished, and the judgments of God shall be in the earth. The dark sayings of old shall gleam forth in light and the hidden wisdom of the Eternal Spirit shall be made plain. Happy indeed is he who shall await with patience the solutions of the divine purpose as revealed in prophecy and promise.

H. V. REED.

MILK AND WATER CHRISTIANITY.

In Eph. iv. 26, Common Version, we have this exhortation, "Be ye angry and sin not. Let not the sun go down upon your wrath." Should read, "Be ye wrathful and sin not. Let not the sun go down on your act of provocation," (the provocation you cause some one else,) a very different thought the reader will observe from that brought out in the Common Version. The first clause of the exhortation is quoted from Psa. iv. 5. The clause following it in the Psalm is not quoted by Paul, probably for the reason that he wants to make a different application from that made by the Psalmist. What the Psalmist says in the clause immediately following the one quoted is this: "What ye say in (with) your hearts, feel compunctions for on your beds." This exhortation is exactly in harmony with such general and specific teachings as, "Become kings of righteousness." Don't thoughtlessly yield to every impulse of feeling (the heart). Think and act judiciously. Be guided by your enlightened reason. "Walk in the light." Let your heart go along with you and be in your every word and work, but let your head rule and control your heart, your impulses and passions. "What ye say with your hearts," is equivalent to saying, what ye say hastily without due reflection, or under the sudden impulse of some over-mastering passion. Feel compunctions for this in the cool afterthought and meditation that comes to you on your bed, after you have tried it by the Scriptural standard of right-doing to God and neighbor, weighed it in the balances and found it wanting, so sadly wanting in any true wisdom or good purpose.

But this was not the application that Paul desired to make of that which he quotes from Psalms iv. What he is trying to teach and develop in a stalwart and noble form of Christian character. He therefore quotes the inspired word; the oracular word on the question which so naturally arises in any man's mind who is actuated by a regenerated sense of moral obligation, when thrown into the rush and scramble of every day practical experience.

Is it right to get mad? And if so, under what circumstances, and to what extend? How mad is it right for me to get?

The inspired word quoted answers these two queries fully and explicitly. Yes, It is right not only to get mad, but to get wrathful, and wrath is a good deal stronger term than anger. For wrath is the flaming out of the angry fire that burns within one's bosom. So illustrate from the Scriptures themselves, "God is angry with the wicked every day." But he is "long-suffering and merciful," "not desirous that any should perish." But (Psa. ii. 13,) "when his anger shall have flamed out swiftly, happy are they all who have put their trust in him." "Let your moderation be known unto all men," is not addressed to "milk and water" people. There would be no propriety in it. Paul was very far from being such a character.

When Peter practiced hypocrisy on a certain occasion did Paul politely ignore it and say nothing about it? No. This is the record. "I withstood him to his face," and I'll venture the fire flew when two such flints as Peter and Paul came together in antagonism.

There is altogether too much "milk and water" in modern Christianity, too much of the "laissez faire" philosophy.

Paul exemplified what he taught, and he was constantly fighting with other "wild beasts" than those he overcame in the arena at Ephesus. God denominates all the nations that have not been Christianized "wild beasts," and if it is true of a nation it is true of the individuals that go to make up the nationality. Teaching mere morality is like taming wild beasts. The result is good, enough for a "show." But there is little practical utility in it. Regeneration is a law that asserts itself even in the practical utility of the domestic animal. This is the only sort of "evolution" that experience has shown to produce a marketable product. Nobody wants a wild ass that has been tamed, but a tame ass that has been trained to draw his chariot, nor a wolf that has been tamed for a watch-dog.

The domestic ass, must have been a wild ass some time or other, but he has had time to become regenerated, and the original dog may have been a wolf, but he has long ago lost the wolf instincts. Just so with a regenerated man or nation. The instincts have been changed. "Righteous indignation" is as different from unsanctified anger or wrath as the noble fighting qualities of the watch-dog above the snapping, snarling instincts of the wolf. Why does the watch-dog bark and bite angrily and wrathfully? To defend his master and that which his master holds dear. Why should the one who serves another master, and who is bound by every consideration of right as well as gratitude, hold his peace and hesitate to show his teeth to prowling vice and ragged iniquity?

But remember that the instincts of the regenerated servant of God have undergone a change as radical as is the metamorphosis of the wolf into the faithful watch-dog.

To use the Scripture parable illustration, your anger is no longer "the insensate anger of the asp," nor "the wine (the passionate fermentation) of your life the anger of dragons." There is no poison of malice in your retributive bite. Regeneration has drawn the poisonous fang of revenge out of your heart and mouth. You seek peace and not strife. "Your weapons for the tearing down of the strongholds of iniquity," you have come to realize, are not according to the flesh but the spirit, and this means speaking the word of God in truth and love, remembering that this word is a two-edged sword penetrating to the dividing asunder of the natural life and the spiritual life, and remembering that speaking it in truth and love, is not leaving this glittering falsehood, this sword of the spirit, hid in some scabbard of apostate ignorance and "mystery" (which is superstition) but constantly flashing before the eyes of brazen iniquity with the prophetic gleam of coming retribution, individual and national, when he who in mercy now restraineth will no longer restrain, when "the wrath of the Lamb" even "shall be revealed against every one who loveth and maketh a lie." This is the explanation of David's "hating with a perfect hatred." The hate when rightly understood is always directed toward the sin, not the sinner, and it is only when the sinner becomes obdurately wedded to his idols that the fire of a righteous indignation sweeps him away along with his cherished sin, as something of no practical utility, of "no account," as "chaff" from "the threshing floor," where God winnows the wheat.

Be ye wrathful (therefore) and sin not.

Editor Restitution:

The condition of the religious world is sickening to behold, look whichever way you will, whether to the popular sects, or to the Adventist sects.

There are two Adventist sects represented in this little village at the present time: the Seventh day Adventists, and the party whose organ is The World's Crisis. A party of the Seventh day Adventists came here week before last from their campmeeting at Lake Wood, and set up their tent and commenced work, to deliver the last message to be delivered during the time of "human probation." I have heard every discourse that they have given here so far.

It is the strangest message that I ever heard. The following is a brief outline:

Adam by transgression lost Paradise, and his dominion over the earth, and the living creatures that inhabit land, air, and sea, also his life. Christ is to restore all these things. He died to purchase back that lost inheritance. He went into the Holy Place in the heavenly sanctuary, remained there, doing, I know not what, till a certain time, the end of the 2300 days, then went into the most holy apartment, and there accomplishes the "investigative judgment" with reference to his household, his saints, by looking over the books of account kept by the angels. Also during his present stay in heaven, he is building mansions in the New Jerusalem for the saints, that each one may have a mansion.

The signs of his return are all, or nearly all fulfilled. He will soon come into mid-heaven, send his angels to raise the dead saints, and gather them and the living saints to himself; he will then take them up into the New Jerusalem, and place them in their respective mansions, and put into their hands the important work, of conducting the investigating judgment upon the world and the fallen angels, by giving them the books of account to look over. They will be engaged in this work for a thousand years. During this thousand years, the earth will be in a state of desolation.

At the end of the millennium Christ, the saints and the city will descend; the wicked will be raised. Christ's feet resting on the Mount of Olives, the mountain will be removed and space cleared away for the Holy City whose length is 375 miles and its breadth the same. The devil will deceive the nations and bring them up around the city and fire will consume the wicked and the earth. The sins of the saved will be laid on the devil's head and he will bear them away to his final destruction. The earth and heaven will then be made new, and this is the restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the Holy prophets. And there it is that Jesus occupies the throne of his father David. And thus it is that Jehovah performs his truth to Jacob, and his mercy to Abraham, as he swore to the fathers from the days of old. Scattered Israel will be destroyed together with the nations when their Messiah comes the second time to save his people. They will sleep in death, in the dust of the desolate earth for a thousand years. The devil will deceive them and the nations no more for a thousand years. At the end of the thousand years they will awake upon the desolate earth and find not their Messiah, but the devil among them to deceive them. Deceived with the nations they will gather around the city; but they will not recognize it as their ancient Jerusalem rebuilt, but a vast city covering the land promised to their fathers, but they shall not enter that city: the fire of Jehovah's wrath will fall upon them because they despised the law and rejected their Messiah. Surely "blindness" in a very great "part" has come upon Israel till their destruction and the destruction of the Gentiles shall be fully accomplished.

And here I must leave these thoughts for the consideration of the readers of THE RESTITUTION.

Looking for wonderful developments both in the religious and in the irreligious world.

Sunday School Lesson.

The following lesson was prepared by Brother William Mills, of Andover, Dakota, and used in his class, Sunday, April 5, 1885.

Thief on the cross. What was the thief's request?

Ans. Luke xxiii. 42.

What was the answer Christ gave him?

Ans. Greek Diaglott, "Indeed I say to thee to-day with me thou shalt be in the Paradise. Luke xxiii. 43.

Did Christ go to Paradise that day?

Ans. Luke xxiii. 46, 52; xxiv. 4, 7, 28; John xix. 33; xx. 17, 20.

Did the thief go to Paradise that day?

No, the dead know not anything. Psalms cxlvi. 4.

Was Paradise in existence that day?

2 Cor. xii. 1, 4.

Where is the Key to this Vision?

Ans. 2 Peter iii. 5, 7, 13.

Here is your third Heaven and Earth Paradise restored. Rev. ii. 7.

Where will the tree of life be on the third Heaven and Earth or New Heaven and Earth?

Ans. Rev. xxii. 2, 24.

Youth's Column.

Rock Me to Sleep.

Backward, turn backward, O Time! in your flight,
Make me a child again—just for to-night!
Mother come back from the echoless shore,
Take me again to your heart as of yore;
Kiss from my forehead the furrows of care,
Smooth the few silver threads out of my hair;
Over my slumbers your loving watch keep—
Rock me to sleep, Mother—rock me to sleep!

Backward, slow backward, O swiftness of years!
I am weary of toil, I am weary of tears!
Toil without recompense, tears all in vain,
Take them, and give me my childhood again!
I have grown weary of dust and decay,
Weary of flinging my soul wealth away,
Weary of sowing for others to reap;
Rock me to sleep, Mother—rock me to sleep!

Tired of the hollow, the base, the untrue!
Mother, O Mother! my heart calls for you!
Many a summer the grass has grown green,
Blossomed and faded, our feet have been seen;
Yet with strong yearnings and passionate pain,
Long I to-night for your presence again!
Come from the silence so long and so deep,
Rock me to sleep, Mother—rock me to sleep!

Over my heart in the days that are flown,
No love like mother's love ever has shown;
No other worship abides and endures,
Faithful, unselfish, and patient like yours;
None like a mother can charm away pain
From the sorrowing soul and the world-weary brain!
Slumber's soft calm o'er my heavy lids creep,
Rock me to sleep, Mother—rock me to sleep.

Come, let your brown hair, just tinged with gold,
Fall on your shoulders again as of old;
Let it rest over my forehead to-night,
Shielding my eyes from the flickering light,
For oh! with its sunny-edged shadows once more,
Haply will throng the sweet visions of yore;
Lovingly, softly its bright billows sweep—
Rock me to sleep, Mother—rock me to sleep.

Mother, dear Mother! the years have been long
Since I last heard your lullaby song;
Sing, then again!—to my soul it shall seem
Womanhood's years have been only a dream;
Clasp to your arms in a loving embrace,
With your soft, light kisses just sweeping my face.
Never forsaken to wake or to weep!
Rock me to sleep, Mother—rock me to sleep!

A Rothschild Story.

The gentle reader at this proverb—Honesty is the best policy—probably has himself and other Christians ten times in mind to one thought of a Jew, for the sons of Abraham, in this regard, do not stand in the best repute with Christians. Nevertheless—or just for this reason—I will relate a story of an honest Jew, and the Christian reader may then lay his hand upon his heart and ask himself, what he would have done in the same case.

When in the year 1792 the French army approached the dominion of the Elector of Hesse-Cassel, he was obliged to take to flight. On his route through Frankfort-on-the-Main he became acquainted with the Jewish banker of that place, Moses Rothschild. The man was, to be sure, not rich, but on account of his uprightness and shrewdness in the best sense, the elector proposed to commit to him some millions in gold and jewels for safe-keeping. The Jew did not at once agree to this, but the elector plied persuasion and left the treasure with him without even asking a receipt for it. Scarcely had Rothschild hidden the treasure in his garden, when the French marched into Frankfort. In order to save the prince's treasure Moses gave up his own money freely to the plundering foe. But as soon as quiet was restored he began his business as banker and gold-dealer again, but at first only in a small way, but extended it continually more and more by means of the elector's treasure, so that he soon passed for one of the richest and most solid of bankers.

As soon now as the elector, in 1802, returned to his States he came again through Frankfort and sought out Rothschild.

"Have the villains taken all I have, Moses?" said he.

"Not a dollar!" replied Moses, solemnly.

"What do you say?"

"Not a dollar!"

"How? It has been told me that the sans culottes robbed you of everything. I have read it, too, in the papers."

"All that was mine, it is true, but what belonged to your royal highness I fortunately saved. Your gold and silver I have used in my business and am able to restore all to you with five per cent. interest."

The elector, astonished and thankful, pushed the interest money back, as an atonement for what the French had taken from the honest Moses: but as a reward for his exemplary honesty he committed the whole amount of his treasure to him for twenty years longer, at a yearly interest of two per cent. Besides this the prince endeavored to be useful to the worthy Moses in all ways, and did not fail at the Vienna Congress of 1814 to celebrate his spotless honesty before the assembled sovereigns, whereby he obtained for him the confidence of the emperors of Austria and Russia, and of other European rulers.—W. H. in N. Y. Observer.

Dear Children:

There are a few circumstances connected with my youth which may prove somewhat interesting to you, especially as I am a stranger to the dear ones who have for some months read my letters. At an early age I was intrusted to the care of a nurse maid, hearing an excellent character who was a pious Quakeress, her sweet lessons of instruction influenced my tender mind for good. My mother having been very cautious that our first impressions should be directed aright. Each child was allowed a little weekly money, to me was given a half penny, my nurse was anxious I should spend the trifle as she expressed it, for God, so induced me to save until I had the amount to buy a Testament to give to a poor woman, and last I should weary she added a little from her earnings, I was much gratified with her proposition, and with no small amount of pleasure I purchased the book. Dear mother permitted me to take it to the one whom I thought would gladly receive it. I knocked at her door; a gruff voice said, what do you want? I answered, I am come to give you something you will like. She opened the door, and rudely said, what is it? I handed the book to her saying, this will teach you all about God. She roughly said, go away, what do I want with a book. I cannot read, why did you not bring me something to drink, and upon the hurried me from the door. You can imagine, my dear children, what a sad discouragement this was to me, my young heart seemed crushed to the earth. In sadness I returned home, and told my dear mother the unkind treatment I had received; she said, you see my child what you have to encounter, but the lesson will do you good, in this way we learn. I hastened to the nursery, and poured forth my pent up grief, my nurse soothed me by saying, God was watching you with delight, and will bless you in this public effort to do his will, you will not always meet with such discouragement, some one more worthy will gladly receive it. This strengthened me to continue in the way I had commenced. The Episcopalian minister to whose church we belonged was very zealous, and attracted a large fashionable congregation. One Sunday he preached a touching sermon on the distressed condition of the famishing poor in Ireland. I was sorely grieved, and wondered what one so young as I could do to aid them. I entreated my mother to let me go and beg for them, the nurse made a bag and a little book and with delight I went forth to the work which lasted six days, on Saturday evening I took my bag which contained three pound fifteen shillings to the minister. He was astonished and said, God speed you my little girl, and bless you greatly in such earnestness. On Sunday he held the bag up to his crowded congregation, and said, there is a little girl in the church who is connected with this bag, I wish she would stand up so that every one could see her. Six days her little feet have traveled from door to door asking relief for the starving. O may God incline the hearts of older ones to go, and do likewise, and quite a number of wealthy ladies engaged in the work, but never did I feel like hiding myself as then. At an early age I was made a teacher in the Sunday School, but felt a need that some one should teach me, this led me to read the Scriptures often, and with diligent care. My pocket always found room for my little Testament, and although I understood it not, it was so sweet to my taste. My noble mother was exceedingly charitable and like "the weeping one" she would search out the poor and needy, and wherever I was sent with aid, she charged me never to leave them without reading a portion from the Scripture; this was quite a help in leading youthful steps, and little did my worthy mother know the deep impression her silent acts of generosity were making on my tender mind. I remember seeing her in deep grief, having lost a sweet little sister. I said to her, mother what makes you weep so bitterly, she quickly seemed to gather up courage, and said, my child, the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, and blessed be the name of the Lord. O how touchingly sweet these words fell upon my heart, I never forgot them and the heavenly look of endurance which beamed from her sad face still lives in my memory. Yet my dear children with all the earnest zeal for God, I was ignorant about what I should do to be saved, like the one whose name signifies, "The beam from the sun," I had to hear words whereby I could be saved. It was the way of the Lord I wanted to know more perfectly that I might be beloved of him, as the one whose name signifies, "The judgment of God." I often prayed that God would direct me to some one who could unfold the prophets. Through the tender mercy of God, I met with Bro. John Goodliffe who gave a reason for the hope that is in him with meekness and fear, his loving patient forbearance with my stubborn blindness led me in the way that I should go, and thanks be to God I can say, "I know that whereas I was once blind, now I see."

Children beloved, I want you to see how God leads us step by step if we have a willing mind, "Incline your ear and come near, and your soul shall live." I am glad "I remembered my creator in the days of my youth."

Your affectionate Teacher.

E. COFFMAN.

REMEMBER

That we will send THE RESTITUTION to the poor, at their request, so long as we can get the means to publish the paper. Let all our brethren who have means to use in sending the good news to others, send us the name of some friend or relative, and send us an extra dollar, to send the paper to them. If you cannot think of any such persons send the money, and we will apply it where it will be appreciated and return blessings on the donor.

Notice.

Can any one give us the present address of Bro. S. M. Hixon formerly of Clarksville, Texas.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CRAPSER, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, July 8, 1885.

We need the money due us. If your subscription has expired please send us the money to renew soon.

THE following letters containing extracts from late numbers of the Boston Journal are, as will be seen, from Bro. D. T. Taylor, and these extracts are the ones alluded to last week. We append a short additional item from the last Phrenological Journal.

HYDE PARK, MASS. June 24.

Bro. Chaplin:

I thank you sincerely for still furnishing me THE RESTITUTION so freely. I read it always with profit and interest, as it generally contains some things omitted by other papers and which yet interest me. I cannot say I share in your expectation concerning the Jews, but I watch closely current movements of that singular people and investigate all facts, while waiting for light via further developments.

Here are some curious matters—first the scrap about the belief of the Afghans and an etymological argument that seems somewhat conclusive. Yet how can this be? Can Saul, Judah, or Israel be thus traced?

Again: here is a statistical note, without doubt truthfully made by competent authority, concerning the increase of converted Jews in England and elsewhere. Putting it alongside with Dr. Tholuck and Dr. Cummings' statement that more Jews have been converted during the last hundred years than during 1700 years previously, does it not show a remarkable fulfilment of Hosea iii. 4, 5? Have we not reached the "afterward"? Are not the "latter days" here? Does not "their God and David" mean the Father and the crucified Son? And don't 1500 converted Jews per annum prove the "return" has begun? This is very wonderful—a marked sign of our times, a harbingor of The Day. God's peace be upon you. Yours,

D. T. TAYLOR.

June 27, 1885.

Bro. Chaplin:

Here is more on the subject I touched on in my last. Perhaps you will reprint it. But what does it mean? Can the Afghans prove such descent from Israel? And what comes of it—what then? Is Russia really Gog of the Magog land? I have some 80 pages which I wrote on the subject 20 years ago—never finished—never published it. It may yet come into some thoughtful use. Our times grow more and more interesting.

I am your brother in Him.

AN INTERESTING PROCLAMATION BY THE AMEER.

LONDON, June 24.—The Pall Mall Gazette prints a hitherto unpublished proclamation of the Ameer of Afghanistan to his subjects, issued in 1882. It reviews the history of the Afghans, claiming that they are descended from the lost ten tribes of Israel. It traces their descent from Adam through Jacob, their subjection in Egypt, their deliverance therefrom by Moses, their wanderings in the desert and their settlement in Syria under the Ameership of Saul and Solomon, to their Babylonian captivity, their release, their wanderings on the hills of Ghour and their settlement in Afghanistan. It concludes by exhorting the Afghans to trust in God, who will preserve them from their terrible enemy, Russia, who is waiting to devour them.

The Afghans believe that they are Israelites, and that they are descended from King Saul. Their physiognomy sustains this claim as well as their names, which include Yakoub, Jacob; Ayoub, Job; Muss, Moses; Ibrahim, Abraham; Isbak, Isaac, these names being found in the present Ameer's family.

Only thirty-five Christian Israelites were known to be in all England at the beginning of this century. Since then more than one hundred Jews have been ordained clergymen of the Church of England, and there are estimated to be 8,000 Christian Israelites in England. In one way or another it is thought that 1,500 Jews leave the synagogue for the Christian church every year.

A LEAF OF HISTORY.

The history of Afghanistan, like that of all Central Asiatic countries, is one of almost constant change. A small power, it has frequently been the prey of its stronger neighbors. In the ninth century the Afghans became subject to the Persians, and up to 1708, with intervals of independence, the country has been an appendage to some neighboring empire. It was long divided between the monarchs of Persia and Hindostan. The history of Afghan independence dates from 1708, but was one incessant, and the downfall of one power and the uprising of another mark its history from the beginning.

In Persian history they are said to date their name to Afghan, son of Eremia, son of Saul, King of Israel, whose posterity, carried away at the time of the captivity, was settled by the conqueror of the mountains of Ghori, Kabool, Candahar, and Ghizni. The country was successively a part of the Persian and Greek empires. The name "Afghan" is not recognized by the natives, but is applied to them by their Persian neighbors. Their proper name is Pooshtaca, plural Pushtanneh. The Hindoos call them Paitans, Patans, or Pastans. They are generally thought to be of Arabian descent.

Books and Pamphlets Received.

From Hon. Selah Merrill U. S. Consul, Jerusalem—"East of the Jordan," a large volume of about 460 pages, and—"Galilee in the Time of Christ," a volume of about 160 pages. From Eld. D. T. Taylor a volume entitled, "The Coming Earthquake and other tracts," containing nearly 200 pages. Of these we hope to give a fuller notice hereafter. From the cursory examination we have had time to give these works we are convinced that they are volumes worthy of a place in the choicest libraries.

CHRIST THE SON OF GOD.

It is said that "there is nothing new under the sun." This is quite true so far as theories are concerned in relation to the origin of Christ. The notion that Christ was the natural son of Joseph has been argued and re-argued at various times throughout the entire history of the Gentile age. Persons of a kind spirit, and having a peculiar organization, prefer to believe that Christ came into our world by what is called "natural generation." In order to sustain this view, the first chapter of Matthew and the third chapter of Luke have to be rejected as spurious. And yet the manuscripts so far as we know contain those very chapters. It is freely admitted that if those chapters are genuine the whole theory falls to the ground. Persons who have read "the fathers" as they are called, are aware of the fact that they maintain the generally received position, that Christ was begotten in flesh by spirit. This is the position plainly stated in Matthew 1st chapter and Luke iii. chapter. Hence the anxiety to get rid of those two chapters. It is stated that we have no manuscript earlier than the 4th century, and that certain allusions made by Epiphanius are such as to throw doubt upon the genuineness of manuscripts which are so late, and so far away from the events said to have occurred.

If our position depended alone upon the mere date of a manuscript then we might question the statements and have room for grave doubts. But the facts are that we have testimony direct and explicit far back of the 4th century. The Peshito manuscript we now know existed early in the 2nd century, was read in the churches of Syria, and strange to say, if not true, that these very chapters of Matthew and Luke are found in their integrity, in this ancient book which reaches back within fifty years of the apostles themselves. Take another view of the matter. Justin Martyr who was born, A. D. 114 and became a convert to the Christian faith and wrote upon all the leading points of doctrine in his celebrated Apology, quotes directly from the book of Matthew and also quotes from the 1st chapter. To say that he quoted from some apocryphal book, and palmed it off as true, is an open and wicked charge. Cyprian, Irenæus and Origin wrote largely upon the doctrines of the New Covenant, and mention the birth of Christ in the same way as Matthew and Luke, and refer very repeatedly to these very chapters for proof of their position. Those writers all precede the 4th century and refer to books and manuscripts of their own times which contained these very doctrines. They wrote as though these matters were generally taught and believed in their day. Their writings bear date A. D. 240-70 —Now, is it possible to believe that a forgery of such a grave character could have been committed and palmed off upon the whole religious world, without detection? That men could occasionally change a text or add a verse is quite plausible but to believe that whole chapters were added is improbable. It is freely admitted that no one can have a spirit birth without a spirit begetting. The begettal of spirit takes place in flesh! This is true of all the heirs of promise. Then is there anything strange or remarkable about Christ's Spirit begotten in flesh, in order to his resurrection to a spirit life? And is it not true that the only place where his spirit begettal is unvulgared is in those very chapters which a wild theory would expunge from the Testament!

It seems to me the highest presumption for men to follow after vague notions which require such unwonted liberty as to chop out whole chapters of the Scriptures in order to make out even a plausible theory. We must adhere to the great truth that Jesus is the only Begotten of the Father, which lifts him above the will of flesh into that divine nearness which makes him the Son of God.

B. V. REED.

The following should have appeared in our last issue in connection with the letter from J. D. Wood.

PHILOMATH, Oregon.

Editor Restitution:

Oregon has two principal mountain ranges, the Coast range and the Cascade mountains. The latter range is the highest, Mt. Hood is the highest peak. Between these two ranges lies the fertile valley of the Willamette and the smaller Umpqua and Rogue river valleys.

East of the Cascades is a high plateau with the Blue Mountains in the north east. That part of the state which is east of the Cascades is called Eastern Oregon, that which lies west is called Western Oregon. The climate of Western Oregon is mild and moist. Eastern Oregon is much higher and therefore colder. It has also less rain and more snow. Forests of Cedar Pine and other forest trees in Western Oregon are among the finest in the world, the valleys of Western Oregon and a portion of Eastern Oregon produce large crops of the best wheat and other grains, apples, pears, and other fruits are abundant, and excellent, and grass grows well, and great quantities of beef and wool are produced. Gold, coal and other mineral products are mined in the mountains. The Columbia is the largest river; the Snake and Willamette are its most important branches, the Rogue and Umpqua flow into the Pacific and carry great quantities of lumber to market, the fisheries are valuable and many salmon are canned for export. The people are mostly engaged in farming and lumbering. Thousands of immigrants arrive in Oregon every year...to make homes in the unoccupied lands. The state is this rapidly growing in wealth and population. Portland is the largest city, it is situated on the west side of the Willamette at the head of ship navigation and its commerce is extensive. Salem the capital, is beautifully situated on the Willamette river, Astoria is an important shipping port and is largely interested in the Salem fisheries. Other places of importance are Dalles City, Albany, Cornwallis, Oregon City, Eugene City, and Roseburg.

Now dear brethren we have a fine valley here, it is healthy and the people are kind and friendly, there is a Macedonian cry over here in the Willamette valley for some one to come over and help us, we have no preacher of the one faith in the Willamette valley. While I have been in this county I have not heard one gospel sermon preached. Some are friendly here, father Berry baptized three of my family in the faith of the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ for the remision of sins.

B. F. ZINK.

N. B. If any of our ministers should come to Portland, and wish to find me they will take the West Side train and come to Corgwallis and from thence to Philomath and inquire for B. F. Zink—I live about five miles west of Philomath on Woods Creek. B. F. Z.

REDEMPTION THROUGH RESURRECTION.

The Lord's triumph over his enemies would be fruitless did it not require and issue in a triumph over death. Hence he must judge also this last enemy. He must rescue his captive people who have been carried away as prisoners into his realm. The Bible was written to reveal this grace of God in providing redemption for man, the first fruits of which he now receives, but whose full results are achieved on the other side of death. Hence, if our view of the Old Testament promises is not carried forward to this point, we shall fall short of their meaning. Failure to give this principle its full value is main cause of those mistifying and mistifying glosses, which, under the specious plea of "spiritual sense," have so obscured the true meaning of God's word, that multitudes have been led to doubt whether it is indeed his word. A sad proof of the blinding effect of this process is the fact that "the hope of the resurrection of the dead" which God gave to the fathers, Acts xxvi. 6, and of which all his holy prophets testify to those who have ears to hear, is taken out of a multitude of passages, in which it is embedded as the kernel, and robbed of which, they lose their chief value.

Old Testament passages which speak directly of judgment to be executed upon this last enemy are the following: "He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God shall wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it." Isa. xxv. 8. The whole background of the portion of Isaiah's prophecy on which this splendid promise is projected is one of judgment.

Hosea's prophecy is also burdened with premonitions of wrath to come, especially upon Ephraim, the schismatic kingdom of Israel. The issue of those judgments would be death to a great portion of the people. But in the wonder working of God the pains of death become the pangs of parturition. This figure occurs also in Isa. xxvi. 17, 18, before a promise of resurrection. The prophet foresees "the breaking forth of children," and exclaims in Jehovah's name, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave (sheol); I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction; repentance shall be hid from mine eyes." Hosea xiii. 14. The readiness of interpreters to eliminate resurrection teaching from the plainest Old Testament passages is illustrated by a late writer in the Andover Review. (Nov. 1884). After adopting an unusual and infelicitous rendering of the above passage, in face of the fact that the LXX. and St. Paul, in the free quotation of it, (1 Cor. xv. 55) endorse the obvious view of it, he maintains that it teaches the very opposite. His argument that such an outburst of promise is out of place in the midst of a context which speaks only of judgment amounts to nothing. The prophets abound in such instances. One is found indeed in this very chapter, and in the closest proximity to the passage in question (vs 9, 10). This promise explains that given in verse 9. "O Israel, thou has destroyed thyself; but in me is thy help." The ultimate issue of Israel's self destruction—was death. The grave covered all its hopes. But Jehovah who kills also makes alive. The honor of his name, his gracious covenant, required that not even death itself should remove his people beyond his power to help. And so he rises to the dignity of this exultant promise to ransom his people even from the power of Sheol. It is a just principle that a great and luminous promise like this sheds light upon the interpretation of all others of its class. There is a large class of all these passages which speak of redemption from death, individual and national. And many, which promise deliverance to the captives, and the opening of prison doors to them that are bound, reveal their deepest meaning only as we view them as looking forward to a ransom from captivity to death. The name Egypt (Mitzraim in Hebrew) signifies the "place of straitness." It thus furnishes a suitable type for the empire of death. And redemption from its body stands out upon the passages of Scripture as a primal type of Jehovah's redemption of his people from Sheol. It is interesting to trace through the Old Testament its use of the term "captivity." It will be seen that it often describes a worse than human bondage; and that the promise to Israel and to other nations to "cause their captivity to return and to have mercy upon them," Jer. xxxii. 7, 11, 26: xlix. 6, 39, implies more than redemption from human slavery. It looks forward to their ransom from the power of Sheol.

We have before seen, ch. iv. that the dead in Sheol are viewed as prisoners, Job iii. 18, shut up by bars in the pit. xvii. 16. The righteous, however, did not expect to remain there, "But God will redeem my soul from the power of Sheol; for he shall receive me." Psa. xlix. 15. In Psa. lxxxviii. 10-12, we hear the sighing of these prisoners. "Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead (rephaim) arise and praise thee? Shall thy loving kindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction? Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?" Psalm lxxix. 10, 11, is a prayer that God would avenge himself upon the heathen who had filled his land with slaughter and requite the blood of his servants. "Let the sighing of the prisoners come before thee; according to the greatness of thy power preserve those the children of death." (margin). So wide-spread was the work of death in this case that no vindication of Jehovah's name and people would suffice that did not provide for triumph, not only over their human enemies, but over death. He must hear the sighing of its prisoners and loose their bonds. That this is the ultimate deliverance sought its apparent from Psa. cii. The prophet declares that Jehovah will hear the prayer of the destitute and appear in glory to build up Zion. "This is written for a generation to come; and the people which shall be created shall praise the Lord." vs. 18. This coming generation, a people to be created for the Lord's praise, seems to be the resurrected children of death, (vs. 20, margin) spoken of afterwards. "For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth; to hear the groaning of the prisoner: to loose the children of death; to declare the name of the Lord in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem." We are well aware that interpreters may readily reduce the meaning of such passages down to such low level of "things present" and deny that they refer at all to that transcendent order of things of which the resurrection of Christ was the pledge. But we are quite sure that any one who accepts that great fact as the focal point toward which all the lines of God's working in the past converge, and from which they sweep away into the ages to come, will not accept any interpretation of such expressions in the Psalms and Prophets which does not view them as looking forward first to the Messiah's victory over death; second, to the rescue of his people from its bondage, and third, to an ultimate recovery of the generations of mankind who have gone down as prisoners into its realm.

Bondage in Egypt, captivity in Babylon and among all nations, stands out, no doubt, on the foreground of such passages. There is also a hidden reference to the spiritual darkness and bondage into which the people had fallen by reason of their sins, and a promise of quickening from this spiritual death. But the deliverance promised would be no message of mercy to the men to whom it was spoken, it would not meet the case, it would not execute the judgment written against all God's enemies, nor vindicate the honor of his name, did not the prophecies look forward to the ransom from Sheol of these very generations of men whom the wrath of their enemies and the justice of God had consigned to its gloomy prison.

Psalm lxviii. is a glowing anticipation of this deliverance by one who ascends on high, leading captivity captive, and obtaining "gifts for men, yea for the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell among them." (vs. 18.) "He that is our God is the God of salvation, and unto God the Lord belong the issues of death;" Conant translates "God is to us a God for deliverances and to Jehovah the Lord belong ways of escape from death." (The outgoings of death.—Young.) This Lord over death shall "wound the head of his enemies," and bring again his people from Bashan, and from the depths of the sea. (vs. 21, 22.) Bashan was a region on the further side of Jordan, type of death. That this deliverance is more than that of an elect remnant, or even of the nation of Israel, is manifest from the scope of the whole Psalm, which celebrates a salvation for which all the kingdoms of the earth are invited to sing praises unto God, vs. 32.

These promises of deliverance are both personal and national. Psalm xxiii. is a resurrection Psalm, to be understood first of the Messiah, but also of those in whose behalf he went down to death. The writer expresses his confidence that while no man "sought after his soul," (vs. 4, margin.) the Lord would be his portion in the land of the living and bring out his soul from prison. (vs. 7.) In Psalm xciii, we hear the same complaint, "For the enemy hath persecuted my soul, he hath bruised my life to the earth; hath caused me to dwell in dark places as the dead of old." (vs. 3.—Young's Translation.) We have the cry for deliverance, "Hear me speedily, O Lord: my spirit faileth: hide not thy face from me, for I am become like unto them that go down into the pit." (vs. 7, margin). "Cause me to hear thy loving kindness in the morning (the time of awakening) for in thee do I trust." And then we have the confident expectation; "For thy name's sake, O Lord, thou wilt quicken me; in thy righteousness thou wilt bring my soul out of distress. In thy loving kindness thou wilt cut off mine enemies, and will destroy all the adversaries of my soul: for I am thy servant." (vs. 11, 12, see Young's and Conant's versions.) Psalm cxvi. records a similar experience. "Compassed me have the cords of death and the straits of Sheol have found me: Distress and sorrow I find, and in the name of the Lord I call: I pray thee, O Lord, deliver my soul....for thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, my feet from over-throwing. I walk habitually before the Lord in the land of the living." (vs. 3-9, Young). Whatever application these words may have to release from spiritual death, verse 15 makes it clear that the ultimate deliverance in view is from death in Sheol. For this must be the "death of his saints" which remains "precious in the eyes of the Lord," and rescue from this the reason for the thanksgiving, "Thou hast loosed my bonds." vs. 16.

Without denying that such passages, which abound in the Psalms, may be properly applied to spiritual quickening, for these two forms of death are one in essence, we are sure that their ultimate and highest meaning is seen only as they speak to us of resurrection.

There is but one immortal Spirit in the Universe, the Spirit of God. He rules or abides in man. Gen. vi. 3. R. V. The Spirit of God may build up in man a permanent habitation, and so become one with man in unity of being, making him a partaker of the divine nature. Man then becomes inherently immortal. But he is not born so. The fact that all men live after death does not prove that their life will be eternal. Eternal life is the gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord.—Words of Reconciliation.

Miscellaneous.

DR. WARD, editor of the Independent, who has returned recently in good health from an extended journey in Asiatic Turkey, reports "that the labors of the Wolf Expedition in Babylonia have been brought to a successful termination. Many new sites of old cities never before visited were discovered, and careful investigations were made, which will not only help to fill out and complete our maps of this region, where, the Bible seems to indicate, the Garden of Eden was, but also to direct future excavations."

Cardinal Lavigerie, who is said to be the best living authority in regard to the extent and influence of Mohammedanism in Africa, has expressed the opinion that the influence of El Mahdi, especially the influence of his successes, will be immeasurable great throughout all Islamic Africa, since victory is to the wild, fanatical tribes conclusive demonstration of the Divine character and mission of the Prophet. "There are at present," he says, "from the Soudan to the Niger and the Senegal more than 60,000,000 of Mussulmans—that is to say, half-savage men—to whom Mohammedanism has been an elevation, and at the same time the religion that best suits their instincts. Can any one think without misgivings what this mass of men would do if ever they were to find chiefs and arms? Here, indeed, is a doubtful future."

HONORING THE HEBREW RACE.

The elevation of Sir Nathaniel de Rothschild to the peerage, under the title of Lord Rothschild, is the most important event in the history of the Hebrew race that has been recorded in many years. It is now about forty or fifty years since the English Parliament followed the Catholic Emancipation bill and the Reform bill by the Civil Rights Act that so modified the oath of office as to enable Hebrews to hold office under the English government. This was followed by an advancement in their social position, and Dr. Adler, the chief rabbi, was accorded a position in affairs of State with the clergy of other religions. The Hebrews on the Continent have for many years been accorded high titles, especially in Austria, but they have never been permitted to hold any political office.

A WONDERFUL BIBLE.

"There is in the possession of the Potter family of Rhode Island," said a distant relative of that family living in this city, "a Bible, which is not only notable for its antiquity, but for the history connected with it. It belonged to John Rogers. During the persecutions of the early martyrs he hid it to keep it from falling into the hands of Gardiner and Bonner or their spies. John Rogers was burned to the stake more than three centuries and a quarter ago. After his death the Bible fell into the hands of his eldest son, descendants of whom came to America in 1685, bringing the book with them. This was the family of James Rogers, who, in travelling through the New England wilderness, carried the Bible in his bosom and used it for a pillow. It was believed that it was an amulet that kept off the devil and the Indians. It descended through three generations of the Rogerses in this country to Judith Rogers, who married Thomas Potter of Hopkinton, R. I., in 1753. The Bible has been in the possession of the Potter family ever since. It is Matthew's or Cranmer's Bible, and it is not divided into verses. Its arrangements of chapters differs materially from that of the King James version. It contains the Liturgy of the English Church in the reign of Edward VI. It was printed about the year 1520."

THE SPHINX.

The Sphinx is not often thought of in connection with statuary, but it is one of the most wonderful statutes in the world, whether considered with regard to its size, the workmanship displayed, or to the skill required in moving so immense a mass of stone. It is believed to be contemporary with the Pyramids, but for ages the purpose of its erection has been lost. The shifting sands of the desert have buried it almost to the chin, but several attempts at great labor and expense have been made to uncover enough of it to make accurate measurements. None of these have been entirely successful, since the desert winds blow back the sand almost as fast as it is taken out; but enough has been done to approximate the dimensions of this enormous statue. The head is 28 feet and 6 inches from the top to the chin, while from the top of the head to the pedestal on which the body rests is 90 feet. The body is that of a crouching lion, and is 145 feet long, while the paws project in front of the head nearly 50 feet. The breadth of the shoulders is 36 feet, and, so far as has yet been discerned, the entire statue is of one block. An enterprising investigator bored an experimental hole in one of the shoulders to a depth of 27 feet, but found solid stone without a seam. How the mass was ever carved, or, being carved, how it was moved and placed in position will never be known.

BOMBAY, July 3.—There has been but a scanty rainfall so far this season. The prospects for good crops are bad in Madras and Bengal, but in the central provinces satisfactory results are looked for.

Yesterday there were 1,354 new cases of cholera in Spain, and 644 deaths. King Alphonso made an excursion into the infected district yesterday.

The total deaths from cholera in Spain now numbered over 9,000, nearly half of which occurred during the past seven days. The death rate continues to be four in nine.

Immense damage has been done to crops in Kansas and Western Missouri by the continuous cold rains. The loss of wheat in Kansas alone is estimated at 1,000,000 bushels.

Devastating storms and floods are reported in Austria and Hungary. During a terrific thunder-storm lightning caused a great conflagration by setting several houses on fire simultaneously, in the town of Horodenka, which was almost entirely consumed.

Eight persons were killed by lightning in Vienitz, Valacia, and the town of Zechovitz was partly ruined by a flood. In Hungary, thousands of acres of corn were ruined, and a church filled with worshipers was struck by lightning, killing several and injuring many.

Dr. Charles A. Briggs, Professor of Hebrew in the Union Theological Seminary, recently declared by the Interior to be the most accomplished Biblical scholar of this country, has come out strongly against the revised version of the Old Testament. He holds that the revisers made a great mistake in accepting as the basis of their work the same Massoretic Hebrew text that was used by the authors of King James version, and he concludes that in a short time the new version will need revising.

It is the long fight which brings out character and educates men to make the best of the victory when it is achieved. A sharp, short, brilliant campaign often results in a great waste of success and loss of opportunity because the victors have not gained the steadiness and wisdom to hold success with a strong, wise hand; the men who come out of the long campaign scarred and travel-worn know the cost of victory, and spend their hard won fortune temperately.

A DIP IN THE MILKY WAY.

Anybody who goes out of doors after the moon has set on one of these clear June evenings, upon lifting his eyes to the starry heavens, will be struck with the brilliant appearance of the Milky Way, flung like a light scarf of silver gauze across the bosom of the night, and gemmed at intervals with splendid stars and constellations. In this sparkling pathway of the gods he must go who would behold the richest star mines of the universe, in which astronomers have delved for hundreds of years without exhausting their wonders. To one who has never seen the Milky Way except as it presents itself to the naked eye, a glimpse of its radiant architecture with the aid of a good telescope is a most surprising and gratifying revelation. Nobody who once beholds those clouds, streams, and clusters of suns, innumerable, lighting up the far-away depths of space with a golden glow, can ever shake off the charm from his mind. Thenceforth the universe has a new meaning for him; he feels the wall of being moving away and widening out beyond his reach on every side. The sublime spectacle will haunt his memory and inspire his thoughts as long as he lives.

At this season the brilliant star Vega, in the constellation of the Lyre, is almost in the zenith at midnight. It may be recognized by means of two faint stars close by it, which make a little equilateral triangle with Vega. This is a good starting point for a telescopic excursion to the Milky Way. Vega itself is worth stopping a moment to look at. Even the observer with the naked eye will be likely to look back at Vega many times after he has once recognized its exceeding beauty and brightness, and will be astonished to find that all the stars do not look alike, as he had supposed. It requires but a minute's inspection to perceive that Vega is much whiter than most stars. In the telescope its light has a brilliant blue tint that invariable calls forth exclamations of admiration from those who see it for the first time. A good glass shows that the background of the heavens all around Vega is strewn with minute stars, many of which can only be seen by glimpses at intervals through the blinding light that surrounds the great star, particularly when the atmosphere is unsteady. Then they come out for a moment with piercing distinctness no bigger than needle points, but possessing the concentrated brilliancy of so many living diamonds. The ceaseless flashing and scintillating of Vega, filling the whole field of the telescope with the play of light, and the rapid appearance and disappearance of these starry bubbles, which seem to be constantly dancing and breaking upon the flood of radiance, make a peculiarly lively and fascinating spectacle.

Hanging below Vega to the eastward, and reaching around into the northwest on one hand and down to the southern horizon on the other, is the Milky Way. Letting the tube of the telescope drop downward, with his eye kept constantly at the ocular, the observer will become aware of his approach to the Galaxy by the increasing number of stars. Thicker and thicker they throng in the black sky, until their light becomes so mingled that the heavens look as though they were filled with clouds of gold dust. The field of view in the telescope does not cover a patch of sky as large as a cent held at arm's length, and yet in that little spot the stars are so numerous that one would as soon think of trying to count the bees in a flying swarm as of attempting to number them. Each is perfectly distinct, but their minuteness is astonishing. They are microscopic stars. Every tiny twinkler has its little rays, and is a complete star in appearance, but seems, with all its twinklings, not to cover a space as broad as the smallest pin's head. This multitude of scintillating points, sending tiny rays of light into the eye from all parts of the telescopic field, sometimes produces a very curious effect upon the sense of sight. The eye seems to be tickled by the little beams that pour into it criss-cross from all directions. If every glittering particle in a cloud of diamond dust floating in the air could be put to rotating swiftly, so as to flash forth an unceasing stream of light, the appearance would not be unlike that of a telescopic field in the richer parts of the Milky Way. When the telescope is moved rapidly over these star fields the background of the sky seems to be veined with lines of fire, the motion drawing out the stars into tiny streaks of light, and a larger star now and then flashes, streaming like a meteor, across the field, startling the beholder with its blaze.

Yet the multitudes of stars in the Galaxy do not appear to have been scattered at random. One of the most interesting and charming features of the view is the appearance of design in the arrangement of the stars. They seem to go in pairs, triples, and sets of other numbers; sometimes long streams of stars will be seen, every member of the set keeping its place like soldiers in a file. The tendency to the formation of geometrical figures is very apparent, and occasionly the form and arrangement of these figures are so beautiful and striking that the observer instinctively utters an exclamation of wonders and admiration. It is as if God's children had been at play in those distant starry fields, using suns to mark the goals and boundaries of their game.

The observer is delighted upon close inspection to find that he can detect marked differences of color in the stars of the Galaxy. The great majority of them are white or yellow, but scattered about are red, orange, blue, lilac, and other colored stars, which are often so grouped with their white companions as to heighten the effect of the geometrical figures before described. The difference in size and brilliancy of the stars also adds greatly to the beauty of the scene, and frequently one or more stars of larger size will be found in the centre of a swarm of little ones, or otherwise so distributed among them as to convey the impression that they are the leaders of these starry hosts.

Even to the naked eye the Milky Way presents a remarkable complexity of structure, being very irregular in outline, and varrying in brilliancy in different regions. In that part of the Galaxy lying just east of Vega a singular gap appears in the centre of the stream reaching north as far as the great cross in Cygnus, and running toward the south until the Milky Way breaks up into fragments of shining clouds. In the telescope this intricate organization of the galactic universe is seen to be carried out in the utmost detail. From regions where the thickly crowded suns run up toward the centre of the groups and clusters into a perfect blaze, a slight movement of the tube of the telescope will carry the eye across comparatively barren tracts, and now and then over black spots like holes in the sky, where not a star can be seen. That broken portion of the Milky Way lying south of Vega, and streaming through to the horizon between the bright constellations of Sagittarius and Scorpio is particularly rich in sun clusters, and in traversing this region the telescope should be swept from side to side of the Galaxy in order to pick them up. There they will be seen in every variety, from swarms whose individual members can be counted, up to condensed globular clusters, which, with small magnifying powers, resemble balls of frosted silver, whose surfaces seem alive with twinkling light, the mass of stars composing them being separable only by the higher powers of the telescope. One of these wonderful clusters in the constellation of Antinous resembles, when seen in a small telescope, an outspread fan of silver. With larger glasses it is resolved into a cluster of innumerable stars, one much brighter than the others being situated in the pivot of the fan.

One of the most astonishing discoveries of astronomy is that all the stars are in motion in various directions, though their distance is so great that we can perceive this motion only by means of the most delicate measurements. And in many cases groups of stars are found to be moving together in one direction while the neighboring stars are moving in another direction. So the great procession of suns that composes the Galaxy is made up of innumerable bright companies, each marching under its own glittering banners, and so moving as to cause in the course of ages the most complex evolutions in the wonderful pageant of the skies. Our own sun, carrying the earth and his other planets with him, is also a wanderer, and is apparently flying to join the multitude of his fellows in that splendid quarter of the heavens where Vega, unquestionably a much greater sun than ours, shines supereminent.—*N. ## THE EDICT OF NANTES, AND ITS REVOCATION.

[At the time of the secession of Henry IV. to the throne of France, religious persecutions had resulted in the impoverishment and almost ruin of that country, and Henry, after four years' determined efforts, succeeded in passing the "Edict of Nantes," which gave equal religious liberty to Huguenots and Jesuits. No mention of the Jews was made in the edict; the first intimation of them arose out of the great revolution in 1710. The Jesuites never forgave Henry for taking from them the privilege of persecuting others, and he paid for his good work with his life. The Huguenots looked upon the death of Henry as the precursor to the repeal of the edict; and probably it would have been, had not the Government of France fallen into the hands of one of the most accomplished statesmen that Europe ever produced—Cardinal Richelieu, who was the first to govern on national and not on sectarian principles. After the death of Richelieu, Louis XIV. ruled France like an Eastern despot. His whole principle of religion was submission to the Pope and the most rigid uniformity of worship. Louis entered into a contract with Charles II, who had taken the coronation oath as a Protestant, to bring England back to the Church of Rome. In the reign of Louis the Huguenots suffered the most terrible persecutions. Their children, after twelve years of age, were allowed to be stolen from them, placed in convents or ecclesiastical prisons, and educated in the Catholic faith, at the expense of their Protestant parents. In 1682 another terrible decree was published, which forbade Huguenot creditors claiming anything from the Jesuits until three years had expired. This at once crippled all commercial pursuits of the poor Huguenots. About this time Moliere published his celebrated play "Le Tartuffe," in which he laid bare the sanctimoniousness of the gallican clergy of the day. The poor Huguenots were not allowed either to be born or to die in peace. On the birth of a child, a magistrate and priest would invade the mother's bedchamber, and the magistrate would command the priest to baptise the child in the Catholic faith. When a Huguenot was dying, a prelate would agonize his last moments by calling upon him to die in the Catholic belief. Their churches were demolished and they were driven from place to place. Their only hope lay in flight, and this was denied them. Their frontiers were guarded and any Huguenot who tried to make his escape was sent to the galleys. Not only were they persecuted but they were made sport of. Men and women were dressed in fantastic garb and then tarred and set fire to. This took place while the edict was in force. In 1683 the edict was formally revoked. Then followed terrible scenes. In a few weeks 600 churches lay in ruins and 50 old religious teachers were sent to the galleys. The poor women—matrons and virgins—were outraged in a manner to which death was preferable. But the most terrible penalties did not avail in bringing Huguenots to Roman Catholicism, no converts were made, and the Jesuits seeing they could not obtain their souls hungered for their property. At last they were allowed to leave France, but only as the poor Jews were allowed to leave Spain in the time of Ferdinand—without the least vestige of property. England, Germany, Switzerland, and, above all, Holland opened their gates to the hundreds of thousands of the poor Huguenots who fled from France forever. As it is impossible for all men to be alike in feature and in height, so it is impossible for all men to be alike in religious opinions. Persecution is of no avail to destroy a certain religious thought, for it will arouse sympathy with the persecuted, and foster instead of destroying their opinions. Persecution never yet was successful, and although communication and the cherem were resorted to, they are not worth the value of the paper on which they are written.—Rabbi D. W. Marks in the Occident.

LORD AND SAVIOR.

"But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the truth shall be evil spoken of."—2 Pet. ii. 1, 2.

We are asked to examine the above passage critically. First we remark that the words italicised above are all from the same Greek word. Destructive heresies swiftly destroy the teachers as teachers, and others follow their destructive ways and bring the true teaching of Scripture into disrepute.

A question arises. Does the Apostle predict that the class referred to will deny the Lordship of Christ, or deny that he "bought" or ransomed them? Those who have the Emphatic Diaglott will notice that its interlinear translation reads thus: "From the having bought them, Sovereign Lord denying." This making prominent the denial of their having been bought, as the destructive heresy.

And when we carefully consider the matter, the reasonableness of this view becomes apparent. If these "false teachers" denied the Lordship of Christ, they would not be received at all by the church; hence could have no opportunity of bringing in that as a heresy, for all the church and all professing, even, to be of the Church of Christ, acknowledge Christ as the Lord and Head of the Church. On the contrary, had any man said, I believe in the ransom, but reject the Redeemer as my Lord, such a position would be ridiculous. We have never yet known or heard of any one who acknowledged the ransom that denied the Lordship of Christ. We have heard of some both in the days of the Apostles, and especially now, who acknowledged Jesus as Lord, but deny that he "bought them." It is evident, then, that to this last named class only this Scripture is applicable.

And that it is a destructive heresy is evident—destructive of the truth, destructive of the faith once delivered to the saints. It makes shipwreck of faith, by removing from it the only sure foundation—redemption and remission of sins through the blood of the cross.

The heresy to which the Apostle alludes was future from his day, and though the cross of Christ has ever been a stumbling block which hindered many from coming into the nominal church, yet never until the present time has this destructive and subversive heresy attained so strong a foothold among professing Christians.

The description suits the methods now employed by teachers of the no ransom theory. They "privily" or privately bring in the doctrine. They do not openly deny the meaning of the words "bought" and "ransom," etc., and openly contradict the Scriptures where those words are used; but while quoting these words they covertly and privily seek to leave an impression contrary to their true and undeniable meaning.

Let us see well to it that we acknowledge Jesus both as Lord and Savior, and not Lord only. He was the Lord or Master of the Disciples when as a perfect man he made consecration of himself and called them to be his disciples or pupils. In view of what he had been before he left the glory of the heavenly condition, and in view of his superiority as a perfect man among imperfect ones, no less than in view of the high exaltation to which he was heir through his sacrificial death, it was proper that his followers, who recognized his true character and believed his claims, should call him Lord and Master, for such indeed he was.

Our Lord was publicly recognized as Savior when as a babe he was named Jesus. (See Matt. i. 21.) He was publicly recognized of God through John at the time of his baptism, as the Savior—the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. It was by virtue of his putting away the sin by the sacrifice of himself that he had the right to exercise to some extent his power as Lord, in casting out devils and reviving the dead and dying. But it was when he had fully completed the sacrifice at Calvary, that the full right and authority and Lordship began.

When he was risen from the dead, he no longer said, "I can of mine own self do nothing" (Jno. v. 30; viii. 28;) but on the contrary he then declared, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," (Matt. xxviii. 18.) The Apostle tells us that full power and authority were bestowed on him at his resurrection. He says, he was declared to be Lord of the living and dead, by a resurrection from the dead. Him hath God raised up to be a prince (Master or Lord) and Savior. Rom. xiv. 8, 9; Acts v. 31; Rom. i. 4.

He was our Savior or Redeemer first, and having bought, purchased, redeemed, ransomed us from the dominion or control of death, he became rightfully our owner. Our Lord, our Master. Let us keep our faith-building on the rock foundation, recognizing him who is Lord of all, as equally Redeemer or Savior of all.—"Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."—Zion's Watch Tower.

The Manner of Christ's Second Coming With Appropriate Remarks.

The subject is one of deep and profound interest, especially to the present generation that inhabits our earth. Come, let us reason together. He, Christ, was an inhabitant of our earth. His reputed father and Mary his mother, were inhabitants of this earth. They sleep in the land of Palestine, awaiting the coming of their Son, who is nigh, even at the door, clothed with resurrection power; not only Joseph and Mary, but the millions of holy ones who have sealed the truth of their mission by their most precious blood. Fancy if you can, that scene, when he comes to the tombs of his holy ones, and then with the authority he used while on earth, Lazarus come forth, and he that was dead came forth, bound with grave clothes. He said loose him and let him go. Let us, dear readers, while we dwell upon these thrilling scenes, fancy ourselves connected with that blood-washed throng who shall have part in the first resurrection, on whom the second death will have no power. His army of holy ones made immortal through the atoning blood of God's dear Son, endowed with immortality; even all who shall be found worthy. They stand before the gates of Jerusalem. He cries,

Ye bars of iron, voice and trumpet obey,
Ye doors and gates wide open fling,
And take the king of glory in,
Welcome to thy throne.

David sees this sublime scene in order of fulfilment, and cries out, as we read in Psa. xxiv. 7, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in." He respects this demand while he stands before the gates of the city, mighty in battle, or from war.

He has had a battle with the enemy, hence the expression, Mighty in battle. They open the gates. What a sight strikes their astonished vision. They behold their crucified, risen Lord, clothed with supreme majestic royal power, yet the once crucified, Jesus, with the prints of the nails in his hands. They (the Jews) looked upon him whom they pierced, and mourn on account of him, and ask, What are those wounds in they hands? The answer is given. These with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. He was a Jew, and the Jews should have been his friends. They are brought face to face, and have to face facts, and facts are always stubborn things. Their confessions are candid, open frank and honest. They look on him whom they have pierced, and mourn on account of him. For a description of the mourning place read Zech. xii. 8-9. We now have him located in the kingdom of God. He takes possession of the throne of his father David, and reigns over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there is to be no end, upon the throne of David, to order and establish forever.

We now have Christ and his army of holy ones made all immortal through holy resurrection power, located in the capital of the kingdom of God. We have shown clearly, as we think, that the church, both dead and alive, are caught up or ready to meet their dear Lord in the air. Here is their first place of meeting; here they celebrate the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Dear reader, would you not like to make one in that happy company? Get ready! not a moment to spare; the gospel age is closing out its very last moments of precious time. Behold I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame. God grant that we may all be ready.

Mt. Sinai, Edom, Bozrah and many other Scriptures which we have quoted, if they do not mean what they say, will some one tell us what they do mean. We repeat, after the marriage supper Christ and his army of holy ones take up their line of march from Sinai for the capital of the kingdom of God—Jerusalem, in Palestine. The kingdom will then be set up in its mustard seed form; which indeed is the least of all seeds when it is sown, but when it is grown it becomes a great tree, so that the fowls of the air lodge in its branches. He raises up the throne of his father David and reigns over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there is to be no end. The law shall go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem; and men learn war no more, but every man shall sit under his own vine and under his own fig tree, and none shall molest nor make them afraid in all God's holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

In that millennial age Satan will be bound by the strong man and locked up in prison and a seal set upon him that he shall deceive the nations no more for one thousand years. My poor heart cries out, let me be one of God's servants who shall proclaim the age-lasting gospel of the kingdom of God to the 400,000,000 of John Chinamen, or to the 200,000,000 of Mohammedans, or to the other millions of poor, benighted heathen who have not heard his fame nor seen his glory. There will be no tempting devil, he is shut up in prison and a seal set upon him. Fancy for the first time the poor heathen listening to God's servants narrating the great scheme of redemption and salvation by and through the crucified Son of God. There will be no tempting devil to catch away the word, but man will receive the engrafted word with meekness. It will be a delightful employment.

Thus this blessed work will go on and increase till the whole planet and the race of men that inhabit it are brought back to the primeval, original and beautiful state and condition it was in before man fell, with this addition of immortality and eternal life to all who accept and comply with the great plan and scheme of redemption and salvation by and through God's dear and well beloved Son.

This may be strong meat for believers in burning up the world instantly at the coming of Christ and creating a new heaven and a new earth at once by an act of omnipotence. If we speak or write not in strict harmony with the Scriptures of truth it is because there is no light in us. Search the Scriptures, for in them we think (or know) we have eternal life, and they are they which testify of the great scheme of salvation and redemption by and through our Lord Jesus the Christ.

The second coming of Christ, the manner of his coming and the resurrection of the righteous dead with the changing of the righteous living from mortal to immortality, and the reign of Christ with his glorified body—the church—on the earth for one thousand years, are subjects of great doubt and glory far beyond the ability of our feeble pen to describe or illustrate. Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive of the glory which is to be brought (or given unto) his church at the revelation of the glorified Son of God.)

We have shed tears of joy while we have been trying to set these things before the church and a perishing world. My children are not saved, my relatives and my neighbors are strangers to that blessed hope of immortality and eternal life, which so cheers and encourages the (now) poor pilgrim as he journeys to the city of the great king. Dear Brother Chaplin, please overlook any mistake, as I have had two shocks of paralysis which has brought me near to the grave. If I am able will write one more article and revise and correct some discrepancies. Respectfully and affectionately, NEWELL BOND.

OUR EVERGREEN HOME.

Oh yes, I would live always in the evergreen home,
Where the pure and the holy in pleasure will roam.
Where no evil will enter their joy to molest;
In the land of the pure, the home of the blest.

Where the sacred of all ages in triumph will meet,
With shouts of hosannas, their Savior to greet.
While the eye of the eyes unceasing rolls on,
And loud hallelujahs the anthem prolong.

Then our toils will be over and the weary will rest,
In the evergreen home of the pure and the blest.
While peace like a river flows o'er the bright plains,
And the noontide of glory eternally reigns.

When we come to the Lamb, as around we roam,
Through the flowers of Eden our bright happy home,
Life's conflicts are ended, its perils all o'er,
We've entered the haven of the evergreen shore.

Notes By the Way.—No. 5.

Leaving the house of Brother Shipman, April 16, I arrived in Oquis the same day, where I was kindly entertained by the brethren. Appointments were given out for preaching in the Quaker meeting house on the evening of the 17th, and over Sunday the 18th. The attendance and interest good. I closed Sunday evening, and announced a meeting in the neighborhood of Brother Morrow's at Medoc, Mo., about six miles from Oquis, to commence Tuesday evening, but the bridges in many places being carried away we were oblige to postpone it. In the meantime the people of Oquis dispatched Brother Burr for me to return and preach in that place while the water subsided; I complied and I am fully persuaded that some would have obeyed the gospel, only that a flood existed between the east and west side, of the town, the east side being in Missouri and the west in Kansas. The leading men on the east side being in sympathy with our doctrines, is looked upon by them of the west as being in the way of a union. I believe that if all parties would act like Christians and drop all personal strife, that a congregation might be gathered here of some importance.

April 27, I commenced at Medoc, a place where our views of man's nature and kindred truths had never been presented. I preached four discourses which caused quite a ripple of excitement. Questions were asked and texts presented for explanation. Brother John Howelon, a man of more than ordinary ability, lives in this neighborhood, and will, I trust, enlighten them from time to time by presenting the sanctifying truth. My next appointment was at Millerton, May 10. On my way thither I spent two nights and one day with Brother John Poor, at Galesburg. I enjoyed his genial, kindly ways very much, and was pleasantly entertained by himself and family. I arrived at Millerton in due time, and found several of the brethren at the depot. I was taken in hand by Brother Hart and cared for, freely sharing his hospitality. Held service in a newly finished house twice on Sunday, and once in the school house, the usual place of service which is out of town. We continued the meeting through the week and over the following Sunday. The regular advertised meeting beginning Thursday the 14th. Brethren came in from Harper Co., and also Sedgewick and other places. Preaching done by Brother Oliver of Harper, and myself. I suppose on account of the meeting will be publisho-, therefore I forbear to comment. This being my last appointment this side of the Rockies, I resolved, at its close to pack up and rest. Having learned that a party consisting of Brothers Hugh Barnhill, Henry Watkins, and W. T. Bell were going to the frontier with a covered wagon, I joined the party, and May the 20th, we set out faces toward the west, and ate our first dinner in a terrific shower. Nothing of interest transpired until we passed the settlement, when we amused ourselves by discussing probabilities and possibilities of horse thieves, Indians, dog towns, and other topics. Once in a while a prairie chicken would flush. Brother Barnhill seizing the gun would exclaim "do you want him Joyal" Yes, yes. Bang, would go the gun, and away would go the bird, of course the fault was in the gun, and the gun had to be blamed, no one blamed the bird. Now and then we would pass through a dog town of many acres, the little brown, rusty jacketed fellows would sit up as straight as though they had a bone in their back, and like faithful sentinels warn their comrades of the approach of strangers. Owls and rattle-snakes are on the best of terms with the dogs, as they live in harmony with each other beneath the same roof. Our hunters tried the gun on the dogs with the usual success, only it was laid to the dogs being so near to their holes that they contrived to fall in. Perhaps that is so, preferring to be buried at home. Finally on the eighth day out we arrived at the home of Mrs. W. T. Newhouse, formerly of Argus, Ind., where we were welcomed with generous hospitality. But such a country, boundless in expanse, and unbounded only by the blue horizon that seems to touch the green prairie at an equal distance from the observer, but I will reserve the full description of the country and its probabilities for a future note. I will just say that our party all entered land near each other, some of which are being improved. Brother Watkins and O. C. Ramsay join farms, and are at present living in a dugout and breaking sod. So when you hear from me next, you will hear from a Granger.

O. C. RAMSAY.

Saving Faith not a Puzzle.

"But the righteousness which is of faith, speaketh in this way.

Say not in thine heart who shall ascend into heaven, that is to bring Christ down from above, or who shall descend into the deep, that is to bring up Christ again from the dead.

But what saith it? The word is nigh thee even in thy mouth and in thy heart; that is the word of faith which we preach.

That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved.

For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the the Scripture saith, whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed. Amen. C. BOARDMAN.

RETROSPECTION.

BY ANNA SHIPTON.

"Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee."—Deut. viii. 2.

"Cast not away, therefore, your confidence, which hath great recompence of reward."—Heb. x. 35.

He was better to me than all my hopes,
He was better than all my fears;
He made a road of my broken works,
And a rainbow of my tears.
The billows that guarded my sea girt path,
But carried my Lord on their crest;
When I dwell on the days of my wilderness march
I can lean on his love for the rest.

He emptied my hands of my treasured store,
And his covenant love revealed,
There was not a wound in my aching heart,
But the balm of his breath had healed.
Oh! tender and true was the chastening sore,
In wisdom, that taught and tried,
Till the soul that he sought was trusting in Him
And nothing on earth beside.

He guided by paths that I could not see,
By ways that I have not known,
The crooked was straight and the rough made plain,
As I followed the Lord alone.
I praise him still for the pleasant palms,
And the water springs by the way;
For the glowing pillars of flame by night,
And the sheltering clouds by day.

There is light for me on the trackless wild,
As the wonders of old I trace;
When the God of the whole earth went before
To search out a resting place.
Has he changed for me? Nay! He changes not,
He will bring me by some new way,
Through fire and flood, and each crafty foe,
As safely as yesterday.

And if to warfare, he calls me forth,
He buckles my armor on;
He feeds me with manna, and a word of cheer,
For battles his sword has won:
He wipes my brow as I droop and faint,
He blesses my hand to toil;
Faithful is he, as he washes my feet,
From the trace of each earthly soil.

Never a watch on the dreariest halt,
But some promise of love endears:
I read from the past, that my future shall be
Far better than all my fears.
Like the golden pot, of the wilderness bread,
Laid up with the blossoming rod,
All safe in the ark, with the law of the Lord,
In the covenant care of my God.

RUSSIA'S LIMITS AS DEFINED IN PROPHECY.

We live at a time when all eyes are turned in one direction. Russia, Turkey, and the surrounding countries engage universal attention, and men are enquiring, and men are surmising, as to what will be the end of the conflict, and of the diplomacy that either has been, or may be yet to come. The uncertain future, for the politician, is uninstructed by God, is a sealed book; he knoweth not what a day may bring forth; for the man of the world, unless he drown his anxiety, so far as that be possible, in the exciting pleasures of the age, it is filled with dark and heavily-charged clouds.

Of one thing we may feel quite assured, God is working upon a plan, decided on by himself, carried out by his power, and effectual for the fulfilment of his purposes. Scripture tells us plainly that the arrangement of nations is made subject to, and in relation with, the nation of Israel; and God's dealings with them, and his intentions with respect to them, both affect and interpret history and prophecy. We are told in Deut. xxxii. 8, that when the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel." For this reason no increase of territory can be effected, no conquest achieved, no country annexed to another, except in strict subjection to this already established rule. By this law, kings, emperors, and nations are either held in check or impelled. To it, all is restricted by a well-defined law, and events float on the surface of a stream, that bear on, with invincible force, the changes and chances of the people, to an universal throne at Jerusalem.

It is true, that for many hundreds of years the nation of Israel has been scattered, and by far the greater part of it is hidden altogether from the view of man. The successors of those who crucified the Lord of glory alone are discernible; and they are not to be recognised except in their individuality, scattered throughout, yet not of the other nations. A cloud hangs over them and their fair land; but the sun of promise shines brightly behind it; for not only is the Old Testament Scriptures, but in the New, especially in Rom. xi., have we the sure word of prophecy, to the effect that they shall again inhabit their own land. Their present position is a literal fulfilment of the word of God. The prophetic Word concerning them will have a literal fulfilment when Ezekiel xxxvi. and xxxvii. will be read, not as an inspired forecast only, but as clear as the brightness of mid-day splendor, a history of the nation accomplished to the very letter.

There are two things to which I wish to draw special attention. First, that Israel's national restoration at Jerusalem will be opposed nationally and by a fearful war of many peoples. Secondly, I shall try to show what nations are prophesied of in Scripture, as the principal participators in the fierce but unsuccessful conflict.

In Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix. we find the prophet directed to prophesy against Gog. This enemy comes up against Israel at a fixed time, namely, between their national restoration and the Millennial reign. In xxxviii. 14, there is the remarkable question, "In that day, when my people Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it?" This question is put to Gog, and then, after the assertion as to his coming out of the northern parts, we read in verse 16, "And thou shalt come up against my people of Israel as a cloud to cover the land; it shall be in the latter days, and I will bring thee against my land, that the heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes."

Gog will be joined by many allies, as we shall see, and so vast will be the multitude, and so bloody the battle, that the consequences of it in the destruction of weapons of war, and of man, are such as to surpass all conception. Indeed, were it not that the Word of God reveals it all so distinctly, we should doubt it, or resolve it into figures and symbol. Such will be the number of weapons of war left on the ground, that the house of Israel will burn them with fire for seven subsequent years; so that (xxxix. 10) "they shall take no wood out of the field, neither cut down any of the forests; for they shall burn the weapons with fire; and they shall spoil those that spoiled them, and rob those that robbed them, saith the Lord God." Then as to the multitude of the slain, verse 11 tells us, "And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will give unto Gog a place there of graves in Israel, the valley of the passengers on the east of the sea, and it shall stop the noses of the passengers; and there shall they bury Gog and all his multitude; and they shall call it the valley of Hamon-Gog," which signifies "the multitude of Gog." Seven months, we are told, will the house of Israel be occupied in burying them. Certain precise arrangements also are made for carrying out the burial; so that after the seven months are past, the land will be searched, in order that nothing remain unburied, and those that pass through the land, when they see a man's bone, "shall set up (or build) a sign by it until the buriers have buried it in the valley of Hamon-Gog. Verses 12-15. Scepticism may say, How can these things be? But with that we have nothing to do. When God speaks clearly, faith bows humbly. It is not my purpose now to enter upon the various events which lead up to this great battle. They are in prophecy; but I do not now take them up. I will, however, give the date of the conflict, as far as I see it clearly.

I believe it to be the same battle, or at any rate, a part of the same war, as that which is described in Rev. xvi. 12-14, where the sixth angel pours out his vial on the great river Euphrates, when the three unclean spirits, like frogs, come out of the mouth of the dragon. In verse 14 we read, "For they are the spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." These are said to be gathered together "into a place, called in the Hebrew tongue, Armagaddon." Surely the fact of the name being given in the Hebrew tongue is, to say the least, suggestive of the locality. That this battle has the character of finality attached to it is evident from the voice from the throne in Rev. xvi. 17: "It is done."

As soon as those events occur, "the seventh angel (Rev. xvi. 17) pours out his vial into the air," and the destruction of Babylon follows; for Babylon and Jerusalem never can flourish at the same time. Following out the fate of Babylon, we come to chapter xix., where the close of the battle is related, the consummation being effected by the direct intervention of the Lord himself. A comparison of Ezek. xxxix. 17-22, with Rev. xix. 18, reveals a remarkable similarity of language, and it is used, as I believe, with reference to the same event.

I would fix the time for the battle as between the restoration of Israel (which will, I believe, be effected nationally, before their conversion) and the Millennial reign of the Lord. This is the position which it occupies, both in Ezekiel and "the Revelation;" most clearly so in the prophet, following the chapters xxxvi. and xxxvii., and preceding the lengthened and detailed description of the religious settlement in the land of promise—a settlement quite inconsistent with the discordance or disturbance of war. In fact, the grand result of the battle for Israel is stated in verse 22, quoted above. They shall know the Lord their God from that day forward; they shall be brought again from the people, and that finally. "Neither will I hide my face any more from them; for I have poured out my spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord God." Ezek. xxxix. 29. In "the Revelation," chap. xx. the Millennial reign is described as succeeding the close of the battle, and although a "Gog" is spoken of as coming up to battle in verse 8, it does not refer to the same time. "Gog and Magog" are there alluded to in a most abrupt and curious manner, as being previously well known; just as we should name a person, if we were able to add, "You know who and what I mean, Gog and Magog." These are the same as in Ezekiel, but, "the coming up against the camp of the saints," then, is a subsequent and devil-instigated, but lost, attempt to frustrate God's arrangements.

I now proceed to examine briefly the prophecies of some of the other inspired writers. I will take Zechariah first, because the date of the attack of the nations upon Israel is fixed there with more precision; and as will be seen, is fixed at the same time which I have given above. In Zechariah, as in other prophecies, the ultimate blessing of God's people is stated before the trial is detailed, through which it is to be reached. Thus in chapters ix., x., xi., xii., the final result of blessing is represented as reached with certainty: but in chapter xiv. the last great opposition appears. "Behold the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle," etc. The chapter goes on to detail the various facts connected with the battle. The Lord comes himself to end it, accompanied by his saints (verses 3 and 5). Unlike the great event of Israel's previous history, the day is a darkened one, clearing up at even; the end is that "the Lord shall be King over all the earth," and that, he shall execute judgment, and fearful judgment too upon man and beast (verses 13-16). What an awful end to this part of the fallen world's history! Yet towards this is it all tending.

How different when he whose right it now is has been enthroned in his power, holding the sceptre of Judah as the Shiloh. "In that day there shall be upon the bells upon the horses, Holiness unto the Lord, and the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the altar. Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and Judah shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts; and all they that sacrifice shall come, and take of them, and seethe therein; and in that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts." Zech. xiv. 20-21.

I turn next to the prophet Joel. In chapter i. we read, "Alas for the day! for the day of the Lord is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come." Now, although Joel enlarges much more upon the accompaniments of the fearful day in its effects upon nature, and its connection with nature, yet the human enemies are also brought into prominence. "But I will remove far off from thee the northern army, and will drive him into a land barren and desolate, with his face towards the east sea, and his hinder part towards the utmost sea, and his stink shall come up, and his ill savor shall come up because he has done great things." Chap. ii. 20. In chapter iii. we are told, first of all, that the time is that time when "I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem."

A gathering of all nations is spoken of in verse 2, and they are said to be brought "down into the valley of Jehoshaphat." The word Jehoshaphat signifies "Jahovah judgeth," for which reason it is added, "I will plead with them" (or I will judge, using the same word) "there." This judgment is executed because of the treatment of Jerusalem and its people by those Gentile nations who assemble in this war. Verse 9 opens the proclamation to "the Gentiles," or, as in verse 12, to "the heathen," to assemble themselves in the aforesaid valley; "for there," God said, "will I sit to judge all the heathen round about." This judgment is depicted in figurative language in verse 13. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel." The end of all is the same as we have seen it to be before. "But Judah shall dwell for ever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation. For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed; for the Lord dwelleth in Zion." Joel iii. 20, 21.

I think that I have now quoted a sufficient number of passages to establish the fact, that in the last days, there will take place this great and fearful war, that it will be directed against the Jewish nation, and that the final scene of it will be near Jerusalem; that it will consist of a succession of Gentile nations, and that the Lord himself, as King of the Jews, will terminate it by his appearance. But who are the nations that compose the army?

In Ezek. xxxviii., a list is given of these nations. "Son of man, set thy face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, and prophesy against him." Now this ought to be translated the prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal. With these are joined "Persia, Ethiopia, Libya, Gomer, and all his bands, the house of Togarmah, of the north quarters, and all his bands; and many people with thee." Verse 5, 6.

With respect to the rendering "chief prince," "the prince of Rosh," I believe it to be correct; but even if it were not, it would make no material difference, for the words would still signify the chief and head of all these nations, as, in fact, the Septuagint, and other versions take it to mean. One thing is alarmingly certain, namely, that this list at once directs our thoughts to those particular localities with which the Russo-Turkish Army is connected, and that without exception they all surround the Black Sea, or are situated in those spots particularly coveted, or already within the grasp of Russia. She is destined to be the great scourge of modern times, and is the great northern army, which will push on, acquiring territory after territory, until she falls before the King of kings. These countries all appear as her dependencies, and some of them are even now coming under her sway; and, even though it may suit her designs to make peace for a season, it will be only for the purpose of gaining time, and, as it were, taking breath for renewed conflict.

The attack of Gog and his bands is not unopposed. The 13th verse of Ezek. xxxvii. speaks of three people who interfere with his advance: "Sheba and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof, shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? Hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?" There is considerable difficulty in fixing the precise position of these respective places. By some Tarshish has been supposed to be England. Ships of Tarshish signify ships destined to go to Tarshish. Smith in his Bible Dictionary says that imports brought by the ships of Tarshish, prove without doubt that they came from India. I quote his words, "The gold might possibly have been obtained from Africa, or from Ophir, in Arabia, and the ivory and the apes might also have been imported from Africa; but the peacocks point exclusively, not to Africa, but to India. There are only two species known; both inhabit the continent and Islands of India; so that the mention of peacocks seems to exclude the possibility of the voyage having been to Africa. The inference to be drawn from the importation of peacocks is confirmed by the Hebrew name for the ape and the peacock. Neither of the name, is of Hebrew, or even Semitic, origin; and each points to India." Tarshish, I expect, signifies India, as also Sheba and Dedan either countries on the Western or Eastern side of the Persian Gulf southwards. Very probably they are Beloochistan, the N. W. extremities of India. From these countries the opposition will naturally arise. We cannot fail to perceive how wonderfully that which God has revealed associates itself with the very natural forebodings and events of the present hour. In Psalm lxxii. 10, these are the nations specially mentioned as bringing gifts to Solomon and to a greater than Solomon: "The kings of Tarshish and of the Isles shall bring presents; the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts."

There is another country which comes before us in the Book of Daniel, as about to occupy an important position in the latter days, namely, Egypt. The eleventh chapter of Daniel is a part of Daniel's last vision in connection with the people, and in it the position of Egypt in respect to the Holy Land is prominent. In the chapter we have two kings before us; one designated the king of the south, the other king of the north, so called because of their positions relatively to the Holy Land. They are sometimes in alliance, and sometimes at variance, Israel, meantime, being interposed as a nation. This chapter refers to the time when Israel is nationally restored as a Jewish unconverted people, and the time moreover when the king of the north shall eventually come with great power "into the glorious land." These events will take place before the final battle of which we have said so much. Nothing is more probable than that these national complications will arise soon. The importance of Egypt to the Western nations is now much increased since the formation of the Suez Canal. Ethiopia and Libya, to which I just referred, are supposed to be in Southern Egypt, Abyssinia or Nubia. They take part in the war of Gog. Serious complications may arise soon in Egypt, and the ships of Chittim will be sent, within some few years, against him who is called in Daniel xi. 21, "a vile person." Chittim signifies the Isles of the Mediterranean.

There is another country mentioned as taking part in the final battle against Israel, namely "Greece." Zech. ix., having revealed the coming of Zion's king its blessed consequences, proceeds thus, "Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope; even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto thee; when I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Grecce, and made thee as the sword of a mighty man." Zech ix. 12-13.

This is one of the most critical points of our history as a nation—confronted as we are with dangers, to ward off which much blood has been shed—we shall do well to look to the word of God for guidance and for instruction as to what may be coming upon us. I cannot see that the English nation appears at all in connection with those who oppose the settlement of the Jews in their own land. When the nations that go up against Jerusalem are destroyed without remedy before the Almighty Captain, they are not there. If they appear in Ezek. xxxviii. at all, it is as Gog's opponent. I have already drawn attention to verse 13, and, taking all things into consideration, I expect that a powerful opposition will be offered to the Russian army from our Indian territories.

It is very probable that we may be instrumental, to a great extent, in the restoration of the Jewish nation. There are many things which make it appear likely. The Holy Land has been in the possession of the Mohammetan; but that power and religion is on the wane, so far as Turkey is concerned; and in the changes soon ensuing Israel will be nationally located in their own place. This may be the result of purchase, or it may be a political movement in connection with the contest between Syria and Egypt (see Dan. xi.), or it may follow in the wake of the sword. Some powerful country, and that a naval one, will be the principal agent, we learn from Isaiah xviii. where the word "Woe" would be more properly rendered "Ho." There can be no doubt that the Jew has much influence, and is the object of interest in England.

In the few years that remain before the Lord returns much will take place, and the centre of interest will range round about the Holy Land and the Russian nation and dependencies to which it will prove a "burdensome stone." In the rapidly revolving wheel of events we may be made the instrument, in whole or in part, of Israel's national establishment. What we now see is only the carrying on of an advancing course, which, although there may be an occasional lull, will fall as a storm on the land of Israel, after it has gained more and more strength. Russia will not recede, but gain much territory, for the possession of which she has earnestly longed. She will be contended with and shed much blood; but the Lord Himself will end the striving of the nations and reign as Prince of Peace.—John Hawker in Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman.

HOLY FORTITUDE.

Give me, O my God, give the spirit of prayer, and let me keep ever near to the throne of grace, that my soul may not come thither as a stranger, but that in every surprise I may address thee as a God near at hand, and that, in the name of my great High Priest, Jesus, the Son of God, I may find grace ready to help me in the time of need.

Wean me, O Lord, from all the delights and hopes of flesh and sense! Mortify me to all the honors and the joys of a perishing life and a vain world. Arm my soul all over with a religious hardness, that I may venture into the field of battle, and may scarce feel the wounds which I receive in thy cause. Give me the happy skill of diverting my fears when I cannot at once subdue them, and lead me into proper employments of my heart and hand for this purpose.

I would live as under the eye of God. I would take notice of him in all affairs of life and all the dangers that attend me. I would learn of Moses to endure the sight of afflictions, as seeing him who is invisible. Let me hear thy voice, O Jesus, my Savior, let me hear thy voice walking upon the waters; when I am tossed about upon the waves of distress and difficulty, speak to my soul and say, "It is I, be not afraid."

I would be bravely prepared for the worst of sufferings to which my circumstances in this life may expose me. I would be ready to meet contempt and scandal, poverty, sickness, and death itself. Jesus can support me in the heaviest distresses, though all the sorrows I fear should come upon me. He can bear me on the wings of faith and hope, high above all the turmoils and disquietudes of life. He can carry me through the shadow of the dark valley, and scatter all the terrors of it. Give me, O Lord, these wings of faith and hope, and bear me upon them through all the remains of my short journey in the wilderness. Make me active and zealous in thy cause while I live, and convey me safely above the reach of fear, through the valley of death to the inheritance prepared for me in the land of light. Then my fears shall cease forever, for enemies and dangers are not known in that land. There all our conflicts shall be changed into everlasting triumphs, while songs of honor and salvation ascend in a full choir to the grace that has made us overcomers. Amen.—Dr. Isaac Watts.

The Great Pyramid.

Mr. J. B. Bailey writes to the St. James Gazette as follows with reference to the desirability of exploring the Great Pyramid in Egypt.

Now that Great Britain is dominant at Cairo, would it not be a good plan to clear away the sand and rubbish from the base of the Great Pyramid, right down to its rocky foundation, and try to discover those vast corridors, halls, and temple, containing priceless curiosities and treasures with which tradition in all ages has credited the Great Pyramid? This wonderful building, of exquisite workmanship, was erected many years before any of the other pyramids, which are only humble imitations, built by another nation, and also for other purposes; for neither King Cheops nor anybody else was ever interred beneath this mighty mass of stone. The smaller pyramids also exhibit neither the nicety of proportion nor the exactness of measurement, both of which characterize the first pyramid. From internal evidence it seems to have been built about the year 2170 B. C., a short time before the birth of Abraham, more than 4,000 years ago. This—one of the seven wonders of the world in the days of ancient Greece—is the only one of them all still in existence. The base of this building covers more than thirteen square acres of ground. Its four sides face exactly north, south, east and west. It is situated in the geographical centre of the land surface of the globe. It was originally 485 feet in high, and each of its sides measures 782 feet. It is computed to contain 5,000,000 tons of hewn stones beautifully fitted together with a mere film of cement. And these immense blocks of stone must have been brought from quarries 500 miles distant from the site of the building. The present well-known King and Queen Chambers, with the various passages, might also be thoroughly examined by means of the electric or lime lights. The Astronomer Royal of Scotland some years since closely and laboriously examined all that is at present known of the interior of this enormous building. He states that measurements in the chambers, etc., show the exact length of the cubit of the Bible—namely, twenty-five inches. This cubit was used in the building of Noah's Ark, Solomon's Temple, etc. He also maintains that the pyramid shows the distance of the sun from the earth to be 91,840,000 miles.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXIV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 15, 1885. NO. 27.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the faithful; and the final destruction of the wicked, utterly and eternally through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersions pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for salvation.

MERCY THE SOLE GROUND OF REMISSION AS TAUGHT IN THE PARABLE OF THE KING AND HIS BOND-SERVANT.

MATT. XVIII. 23, TO 35, INCLUSIVE.

We have here "the kingdom of heaven" likened to a human king, who decided to have a reckoning with his bond-servants, and when he had begun, one was brought to him who had become his debtor to the extent of ten thousand talents (about $10,568,000), and not being able to pay the debt, his lord ordered the man and his wife and his children, and all that he had, sold and payment to be made, which would be equivalent to balancing the account, because there would certainly be no hope of ever getting any more than the proceeds of this sale. Moved with compassion by his appeal for mercy and good purpose expressed to pay it all if he could only have an extension of time, his lord nobly and generously remits (not forgives) the whole debt. Remember now, a king, in the Scriptural parable teaching, is always an absolute, not a limited monarch in his sphere, and has the power even of life and death in his own hands. For his change of mind is a change of law, observe, in his realm.

Well, what does this highly favored bond-servant do immediately upon experiencing this great favor from his lord? Does he exemplify the same nobility and generosity in his smaller sphere of action? No. He exacts the immediate payment to him on the part of one of his debtors, a fellow-bond-servant of the same [illegible] (about [illegible]), and not being able to pay the debt, [illegible] time and when [illegible] proved his inability to pay, [illegible] him and threw him into prison.

It seems that his fellow-bond-servants who knew of the affair and were "grieved" at the injustice and inconsistency of the man's conduct, went and made known all the circumstances to their lord in the shape of a complaint. Thereupon, summoning the man, his lord after reviewing and contrasting the treatment he had experienced with the treatment he had exemplified, condemns him as he had originally expressed his purpose to do, namely to payment of the debt even to the last quadrante (the smallest Roman coin). How long do you imagine it would take a man in prison, earning nothing and having nothing when he goes into prison, to earn or even "see his way out" or square himself with an old debt of ten millions of dollars? Don't you see it is a hopeless case? Don't you see he would die under his condemnation? The only hope he possibly has in such a case is that some relative or friend may redeem him. Well, that is just the lesson. So the Psalmist very pertinently asks, "Will a man redeem himself" (under such circumstances)? There is a price to be paid. Where is he going to get it? Oh, there is just one hope for such a man, and the beautiful "type" in the Levitical law as it was divinely designed to, suggests it to the Psalmist, and he answers his own query. No, a man may not pay the price of his life himself. But shall not a brother redeem?

Then the teaching of this parable was designed to show those under the law "the hopelessness of their case, except from the one grand point of grace. They have forfeited the first noble offer of generous remission and restored favor on the ground of gratitude and an ordinary expectation of one's doing as he has been done by, and if he (the one under law) comes to a realizing sense of the hopelessness of his case, he is then prepared to contemplate the second wonderful display of grace on God's part in even providing the "gracious elder brother" who is willing and able to pay the price, the redemption price.

See how the majesty of law and justice is asserted, and at the same time the greater nobility of mercy is exemplified. For law never raves except in obedience to law, but mercy snatches even from the jaws of death.

Redemption always implies that the demands of the law have been satisfied. There has been a trial of the issues, judgment has been entered up and condemnation passed upon the culprit.

Pardon or redemption must always come from a higher power than the law that enters the decree of condemnation, and for "mercy and peace to kiss each other," equity must preside over any remaining issue. The law of life and death when it has decreed death upon a culprit, must be shown a satisfactory equivalent in law before releasing its judgment, and utility is the only value that weighs in the scales of justice. Now in the estimation of the Judge of all the earth an ounce of intelligent mercy is a man's character outweighs a pound of such a man's abstract estimate of right as determined by the selfish conclusions of his natural reason. Therefore he is warned against judging (that is, absolutely deciding any case) "before the time." If a regenerate person, there will come a time in his experience when he will "stand in God's hypostasis" and see as God sees. He will see the whole case and not partially. "For now we see in part and know in part, but then face to face." This in a word is the philosophy of the requirement.

Live and let live. As you have experienced mercy, show mercy, and leave the rest with God. If you have received a small portion of his Spirit—a little good, a small portion of God's great beneficence, don't as a sectarian or a schismatic lay hold of it as a dog does of a bone, run off into some corner of denominationalism and selfishly [illegible] your teeth at every passer-by. [illegible] too apparent that [illegible] lost all your selfish impulses by the regenerative process [illegible] you are being redeemed. If you are still a bond-servant [illegible] the law remember that judgment has been rendered in your case for a debt of at least ten millions, and you without even a quadrante to pay it.

Your only hope, my friend, is in the "Elder Brother," and the most acceptable act of righteousness on your part is first to show mercy to yourself in your poverty and wretchedness and need by accepting the gracious offer of this Elder Brother to redeem you and save from your thralldom to sin and Satan. What would you think of the sanity even of a person lying in prison under such circumstances as we have described, and carelessly or obstinately spurning the offer of light and liberty? And if convinced of the sanity what think you of the manhood or the nobility of such a character? It would disgrace a "hell" if there were such a place.

A spark of true manhood, a single spark smouldering in such a bosom would flame up responsive to the appeal, and would say to "The Father" "I am no more worthy to be called thy son. Make me as one of thy hired servants," and to the "Elder Brother" as doubting Thomas did of old "My Lord (owner, master of a bond-servant) and my God" (a disposer of another's affairs) after paying this enormous debt of mine, if there is any earthly use you can make of me, for heaven's sake, and for God's sake assert it. Use me to your own best advantage. If I am good for nothing else, make a door-keeper of me. What! You've paid it? Ten millions of obligations? And just because you loved me? It can't be possible! Well hath the Scripture said "a brother hath been given for a day of calamity."

What shall I ever do to pay you? Hear the answer. "Go thou and do likewise," (in thy sphere of action). "Be ye perfect because your Father in heaven is perfect (not even as). Exemplify the mercy you have experienced." You were "a lost sheep" yourself, and have been found. You can at least bleat your gratitude, and some other sheep wandering in the fog of mystery will surely hear and joyful cry and run to the fold.

RESURRECTION AND THE COMING KINGDOM IN ISAIAH XXIV-XXVII.

Mindful that the spirit that was in the prophets was the spirit of the Messiah, and that the men of God in whom that spirit spake were borne along by a mighty afflatus into a state of things remote from that in which they themselves were placed, it behoves the student of prophecy not to be too sceptical when he sees before him, towering up above the clouds, the sunlit mountain-tops of that final Messianic kingdom which is to appear in our world in the acharith or "after-part" of the days. At all events, when the Christian reader sees before him predictions which he cannot suppose to have been yet fulfilled without doing violence to their language, and especially when he perceives in them points of striking similarity with the more definite teachings of the Messiah himself and his immediate apostles regarding things to come, it is natural for him to wax bold in the assurance that here he has unquestionable foreglimpses into the future of the world. The more confident of this may he reasonably become when he finds in the same continuous prophecy or closely connected group of prophecies repeated stretchings forth of the mind working in the word, towards the grand and good time that is coming.

We have ourselves been lately struck afresh with the strong shafts of light breaking through into the future from three or four connected chapters in Isaiah; and without undertaking anything approaching to an elaborate dissertation, desire to record some of the reflections that we have awakened in our own mind. The chapters to which we refer are in Isaiah xxiv., xxv., xxvi. and xxvii. The xxiv. has challenged our attention because of the paragraph with which it closes, wherein we appear to have an undeniable allusion to those hosts of wickedness in the heavenlies to which the Apostle Paul refers in Ephesians vi. The xxv. has caused us to linger and ponder, because it contains those two memorable New Testament quotations about death being swallowed up in victory and about God's wiping away the tears from off all faces; and further because of the remarkable statement, inseparably connected with the other two, that the time of resurrection and "the wiping away of tears, is to be a time also of feasting all nations and of enlightening and undeceiving all nations—regarding which latter disclosures, how can we help feeling that we have probably much yet to learn? The xxvi. chapter has summoned to itself an interest, if it were possible, deeper and more inquisitive still; on the ground that it embraces one of those remarkable Old Testament passages which appear to deny that the wicked will raise from the dead at all, that on the other hand it salutes us with one of the most beautiful of ambient anticipations of the resurrection of the righteous, that this anticipation is more fully corroborated by the context than appears in the Authorized Version, and lastly that there pervades the chapter a most wonderful Israelitish emotion, springing from a profound conviction that Israel is set by irrevocable divine appointment for accomplishing deliverance in the earth. The xxvii. chapter has not so fully absorbed our attention, but is nevertheless not to be omitted from all mention here, seeing how plainly it is continuous with the chapters that have gone before, and what exegetical value is thereby imparted to its references to Israel's national restoration.

Glancing back behind the paragraph which closes chapter xxvi., and looking for a moment at the whole of that gloomy chapter, which seems to mutter thunder all through,—one is reminded that the Hebrew 'eretz, like the Greek ge, means either "land" or "earth," according to context and circumstance; and the enquiry thence arises, which does 'eretz mean here, for obviously it makes not a little difference whether we read in English all through: "Behold the Lord maketh the 'earth' empty—the 'earth' mourneth—the 'earth' is defiled—the inhabitants of the 'earth' are burned—the 'earth' is utterly broken down—the 'earth' is clean dissolved, the 'earth' is moved exceedingly," etc.; or whether we read: "Behold the Lord maketh the 'land' empty—the 'land' mourneth," and so on consistently to the end. The chapter ought to explain itself, and clear up this ambiguity; otherwise it becomes comparatively useless. It may be that other students may see in the very nature of the thing predicated some reliable clue; but meantime we submit one indication, which has arrested our own attention. The law of parallelism seems to help us in verse four:

The 'eretz languisheth, it fadeth away,
The tebhel languisheth, it fadeth away

Now if any one will trace tebhel through all its occurrences, he will find in it a strong bent to a world-wide significance; which is quite fairly reflected in Psalm xc. 2, "Or even thou hadst formed the 'eretz and the tebhel —the 'earth' (clearly not the 'land') and the 'world.' We do not think there is any exception to this. And thus understood—the whole xxvi. chapter being thus taken as foretelling a terrible visitation of judgment on the whole inhabited earth, right naturally does the "heavenly host" paragraph at the end grow out of what has gone before.

And it shall come to pass in that day,
The Lord will punish the host of the height in the height,
And the kings of the ground (ha-adhamah) upon the ground.
And they shall be gathered together—prisoners for the pit,
And shall be shut up in prison;
And after many days shall they be visited.
Then shall blush the silvery moon,
Then shall pale the glowing sun,
For the Lord of hosts hath become King in Mount Zion,
And in Jerusalem,
And before his elders—a glory!

We say: "quite naturally." For by both by their plurality and by their contrast with "the host of the height," are we guided to the interpretation "kings of the earth" not kings of the land or country," in the sense of the kings of any one nation. The earth's sins—the earth's sorrows—the earth's punishment well and forcibly lead up to the punishment of the kings of the earth: whose power for good or evil being so great, whose sins when they rule unrighteously being so fraught with evil for myriads, God as the invisible King of the earth holds them responsible and warns them that a strict reckoning is coming.

The conclusion has already been intimated that this "host of the height" can be none other than "the spiritual hosts of evil" named by Paul to the Ephesians. The very contrast of this host with "the kings of the ground" (for so it is literally) performs sends us up into "the air" to find it, Eph. ii. 2. Every one can see how these hints connect themselves with Rev. xii. 8, 12. Jehovah, therefore, purposes to clear the earth and the aerial heavens of evil rulers, human and preter-human, to make way for his own visible and beneficient reign in and from Jerusalem.

On the central verses of chapter xxv. we have but a few observations to make. Here we are glad to find the Version in Eyre and Spottiswoode's "Revised Bible" near enough for our purpose.

And in this mountain will the Lord of hosts make for all the peoples
A feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees;
Of fat things full of marrow,
Of wines on the lees well-refined,
And in this mountain he will destroy
The veil that veileth the face of all the peoples,
And the covering that is spread over all the nations,
He will swallow up death for ever;
And the Lord God shall wipe away tears from off all faces;
And the reproach of his people will he take away from off all the earth
For the Lord hath spoken it.

Working from the known to the unknown, we may say we know this passage carries us forward to the time of the resurrection of the just, not only in general from the employment in the New Testament of individual phrases here found, but in particular because the apostle Paul expressly asserts, (1 Cor. xv. 54) that "when this incorruptible shall put on incorruption," etc., then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." That saying is written here in Isaiah xxv. The next thing that is obvious is that the reproach of the Hebrew people will be taken away—at that time. For that the Hebrew people is to be coupled with the "reproach" named, is clearly the just conclusion. In Isaiah, a Hebrew prophet, addressing primarily his own nation, and using, as he does in this particular verse, the word "people" in the singular number, this is obviously the correct application of the expression "his people." Besides, their "reproach" is too well known to leave us in doubt. Isaiah himself, from his first chapter onward, heaps reproach enough upon them; and they have all along since their present long-continued dispersion began, been a bye-word and a proverb among the nations of the earth. What we are here told then is that that reproach is to be taken away about the time of the first resurrection. In that day shall Jehovah become King in Jerusalem—in that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah (xxvi. 1)—in that day (xxvii. 1) Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world (tebhel.) with fruit, v. 6. Stepping backward from verse 8 of chapter xxv. to verse 6 and 7, in other words from the promise of resurrection and divine consolation to the promises of a feast for all nations, and of a universal dis-illusioning, one is led to hesitate to apply these words to anything which has yet been fulfilled. The veil is Satan's. He is the deceiver of the nations, Rev. xx. 8, 8. He it is who works inwardly in the sons of disobedience for all manner of error and unrighteousness, 2 Cor. iv. 4; Ephs. ii. 2; 2 Thess. ii. 9-12. At the Lord's approaching advent, Satan will be cast down into the abyss. Then shall come (for this is the magnificent and startling disclosure here made to us) blessing to the nations of the earth on a scale never known before. With such a prospect, well may we pray with delighted fervor, "Thy kingdom come!"

We have space left for no more than a few words on the xxvi. chapter. Into the question of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead, we excuse ourselves from now entering. It is a large subject, and demands careful investigation. We have personally no manner of doubt that the passages in the New Testament which teach that the unrighteous dead will raise to the body are to be taken with absolute confidence as really meaning what they appear to say. All the same, we admit frankly the difficulty which arises from the undoubted fact that some passages in the Old Testament would seem to deny any such resurrection; not doubting, however, that to own the difficulty is the first step towards its removal. These remarks are, of course, suggested by the impassioned denial of verse 14:—

Dead (are they), they shall not live,
Deceased (rephaim—shades) they shall not rise;
So hast thou visited and destroyed them,
And made all their memory to perish.

This only will we now venture to surmise, namely, that the absoluteness of this denial may be due to the limitation of the Old Testament view of the future. It may be that the prophet sees as far as into the Coming Kingdom, and no further. These "other lords," that have had dominion over foolish and deceived Israel, are dead and done with so far as regards any further power for mischief which might otherwise be feared. Their dominion is for ever gone. We merely throw out this suggestion for consideration.

Fixing our attention now on the 19th verse, we discern on the one hand clear evidence that the resurrection of the righteous is intended; on the other we are met with subordinate points of some difficulty, both in translation and in exegesis. As to the positive evidence that the resurrection of the just is really meant, we will look first at the text and then at the context. Every one can see how the text reads in the Authorized Version; and a good many will surely regard with a degree of caution, not to say suspicion, the two supplied words "together with":—

Thy dead (men) shall live
(Together with) my dead body shall they arise.

Dr. Davies, in Eyre and Spottiswoode's "Revised Bible," boldly dispenses with any supplied words; but (it would seem) just as boldly treats the Hebrew word for "dead body" (nebhelah, "corpse") as a collective noun, and so translates it as a plural "dead bodies." His rendering of the entire verse is as follows:—

Thy dead shall live,
My dead bodies shall arise,
Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust:
For thy dew is as the dew of herbs,
And the earth shall give birth to the dead.

In any case, resurrection is plainly here, not to be observed by any such minor variations. And the context sustains this main drift of the words. For just as the word nephal is well rendered in the last line of the above quotation "give birth," so the same way in the lament of Israel in the 18th verse—

We have not wrought deliverance in the earth,
Nor are the inhabitants of the world born.

That resurrection reappears in the last verse of the chapter must be evident to all:—

And the earth shall disclose her blood,
And shall no more cover her slain.

The time for the avenging of martyrs has at length come! They rise to be avenged and to stand in their lot in the end of the days. It is altogether a wonderful context. We cannot forget that pathetic, humiliated, yet philanthropic lament of Israel in verses 18 to 18. Israel ought to have wrought deliverance in the earth: through her the inhabitants of the world (the tebhel) ought to have been born! But they have not; for which Israel takes to herself shame. And this leads us to ask—In view of the sudden transition from verse 18 to 19—Who is the speaker in those wonderfully consoling words of the last named verse, "Thy dead shall live," etc.? Perhaps no man may give dogmatic answer to that question; but if we might, without presumption, give expression to what forces itself on our own mind, we should say: Why, do you not see that it is Messiah himself who takes up the strain; who addresses dishonorable Israel in reply to her sorrowful regrets? "Thou sayest, O Israel, that thou hast not wrought deliverance in the earth, and that the inhabitants of the earth have not been born; and thou takest to thyself shame and confusion of face for thy failure. It is well. But now be of good cheer. I am he that is mighty to save both thee and the world; to reinstate thee in thy high vocation: to raise thine own dead; and through thee to pass on the great deliverance from death to the outlying nations. I—the Resurrection and the Life—say unto thee: Thy dead shall live. My corpses—I claim them as mine, as, so to speak, part and parcel of myself—they shall arise. Yea! bear thou even now, for thy encouragement, the very words in which I will waken them from their death-slumbers: 'Awake and sing, ye dwellers in dust.' Then, in due course and sequence, the whole earth itself shall give birth to the dead. And so, through me—thy Conceiver, thy Redeemer, thy Restorer, thy Savior, thy Lord, thy Messiah—shall thy mission be fulfilled." Truly, "Salvation is of the Jews"—in a more comprehensive sense than many over-wise Gentiles imagine. What shall the receiving of them be—who have been cut off for their unbelief—but, literally, life from the dead!

In the above (perhaps too bold) endeavor to thread through the whole context, it has been with intention that we have led up to a possible solution of the singular phrase in verse 19, "my dead body." The intention has been to furnish a suitable pedestal on which to set the exposition offered by the late Dr. Tregelles. In other words, without confidently making it our own, we deem his remarkable exegesis as worthy of the most careful consideration; and our foregoing remarks will have served to show it is that we take to be so. Commenting on Daniel xii. 2, Tregelles says: "It is at the coming of the Lord Jesus that Israel is delivered: it is then that the first resurrection also takes place. Just in the same manner do we read of a resurrection in Isaiah xxvi. 19, in connection with the Lord coming out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: Thy dead men shall live; they shall arise my dead body.' (Such the words are literally. Identified with Christ as being his members.] 'Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of the herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead.' To that day belongs the statement of the same continuous prophecy: 'He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root: Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit (xxvii. 6)." (Tregelles's "Remarks on Daniel," p. 156.) It may be added that even if the singular number of word "body," in the expression "my dead body," is not to be pressed, there still remains the remarkable change of pronoun from "thy" to "my" to be accounted for. "Thy dead men"—"my corpses," in one breath as much as to say: 'Thy dead men are mine:—I promise them they shall arise." A sentence or two from Delitzsch on this passage must conclude our article. "Thy dead will live, my corpses rise again. Awake and rejoice, ye that lie in the dust! For thy dew is dew of the lights, and the earth will bring shades to day.' When compared with the N. T. Apocalypse, it is 'the first resurrection' which is here predicted by Isaiah. The confessors of Jehovah are awakened in their graves to form one glorious church with those who are still in the body. In the case of Ezekiel also (xxxvii. 1-14), the resurrection of the dead which he beholds is something more than a figurative representation of the people that were buried in captivity. The church of the period of glory on this side is a church of those who have been miraculously saved and wakened up for dead. Their persecutors lie at their feet beneath the ground."—Rainbow.

*For which, indeed, he has precedent, in that the same word is plainly used in the singular as a collective noun conveying a plural idea in Lev. xi 11, and Jer. vii. 33.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

At the meeting Wednesday evening G. H. Burrows, Cincinnati, O., and George Thomas, Owasso, Mich., were elected members. The president announced the receipt of a pamphlet from Lieutenant Colonel A. T. Fraser, R. E., entitled "Darkness in the Land of Egypt and Light in the Dwellings of the Children of Israel;" also a book of poems from George A. Hammond of Kingsclear, New Brunswick, "Queen Victoria's Olive Tree and other Poems." In connection with this a romantic incident is mentioned. After Queen Victoria took the throne a present was sent to her from Jerusalem of an olive tree. It was shipped to Beyrout, kept on deck and appeared to die on the passage. In that state it was entrusted to the gardener. In the week in which her majesty was crowned, the Bristol Mercury stated that on the day of the coronation, June 58, 1838, this olive tree put forth twelve blossoms. From this incident, it is thought, the twelve tribes of Israel will be gathered in Victoria's reign. A pamphlet was received from the institution of civil engineers of London, England, containing a paper by Arthur Hamilton-Smyth, B. A., "A Comparison of British and Metric Measures for Engineering Purposes," with an abstract of the discussion upon it. This paper will be discussed at a meeting of the international institute. Last evening the president read some extracts from it.

After the reading of those extracts the paper of Mr. J. H. Weldon of Kilmallock, Ireland, on "The Great Seal of the United States," was given. Mr. Weldon referred to the circumstances that led to the adoption of the seal and showed the remarkable significance of the devices and mottoes upon it. He explained the peculiar science known as Cabbala among the Jews, in one system of which, called Gematria, the letters of a word are regarded with reference to their value as numeral signs. He then pointed out the wonderful significance of the numerical values of the mottoes on the seal. Mr. Weldon's is an unusually interesting and powerful paper and will appear in the July number of "The International Standard."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Conference Notice.

The next quarterly session of the Northwestern Pa. A. C. C. will be held with the church at Plum, Pa., commencing on Friday, July 24th, and continue over Sunday. The brethren of that church desire us to say that they wish to see a large attendance and that they will meet those coming by rail at Hydetown Station, all will be cordially welcomed who can attend.

THE RESTITUTION.

O. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, July 15, 1885.

We need the money due us. If your subscription has expired please send us the money to renew soon.

THE "One Fold and the Only Door," is the title of a volume sent from I. C. Welcome, Director of the Scriptural Publication Society, Yarmouth, Me. So far as we have perused its pages we have been well pleased indeed with the course pursued by the author. Although much has been written by men of eminent talent on Bible teachings concerning our future life and final abode, yet many subjects are placed in a new and very striking light by the author of this work. More hereafter in regard to this book as well as regarding two interesting volumes noticed briefly last week.

WITH all deference to others, from whom we may differ, it is our own opinion that the King of the North and the King of the South are powers belonging to, and acting their part in, that division of the old Roman world known as the Eastern Empire. Palestine is the grand arena where the last acts in the closing drama of this age will be performed, and, if we mistake not, Russia, England, Turkey, and Israel will be the most prominent actors in the final events. Powers in countries about Palestine will act their subordinate parts in the concluding scenes as prophecy indicates.

Communications.

This letter returned, seems too important to be suppressed, in love to W. S., and those in the Crisis office. Editor Crisis:

Your exposition of Isa. lxv. 17-25, is surprising. A sense of duty to W. S., the editorial corps and brotherhood, impels me to ask your attention to those Scriptures embraced in the inquiry of your correspondent.

The Scriptures referred to are 1 Tim. vi. 15. The times of the blessed and only Potentate, etc., The times of refreshing, etc., The times of restitution, Acts iii. 21. "The great and notable (appearing) day of the Lord," Acts ii. 20, as 1000 years. 2 Peter iii; Rev. xx. 3-7, six times. The great sabbath. Heb. iv. 19. etc. Now as the angels in heaven, Adam and Eve in Eden—the old world under promise, Israel and all under the gospel have been—or are, subjects to divine government, why then assume a contradiction of accountability and responsibility in "the world to come!" Matt. xii. 32; Ephe. ii. 5-7; Psa. xxii. 27-28, 72; Zeph. iii. 8. Of course, "where much is given more is required." Luke xii. 48. Note. It was once a great sin to "limit the Holy one of Israel." Psa. lxxviii. 4. Is it not a greater one now? "The saints—the many brethren of whom Christ is "the first born," Rom. viii. 28-30, "will die no more." Luke 20, 30. But "the twelve apostles are then to sit on twelve thrones—judging the twelve tribes of Israel," Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 28-30; all in harmony with the truth of our "reign with Christ the one thousand years." Rev. xx. 3. Surely it is a mere impression (of "another spirit") that ignores all such Scriptures and facts.

2. The terms of Isa. lxv., do teach begetting, births—varied ages, offspring, and death. See Deut. xxviii. 41, beget sons and daughters, etc., (same word), Isa. xlviii. 19, "offspring of thy bowels."

"If a man be ignorant," it should be conceded; but he should not be allowed to so suppress and deny the most evident teaching of God.

3. As creation was for a purpose, Jer. i., and the first advent; so also, is the second, and this purpose is revealed. See 1 Cor. x. 1-13. Surely our age does not end all—does not deny but teach the unveiling of Israel and the nations. Isa. xxv. 6-10; Psa. xcviii. Read Rom. xv. 8-13, in the light of the covenant oath to Abraham. Gen. xxii. 17, 18.

The Pope, Grand Trunk, and "Strong men armed," act as if they could be a law to themselves—above admonition or "instruction in righteousness." But what is "the prayer of one who turneth away his ear from hearing the word? Rev. xxviii. 9.

Bro. W. S. and all of you know that baptism and second coming are taught (in the style of your exposition) by the precept of men. With deep sorrow for this obligation to correct brethren who are engaged to welcome "the coming one," I yet find relief in "the full assurance of faith" that "the sure word of prophecy is a light" that shineth in a dark place, to which we do well to take heed, till the day (of the Lord) shall dawn. 2 Peter i. 19.

However, "the word of the Lord" has been graded in this evasive exposition by W. S. it is the highest privilege and most solemn duty of those who believe, to expose the erring exposition, and let the light shine, so God ordains.

The apostle showed his integrity by his course of life, and the writer may say that an ample salary—an estate of providential abundance—and over 42 years of service have been given to the doctrine of Christ's coming "the time to Salvation, Restitution and reign!"

The reason for believing the gospel at all, is the reason for believing the second coming; and this is also the reason for believing his revealed purpose in coming—which is by oath and covenant—promise to "bless, restore, and reign with his saints." Amen.

He will subdue his foes, but surely this subjugation is not the annihilation of "The remnant" so often spared, saved or restored, as of old. Lev. xxvi. 42-44; Deut. xxxii. 40-43; Isa. x. 22; Matt. xix. 28; Rom. xi. 23-29; xv. 8-13; Heb. viii. 8-12; Rev. vii. 1-7; How readest thou?

Moses with his wife and household, belonged to and was over Israel, and their adherents from Egypt and Canaan; so Christ and his body—Bride, belong to the kingdom that he will inaugurate over the unveiled of Israel and the nations. Isa. xxv. 6-8; Rom. xv. 8-13;

It is only "in the dark, that such signal distinctions are disregarded and the plainest terms of prophesy denied, as to "send—bring forth, offspring, infant, old man, the child shall die—and the sinner an hundred years old, accursed"!!! Do think on all these terms and phrases apply to these brethren in their perfected immortal state? Rev. xxi. 1-5. No, never.

Some one surely should speak! "If these (such as I) should hold their peace the stones (should) cry out,"! Luke xix. 40. Lovingly for integrity in the truth.

J. B. COOK.

MICA PEN NOTES.

I have been doing work in the cemetery, trying to give better shape to the family burial lot. I cannot say that it is time really mis-spent, but one reflects how transitory is everything—and even monuments get old and defaced. Where, thought I, will be all these pillars and slabs of marble and granite, in a thousand years, even as time has its fashion of dealing with things, in the series and sequences of centuries? Who will know anything at all, of these sleeping citizens of these villages, the villages of the living, and of the dead? This will be just the garnery, if I may coin a word, of the dust of unknown and dead ancestors. Will there be one faint trace of a stone and inscription yet remaining? Possibly, if the dead man was a public benefactor. Not otherwise. Yonder comes a carriage, and in it, a quiet modest girl, and her mother, dressed in black. They are making a tour of the ground, in retrospect and observation, one perhaps to pay a half-hour's visit to the tomb of sleeping husband and father.

I said I came to labor in this dormitory of the dead, and having borrowed shovel and spade, and hoe, and guide line of the gate keeper, I threw off coat and vest and neck tie and laid them down on a heap of pine boughs, and when so doing—I thought of these memorable lines:

"We lay our garments by,
Upon our beds to rest,
So death will soon disrobe us all,
Of what we here possessed."

I have no ambition after post-mortem cemetery memorials. Let me sleep, forgotten, if need be by men. The only hope is, the hope that is alone sensible and satisfying—that God will remember me. There is nothing else that will avail an iota. Right here on this new-made grave—is a kind of woven token, a wreath with letters—but in a few short months, the freshness is utterly gone, and the letters are misplaced, and everything is almost a wreck. Nature itself battles with memorials, and baffles all our fondness. The other day as I was rambling along the brow of a declivity, I thought and said—"right there is a good place to lie a little while—right in the breast of that bank." "How is that?" inquired my fellow rambler. "Because, I would rest, as one expecting every instant to get out easily and quickly at the resurrection call—and I would be like a traveler ready to spring out of bed; even in the sleep of death." What is the sleep of a dozen years to the dead, or of a hundred or of a thousand? It is all alike momentary. I have been sleeping well of late, and from ten until six—I have sometimes hardly stirred—and it has just been a wee moment from the town clock's night stroke across the valley, until the fresh of morn, and the cheery chirping of the overjoyed robin. Yes, God only knows the dead—and he does know them. He is marvellous for memory. Christ is with him in this memory—the memory of love and of his own honor—the honor wherewith he honors his word of promise. And the spirit has his mark on the souls of the dead, and on their dust—on their volant and volatile elements, though they be most subtle and diffusible of all things in nature.

I am reading Farrar's Life of Christ, published by Brother Rufus Wendell, (of which he has a noble stock in ready store), an every way noble book, of which thousands might well be called for and joyfully read. Farrar, I see, is no dogmatist,—but learned and thorough and calm. And I might reflect here, half in parenthesis, that Brother Wendell is about to push his new and thorough edition of the "Revised Bible"—useful to students, and to all with the least taste for comparing the old and new. This edition may suit the thinking people who read THE RESTITUTION.

Now, I just spoke of Farrar's book, and I recall the trials of our Master in his conflict with the jealous Jews, and their hostility to his kindest walk and work of mercy among them, and I was just now thinking how the pride and lust of man are quiet often when undisturbed, like a gorged serpent half asleep. So lust will drowse and seem peaceable when sated, and let alone. But assail it, and then see. There is wrath asleep, and hidden, where you would least think it. In how many hearts does it lie there and thus quiescent, an evil wrath coiled up in the love of something sinful. Unsheath a sword to touch the sin with its cutting and reforming point, and how wrath rises like a serpent's crest, and lifts itself up, and retreats and mounts in hissing obliquities! What a long delay since the foregoing, and I will make the continuation brief. I wrote to brother Daniel Howard at Hot Springs, not long since about like this, that in the possible view of a return to Palestine in autumn, it would be a special incentive and help, if all persons interested in that trans-Mediterranean world of renown, would patronize the collection of objects of interest, and specify what would be wished for—whether wood, water, rock, relics of ruins, and curiosities and mementos of sacred places, of whatever kind. If a sufficient number would engage to pay a reasonable amount for such reminiscences, directing what, as far as possible, would be preferred, it might open the way successfully. I told Brother Howard personally last fall, that I would be glad to go there with him, but I see no practicable way to meet expenses, except as I have here intimated.

In conclusion, I will only mention that I have in mind a case of a deserving family of believers of important truths taught in THE RESTITUTION, who are suffering for want of the comforts of this life, but then there are always the poor, it is true. However if any generous soul should have a dollar that was ardently anxious for a mission of usefulness, I could send it on its way rejoicing, quickly, with the glad consciousness that it was not made in vain. The very mail-bag itself might feel cheerful with a sense of the blessing at its heart—and the steam that transported it, feel a transport of pleasure, in carrying a little medicine for privation. Still I am not good at begging, unless it be in begging the mercy and goodness of God, and in that may we beg successfully, and never without remembrances of praise to his name.

P. S.—Providence called us from the South. If I could find some one of rheumatic, bronchial or asthmatic tendency (who would be greatly benefitted by a southern residence in fact) I would be glad to sell a little land I have there, and would make THE RESTITUTION a donation if you saw any way to bring it about.

Miscellaneous.

Among the remains of Indian mounds in the western suburbs of Grand Rapids, Mich., were recently found two nodules of nearly pure silver, weighing together upwards of twelve pounds, together with a small piece of silver foil. Near them were a large copper axe, a sea shell, bone spears, and other prehistoric relics.

The unusually low water in the Swiss lakes last year made it a favorable time for archæological explorations, and many valuable relics of the prehistoric "lake dwellers" were recovered. Among them were a splendidly preserved bronze sword, several dozens bronze bracelets, etc., together with many articles of stone and charred fabric.

A French statistician calculates that two thousand five hundred and forty kings and emperors have reigned over sixty-four empires and nations. Three hundred, he records, were dethroned, and sixty-four, finding the misery of a throne unbearable, resigned the position. Twenty-four tired of life as well as power, committed suicide. Twelve became insane. A hundred were slain in battle, one hundred and twenty-three were made prisoners through the fortunes of war. Twenty-five perished as martyrs, a hundred and fifty-one were assassinated, and a hundred and eight were executed after a legal trial.

COLOSSUS OF RHODES.

This celebrated statue was of bronze, and is commonly cited as one of the wonders of the world. It was the work of Chares, a noted sculptor, who spent twelve years in making it. It stood only sixty-six years, and was overthrown by an earthquake B. C. 224. Its height was 105 feet, without pedestal. Its thumb measured a fathom round. The statue was hollow, and the cavity was filled with stones. After the earthquake the Colossus helped the Rhodians out with a swindle as gigantic as itself, which they perpetrated on the rest of the Greeks, subscriptions for replacing the statue being collected to more than five times the value of the work needed, and then the money being diverted to other uses. The statue lay on the ground for 894 years, when, the island being conquered by the Saracens, the fallen Colossus was sold for old brass to a Hebrew junk-dealer of those days, who cut it up, loaded 900 camels with the brass, and made a fortune out of his speculation. Allowing 800 pounds for each camel-load, the total weight of the bronze was 720,000 pounds, and this after the statue had been subjected to the rust and waste from the theft of nine centuries. The pedestal was triangular, and there was a staircase to ascend to the top. Rhodes was famous for its statues, however, as Pliny mentions a hundred other colossuses, not so large in the various quarters of the city.

VIENNA, June 28.—Several fresh documents from the Mahdi are published by the Akhbar, containing one or two statements of more than ordinary interest. In a letter to the Emir of Shendy the rebel leader writes: "Thou tellest me that the residence of the former Sultans of Shendy has been destroyed, and that the jackals and lions are living in their palace. Herewith thou receivest a sum of money, 800 talluris, to defray the cost of repairing the palace, for I think of instituting there a Medressah, or School of Divinity for 250 talmiks or theological students. To this purpose I intend to devote one-third of the ransom which I shall receive for the Christian missionaries and nuns who are in my hands."

Another document contains a proclamation of the Mahdi to his army, and runs as follows: "To all the faithful who are fighting for God, the prophet, and his servant, Mohamet Ashmed—How are you faithful when you are again murmuring because you are prevented from making pilgrimages to Mecca by the continuance of the war? Do you not know that killing an infidel is more agreeable to God than offering prayers for a thousand months? Do you not know that not only from Mecca, the mother of cities, but also that from every field of battle, a path leads to Paradise? Oh, ye faithful, I assure you that if you die in the morning fighting against the infidels, you will, even ere it is noon, be with the Prophet in Paradise. Silken robes of green will clothe you, and golden bracelets adorn you. You will repose by the banks of cool rivers, sipping refreshing drinks, while sixty ever youthful houris, bright as the noon, will smile upon you."—London Standard.

The career of Hobart Pasha, just sent by England on a mission to the Sultan, has been an eventful one. The second son of the Earl of Buckinghamshire, he was born in 1822, and first saw active service when still a boy in the expedition for suppressing the slave trade in Brazilian waters. During 1848 and 1849 he served as Lieutenant on board the Queen's yacht. He was mentioned when in command of H. M. S. Driver at the capture of Boomarsund and became Post Captain in 1862. Six years later he was appointed naval adviser in the Turkish service. In 1869 he commanded the Turkish fleet which was sent to Crete and brought to a satisfactory issue the delicate diplomatic negotiations which were carried on at Syra. He was subsequently promoted to the rank of Pasha and became Inspector-General of the Turkish navy. During the war he contrived to elude the vigilance of the Russians and at great risk successfully ran the blockade of the Danube in one of the Sultan's gunboats. In 1880 he was named Mushir and Naval Aide-de-Camp to the Sultan. Four years ago he married Miss Kathleen Le Hore, who belongs to an ancient Anglo-German family which settled in Ireland as far back as 1160, and who has the rare distinction of being a Countess of the Holy Roman Empire in her own right. Mrs. Hobart Hampden has devoted a great part of her life to works of charity, and is now President of most of the Catholic sociétés de bien faisance at Constantinople. Hobart Pasha stands very high in the favor and friendship of the Sultan, and is doubtless now sent to renew that anti-Russian English and Turkish alliance which existed under Beaconsfield, but has been broken under Gladstone.—*N. Selected Jewish Notes.

On the 13th., a fire broke out at Suwalk (Russian Poland) in a house inhabited by a Jew, and situated near the great Beth Hamedrash. Before the fire was subdued forty houses tenanted by the Jews were destroyed, and six persons were severely burned, of whom one or two were not expected to recover. About one hundred Jewish families are now entirely homeless and destitute.

Of the Jews of Cabul, of whom there are said to be about 2000, the Jewish World says that there are many of them very rich, and live in comparative security and retirement. "They labor, of course, under the usual disabilities to which Jews are subjected in all Mohammedan countries. They are obliged for example, to wear a rope round the waist, and are liable to punishment if they venture to ride abroad upon either an ass or a horse. They are also obliged to wear a three-cornered fur cap so as to be recognized by the Moslems, lest, perchance, any true believer should, in error, be led to give the greeting of peace to one who is an infidel." They know nothing of later Rabbinism, and hold the Talmud in little repute. They have no public synagogue, and conduct their services in the house of one of the richer members of the community. Their ritual is somewhat after the pattern of the Karaites, or non-Talmudic Jews of South Russia.

CAIRO, July 11.—General Brackenbury telegraphs from Tatmeh that a letter which was received there yesterday states that El Mahdi is dead. The letter was written by a merchant at Handak, on July 8, instant, and it says that since the Prophet's death his followers have fallen to fighting among themselves. A refugee Egyptian soldier who arrived at Tatmeh to-day, General Brackenbury says, asserts that he saw an Arab on the 1st of July at Abudom, who told him El Mahdi was dead.

MADRID, July 13.—There were 1,417 new cases of cholera reported in Spain yesterday, and 667 deaths. The cholera has broken out in four places in the province of Jaen. Forty-two new cases were reported yesterday in that province, and eighteen deaths from the disease. The official report shows a total of 30,000 cases in Spain since the inception of the scourge, up to last evening, and a total of 12,000 deaths.

The latest returns regarding the damage occasioned by the recent earthquake in the Vale of Cashmere states the loss of life at 3,081 persons, besides 25,000 sheep and goats and 8,000 cattle. The number of dwellings ruined is computed at 75,000. Latest advices report an occasional recurrence of the commotion in some localities.

The meteor which passed over this city Monday evening was seen by a careful observer at Clyde and by the astronomers of the Litchfield Observatory, Hamilton College. The meteor is pronounced the most brilliant of recent years. The light was intense. Our correspondent at Clyde and the observers at Clinton saw the meteor explode.—*Rochester (N. Y.) The annual assembly of the Church of God, will (if the Lord will), convene at the house of the brethren in Winchester, Va., on Friday the seventh of August, and will continue over the second Sunday. All of the Brethren in Christ every where are respectfully invited to attend, all that can come will please notify me at once so I can procure tickets for reduced rates; and all who cannot come will please arrange a letter, and all churches will please either send a delegate or letter, to be read in the interest of the cause on which the destiny of all nations rest. By order of the quarterly assembly of the Church of God, which met according to announcement in THE RESTITUTION.

A Gospel Older than that of St. Matthew.

VIENNA, June 23.—Prof. Karabacek has been good enough to show me the papyrus which has lately been discovered among the El Fayum manuscripts, and which is alleged to be the fragment of a gospel older than those of St. Matthew and St. Mark. It is a very small fragment, measuring three and a half centimetres in length and four and one-third in width, and contains seven lines, having 105 words. Of these 96 can be plainly deciphered, but nine are indistinct. Some lines are mutilated at the beginning and end, and it is supposed that from 91 to 98 letters are missing. The number of deficient letters can be reckoned by comparing lines three, four, and seven with the others. The seventh contains but four letters.

The writing is in Greek, and Dr. G. Bickell of the University of Innsbruck, who discovered and deciphered the fragment, concludes, from the form of the letters and the abbreviations, that it was written in the third century; but from the style of the composition he infers that it dates originally from the first century, and this is also the opinion of Dr. Edward Harnack, editor of the Theologische Literatur Zeitung of Leipsic.

Here is the translation of the fragment, line for line. As already reported, its parallel is to be found in Matthew xxvi. verses 30 to 34, and Mark xiv. verses 26 to 30:

1. "But after supper, as they went out,
2. "You will all take offence this night.
3. "According to the Scriptures, 'I will smite the Shepherd, and the sheep will be scattered.'
4. "Then Peter spake,
5. "And if all, not I.
6. "He said to him,
7. "The cock will crow twice, and before that thou shalt deny me thrice."

The omission of the words, to be found both in Matthew and Mark, "But after I am risen again I will go before you into Galilee," is noticeable. Dr. Bickell reviewing the fragment in the Zeitschrift fur Catholische Theologie—a periodical printed at Innsbruck for private circulation—lays stress upon the importance of the manuscript as being the earliest fragment of the New Testament gospel; not canonical, indeed, but yet no pseudograph of heretical composition. Dr. Bickell's views are set forth and approvingly commented upon in an article by Dr. Harnack, which appears in the last number of the Theologische Literatur Zeitung of Leipsic. Dr. Harnack, who is a fervent Roman Catholic, distinguished for his Greek scholarship, remarks that, so far as he can judge, Dr. Bickell has taken no liberties with the text, having only added five letters, which it could be plainly guessed were the missing ones, but which simply mended broken words, without altering the sense of a line. The antiquity and genuineness of the fragment are, he argues, beyond dispute.

REMEMBER THE OPPRESSED.

In Persia every street boy raises his hand against the wretched Hebrew; he is beaten and buffeted in the streets, spit upon in the bazaar, says the St. James Gazette. The only person he can appeal to is the farmer of the Jews. From him he will obtain a certain amount of protection if he be actually robbed of money or goods, not from the farmer's sense of justice, but because the complainant, were his wrong unredressed, might be unable to pay his share of the tax. At every public festival—even at the royal selaam, before the King's face—the Jews are collected, and a number of them are flung into the hauz or tank, that King and mob may be amused by seeing them crawl out half drowned and covered with mud. The same kindly ceremony is witnessed whenever a provincial Governor holds high festival; there are fireworks and Jews. At every arrival of a new provincial Governor the Jews are compelled to sacrifice an ox in his honor upon the high road at some distance from the town. The head man of the Hebrew community has to run with the bleeding head of the animal, imploring the Governor's countenance and protection, until he is beaten off by the farashes. No child is missing for a few hours but the Jews are accused of stealing it for sacrifice, and on such occasions they are shamefully beaten and robbed. No respect is paid to their wives and daughters. They are compelled to live in a "Ghetto," crowded together, where the houses resemble the dens of animals rather than the habitations of men. When a Jew marries, a rabble of the Mohammedan ruffians of the town invite themselves to the ceremony, and, after a scene of riot and intoxication, not unfrequently beat their host and his relations and insult the women of the community, only leaving the Jewish quarter when they have slept off the drink they have swallowed at their unwilling host's expense. Huddled together as they are, and living on the poorest food, is it to be wondered at that the Jews of Persia are a pale and sickly race? The wonder rather is that they exist at all.

The Jews of Persia are in the habit of making pilgrimages to the tombs of Esther and Mordecai, who lie in a poor little shrine near Hamadan. A few very small flat stones covered with Hebrew characters mark the resting places of generations of oppressed Jews. The graveyard remains undefiled, for it is hidden by grass and weeds. The Christians of Shiraz lately placed a wall around their burial ground, which is adjacent. The natural result in a Mohammedan country followed; the graves were desecrated and the tombstones displaced and broken.—Occident.

WOODWARD.—At Greenfield, Monroe Co., Wis., June 5, 1885, Gilbert Woodward, aged 59 years, and seven months, of heart, liver and spine disease.

Bro. W. and wife were converted to the Abrahamic Faith several years ago and were baptized by the writer into the all saving name for the remission of sins. He has been a sufferer more or less for two years, till relieved by death, in his long sickness he had reflected much in regard to the future, and often said he had no fears in regard to his faith; if we had not got the truth he did not know where to look for it, and death had no terror for him; his sufferings would then cease. He leaves a loving wife and her aged mother, infirm in age, to whom she has been a constant attendant and nurse, for a long time, beside a large group of relatives (the largest group I ever saw on such an occasion).

Services by the writer at the house of the Brethren, Tunnel City which was filled to overflowing. Text, Romans viii. 18; which with the context was expressive of our Faith and Hope.

A deep impression seemed to be [illegible] the seed for the gospel is brought to us by the revelation of Jesus Christ. Truly the times are perilous, we long for the time to come when there will be "no more death, come Lord Jesus and come quickly. Yours in hope.

WM. B. PUTNAM.

LOCKWOOD.—At Crystal Falls, Mich. April 26, 1885; Elizabeth Lockwood, aged 76 years and three months, of Ovarian tumor.

Helpless from Oct. 1, till death, she was a great sufferer, but bore all with Christian fortitude and patience, and longed for the time to come when she would be at rest. She was brought to Tamah and laid by the side of her husband, where both rest in the unconscious sleep awaiting the return of him who is the Resurrection and the Life, to give unto them the unfading crown of life. Services held at Congregational Church. A large concourse of sympathising friends and aged sister of the deceased, and children and grand children, mingled tears of sorrow with relatives for their loss, but none who knew her sorrow as those that have no hope. Sister L. was beloved by all who knew her and we trust her godly life and conversation will long be remembered by those who have listened to her kind admonitions, and although dead she yet speaketh. She was a Syn believer in the Abrahamic Covenant and through the promised seed all would have the offer of life everlasting. The writer spoke words of comfort predicated on Psalms xvii. 15.

Editor Restitution:

It is my painful duty to announce to you the death of Mrs. Field. She died on the 24 ultimo of pneumonia. I cannot express the pain of parting from as good a wife as any man ever had. We traveled the rugged road of life together for nearly 58 years and I shall greatly miss her company while I make the balance of the journey alone. But she has gone to rest until the better resurrection, and it will not be long until I will rest by her side. She was in the 80th year of her age; but one my junior. She was a life long and zealous Christian and was beloved by all who knew her in domestic, Christian and social relations. God bless you my dear brother, and I pray that we may meet in the kingdom.

Very truly. N. FIELD.

WEARINESS AND WAITING.

Wait on the Lord; be of good courage and he shall strengthen thine heart.—Psalm xxvii. 14.
The Lord is not slack concerning his promise.—2 Pet. iii. 9.

I am weary of working and waiting—
Waiting and watching alway
For the shadows to clear and brighten,
For the dawn of the endless day.

Sometimes the pain is so heavy,
And the burden so hard to bear,
That it seems as if nothing
Could lighten the load of care.

I can preach to another's sorrow,
And another's burden share,
Why, then, is the cross I must carry
So very hard to bear?

But even, as now in my trouble,
I trace these thoughts of my heart,
I can hear the voice of my Savior,—
At his words the quick tears start.

"Child"—only sorrowful accents,
And no reproach in his tone,
Though I know my faithless murmurs
And my hardened heart of stone!

"There is no cross nor burden,
Whatsoever it seem to be,
That will redden, or tire, or distress thee,
If thou wilt but share it with me.

"Mourn not that the shadows deepen,
Wish not yet for the Endless Day,
From behind the clouds comes the rainbow—
Do thou my will alway!"

"Lord, I will wait always on Thee!"
I cry with repentant tears,
Remembering ever Thy blessed Word—
One day as a thousand years.

"And the Lord is not slack with his promise."
Oh teach me with patience to say,
That the day of repose is not distant
When the captive of sin shall be free!

"THINGS WHICH MUST SHORTLY COME TO PASS."—REV. i. 11.

Eighteen centuries ago well nigh, these words were spoken by him who also said, "Behold, I come quickly." But when we call to mind that the speaker is he with whom a "1,000 years are as one day," and "calleth the things that are not as though they were," we understand that the things then foreshown and foretold are likely to be yet future, even as his coming in person is yet future.

So then, without discussing the differences which have divided the thoughts of the best of men in all ages, I would only in brief express my own, which is that "the book sealed with seven seals" is still in the hand [illegible] on the throne, and [illegible] been [illegible] and rapture [illegible] and in the presence of the elders then enthroned in resurrection bodies, the Lamb shall take that book, as alone worthy to loose the seals thereof.

If this be so, then the seals have yet to be loosed, the trumpets have yet to sound, and the vials have yet to be poured out upon the seat of the beast, the Anti-christ of the last days. For is it not the Apocalypse of Jesus Christ after he has ceased to walk in the midst of the golden candlesticks?

Now, whatever may be thought of the signs of the times that thicken around us, and however indifferent men may choose to be to the "rising of nation against nation, kingdom against kingdom, famines, pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places, distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring with" unwonted fury, so that the oldest seamen afloat remark on its speciality, there is yet another sign of the Son of Man predicted by our Lord which is not wanting in these our times. For we read "False Christs and false prophets shall arise, and show signs and wonders. Then if any man say unto you Lo, here is Christ! or, Lo he is there! believe it not. For many shall come in my name saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many. Wherefore if they say unto you, Lo, he is in the desert, go not forth; or behold, he is in the secret chamber, believe it not. For as the lightning cometh out of the east and shineth even unto the west, so shall the coming of the Son of Man be."

By which I understand so universal, but not so manifest, shall it be. Wherever the true Israel of God shall be found, that election out of all nations and ages set forth in type by the 144,000, whether sleeping the sleep of ages remaining or ever till be come, shall then be manifested, like sons of the morning, bright gems for his crown.

But whatever theory may be adopted, or whatever line of thought made ready to our hand by others, may be considered well to pursue, to one truth, and to one only, would I give prominence, as an earnest Christian man to my fellow Christians in earnest, over and above whatever else I might say at this time, and that is—Readiness to go in with him to the marriage ere the door be shut.

And this I would urge, for three reasons. 1st.—The importance of readiness, because they will be accounted Christ's at his coming who are ready when he comes, or have fallen asleep in readiness for his coming; 2nd.—That the conditions of readiness consist not in the possession of faith, but in the proportion of faith possessed, so that our life among men is a life of testimony to and for him whom we have believed; and 3rd.—That we individually should make ourselves ready by consecrated life, walk, and conversation among men, "in behavior as becometh saints," seeing that when he cometh to the marriage, it shall be said, "His wife hath made herself ready." For it must not be forgotten that it was to disciples our blessed Lord and Master said, "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh. Lest coming suddenly he finds you sleeping." Nor should the lesson be lost upon us, where the spouse in the Canticles falls asleep, and missing the smile of her Lord, she gets roughly handled by the watchmen who go about the streets.

So then to those who have an ear to hear, and a heart to perceive, we propose to offer a few suggestions arising out of the words, "At midnight there was a cry made, Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him" (Matt. xxv. 6.)

That this same Jesus who was taken up into heaven, shall so come in like manner as he was seen to go, is clearly told us in Acts i. 11. That he shall come the second time without sin unto salvation is also clearly set forth in Heb. ix. 28. But, that the sinner may go on in sin, and the saint may continue his slumber, the enemy confuses the mind of thinking men by spiritualising away the meaning of those plain statements of Scripture, and, as a very lullaby, borrows the words of our Lord—"Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no not the angels in heaven." But he also said, "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with the cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." Now because a period of a thousand years is marked off as lying between the first resurrection and the final judgment (see Rev. xx.), called the Millennium, two questions naturally arise, and they have divided the thought of the best and wisest of Bible students for ages. 1st. Will the second coming of Christ be visible and [illegible] 2nd. Will it be pre or post-millennial?

To answer the two questions is our present design, in order to which we have chosen the words, "At midnight there was a cry made," which we propose to view in three aspects.

1st. As to time.
2nd. As to manner.
3rd. As to purpose.

1st. As to time, at midnight the cry is made; then the coming of the Bridegroom will be after midnight and towards morning. Not necessarily a solar night or morning, for when it is night in one part of the earth, it is morning elsewhere. But his coming who made the sun, shall make the morning; that morning without clouds to all to whom he comes; so then night and morning are here figurative; signifying the end of one age and the dawn of another. By whom, then, is the cry at midnight made? Evidently by some watchers who have kept awake till midnight, some who knew their Lord's will and did it better than even the wise virgins who went forth to meet the Bridegroom, and while he tarried they slumbered, and slept. Here then we find what we may term first, second, and third-class believers; third-class, who miss the marriage feast, but go and get oil, and so are saved later on, as indicated in the words "so as by fire," whatever that may mean; second-class, who go in with their Lord and sit with him as the "blessed who are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb;" and first-class, who have not slept, but roused their brethren to get ready to go in with them. These may rank higher than those who slept a while. That the truth of the Lord's personal advent a second time has lived in the hearts of a remnant all along the age since he went up, we doubt not, and here and there, now and then, testimony has been borne to it in all countries, times, and climes.

If any doubt this let them consult "The Voice of the Church," by one D. T. Taylor of Boston, U. S., and to be had of Bagster and Son, Paternoster Row, which has run through several editions, from which it may be appropriate to give one quotation from a sermon by Bishop Latimer. "The day is not far off. Let us beware, for it will one day overtake us. The world was ordained to endure 6,000 years; not full 6,000 years, for the days shall be shortened for the elect's sake. Therefore, all those excellent and learned men which, without doubt, God has sent into the world in these days to give the world warning, all those men do gather out of the Scriptures that the day cannot be far off." This day, expressly called "The day of the Lord," will also be found more fully set forth in a modern work bearing the title already named, "Things which must shortly come to pass," Elliot Stock, Paternoster Row, p. 135, 136.

But during the last half century, and especially since Edward Irving electrified London with his eloquence in 1830, this cry has been quickened and has covered an ever-widening area, both in this country and in America, where, at last the truth has been much disparaged by gross counterfeits. But if the day and the hour is not to be known until it comes, it should not be difficult to determine whether its coming is before or after the millennial period. In Matt. xiii. 41; we read, "The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and shall gather out of his kingdom all scandals, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; then shall the righteous shine forth in the kingdom of their Father. From this we learn that his coming is to clear away the tares, the children of the wicked one, to bind the father of Lies himself, casting him into the bottomless pit and setting a seal on him, that he should have no liberty for the thousand years that Christ is to reign on the earth with all his saints. And when this is to be, we further learn from Luke xix. 12; etc., where our Lord sets forth himself as a nobleman going into a far country to receive for himself (the title deeds of) a kingdom and to return. And then comes the reckoning with the servants left in charge during his absence. From all this it is evident that the adjudication and appointment of the worthy, as well as the sentence pronounced on the unworthy, must precede and preface the establishment of the millennial reign of blessedness foreshadowed and promised in Romans viii. 19 to 23.

2nd. As to manner; here for lack of discrimination many become so confused between one passage of Scripture and another, that the subject is too soon given up by the uninitiated in hopeless despair, failing to see that this Second Coming of our Lord consists of three or four stages.

1st. Into the air secretly:
2nd. In the clouds visibly:
3rd. On the earth standing:
4th. On the throne of David sitting.

1st. Into the air secretly, suddenly, and unseen by the world, seen only by those who are caught up to meet him there. For we read in Matt. xxiv. 40, etc., "Two shall be in the field, one taken and another left; two grinding at the mill, one taken the other left;" for as a thief he will come. And where Luke records the same, he adds, "two shall be in one bed, one shall be taken and the other left;" and where the disciples enquire, Where, Lord? He borrows a figure from Job, "where the carcase is there will the eagles gather," which afterwards we learn from Paul to the Thessalonians to mean, "we shall be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air" (1 Thess. iv. 17).

There his bride shall continue with him for three and one-half, or, it may be, seven years when he shall appear in the second stage.

2nd. In the clouds visibly, with power and great glory, as we learn from Daniel first, in chap. vii. 9, etc., also Matt. xxvi. 30, they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory; also Rev. i. 7, "Behold he cometh in clouds, and every eye shall see him, they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him;" also Rev. vi. 16, when "the great, the rich, the mighty, both bondmen and free men say to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb;" also Rev. xix. 11, etc., when he is seen as a King of kings and Lord of lords, riding forth to universal conquest, the armies of heaven following him upon white horses clothed in linen, white and clean.

3rd. On the earth standing; in that same spiritual body which he took up on the morning of his resurrection; bearing the credentials of the crucified One in his hand and his feet, whereof Job had a glimpse when inspired to say, "I know that my redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth;" whereof Zechariah had a glimpse, too, when he was inspired to say, "Then shall the Lord go forth, and his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives. The very spot from which he went up shall be the spot to which he will return and alight.

4th. On the throne of his father David sitting, for so has it been foreshown and promised, "He must reign till he hath put all his enemies under his feet;" so declared the angel Gabriel: "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." What then to do? See Rev. xxi. 5, "He that sat upon the throne said, Behold I make all things new." For then new heavens and a new earth shall reveal a new age wherein righteousness and blessing shall abound as now unrighteousness and the curse abound. From all which it should be evident to unprejudiced minds, that those who do so believe are not indulging some vain imagination, or framing some cunningly-devised fable, but that they get it out of the Scriptures, and by comparing spiritual things with spiritual do fairly arrive at these conclusions; and they could not find such truth in the Scriptures unless God had first put it there. If death be the gateway to heaven, so that the believer through the portal of death steps from earth to heaven, and so is ever with the Lord, where would be the need or force of his words: "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto Myself, that where I am ye may be also;" the fair inference from which is that we remain here until he fetches us, either out of the dust of the grave into which our tabernacles have fallen, or to change the tabernacle not yet fallen into the grave.

Death is an enemy, Jesus is a friend; shall we mistake the coming of an enemy for the coming of a friend, and such a friend? Nay, verily, we will continue to hope to escape the enemy by the coming of the Friend, who when he shall come into the air shall attract to himself all who in their spiritual shall have an affinity for his most glorious body, and become the subject of that magnetic force whereof the world has never yet known. For so we find it written, and so we believe, that "when Christ who is our life shall appear, we also shall appear with him in glory." And then as the Son of man, the first man Adam; as the son of Abraham, the father of all the faithful; as the son of David, the King of Israel, he shall establish a house, a dynasty, a line, a kingdom, an everlasting kingdom; and the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom shall have no end.

3rd. And lastly, as to purpose, and this we have somewhat anticipated, but briefly let us add: To dethrone the usurper, whose words were no vain idle boast, when he showed the Lord all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time, and said, "All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them, for that is delivered unto me, and to whomsoever I will give it." (And there is no other way of accounting for the success of cruel emperors, and the prevalence of false faith hitherto.) He comes to deliver from the usurper, and become set as rightful heir on his hill of Zion. There, on David's throne to "reign in Mount Zion before his ancients gloriously," for Enoch must be there, Noah, Daniel, and Job, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Moses, and Samuel, David, and Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, who saw him in vision only, but then must see him, the Son of Man, the Son of God, the Christ of all the Scriptures, for "to him give all the prophets witness." There to rule all nations with a rod of iron (typical) of strength, not oppression, until they become willing to bow to his sceptre of love, and hence the words of inspiration, "Kiss the Son lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that trust in him." There and then to reign with his saints 1,000 years, as we read in Rev. ii. 26-27; iii. 21; v. 10; and xx. 4-6: Israel, the lineal descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, restored to divine favor, shall become the regal nation on the earth. Jehovah's bride in Jerusalem restored, beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, shall Mount Zion be, as the city of the Great King. "Strangers shall stand and feed their flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be their ploughmen and their vine-dressers, but they shall be named the priests of the Lord, and men shall call them ministers of our God," a nation of missionaries through whom the world shall then be evangelised. Then shall the teeming millions of Asia and Africa, as well as of Europe, America, and the isles afar off, abolish their idols for ever, and all false religions shall vanish like mist before the rising of the sun. Then shall the wolf lie down with the lamb, and the leopard with the kid. "They shall not hurt, nor destroy in all the holy mountain, for the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." "Hallelujah! Praise ye the Lord," shall then go up in one joyous anthem, transporting to man and pleasing to God. This is the good time coming, and no other. The burden of Dumah may well become ours. "He calleth to me out of Seir, Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night? The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night." First the night and then the morning.—Nathaniel Starkey, at Prophetic Conference, London, June 11, 1885.

"Together With Him."

As "ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us." This is a most high and honorable commission, and we do not wonder that Paul, writing to the Corinthians, declared himself and his fellow laborers to be workers together with God and Christ, and beseught them not to receive the reconciling grace of which they were the messengers in vain. But not only are ministers workers together with Christ, but every one who is called to life "together with him" is a worker together with him. As the vine does not bear fruit directly, but by means of the branches, so it is with Christ. "Together with him," even as the branch, abiding together in the vine, so we are workers together with Christ. If only we could fully realize and truly take hold on the significance of the word "together," how much more fruit we would bear; how much wasted talent and energy, now lost in self effort, would be saved; how light and gladsome would the labor be; how that fellowship and union, with power, would lighten labor when it is heavy and wearisome, and sanctify the senses, the afflictions, and the disappointments that are so often met with in the work. Union and fellowship with Christ in spiritual privilege and spiritual service are the whole secret of Christian life.

It has been and still is God's great work to win lost men back to himself, and make ready for the regeneration of the world, and it is also our work. If we would be workers together with him, we must study him as the model workman in his Father's business. Let us note some of the more marked characteristics of our Lord as brought out in connection with his work among men.

First. It is recorded of him that he said in eternity: "Lo! I come! I delight to do thy will, O, my God! Yea, thy law is written within my heart." This must be the key-note to all service with and for God. It is not first the work, but the will, of God that we are to do. The work is not always to our mind or taste; but the will of God, as Pabor has it, is always the "sweet will of God." We asked a little boy, a few days ago, if he did not want to do something for us. To which he promptly replied: "No, sir, but if you want me to do it; I will." To work itself is sometimes irksome, especially in many of its details. The reaping is always glad; but the plowing and sowing, the patient waiting and the careful tending are not always to our mind. Weariness and perplexity, "bonds, stripes and imprisonments" are in the way; then we must have recourse to the mainspring of action and service: "I delight to do thy will, O, my God."

Second. We also note that our Lord said: "For their sakes I sanctify myself." Here, again, we have another principle of action: "For their sakes." Not for ourselves, but for their sakes, we can give ourselves up to work for men. Deep fellowship with Christ is necessary to this. Oftentimes we must go empty-hearted to Christ and get a filling of the divine love for sinners. Sinners, even those we love most, are indifferent and ungrateful, and even worse, in the face of our care for them. But more often our work lies among those for whom we have no natural care, and not seldom those who are in themselves uninteresting and repugnant to us. Then it is that, inspired by the love of Christ and moved by the will of God, we can do "all things through Christ which help-eth us." This principle in our work "together with him," means high consecration, with self-denial, in which we learn not to look at our own things, but on "the things of another." This only can teach us not to be respecters of persons; to love deeper, and beyond a man's clothes, culture and surroundings, even at his soul and the broken image of God that is in him, and on to the end where, by faith, we see him seated in glory with Christ. Christ at the well, talking with the fallen woman of Samaria, is an example of doing the will of God, and at the same time sanctifying himself for the sake of another.

Third. "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me." Here we see such devotion to work that even the natural and ordinary care and comfort of the body is set aside. There are many ministers who have managed to secure for themselves comfortable and pleasant surroundings, and a well-cushioned pulpit they would care to preach from. To forego their dinner for a fallen woman is not a thing to be thought of. The will of him that sent us is all well, but we are apt to say we cannot do without our dinner. An up-town and not a down-town charge; a city and not a country parish; a cultivated and not an unlettered congregation; parishoners who live on the avenues and broad streets and not those who live in the "third story back" apartments—these are more to our mind than God's will. "Workers together with him!" Who of us are such workers in the full and precious meaning of this phrase?—The Independent.

The Seeds of Love.

The farmer planted the seed,—
A little dry, black seed;
And off he went to other work—
For the farmer was never known to shirk—
And cared for what he had need.

The night came with its dew,—
The cool and silent dew;
The dawn came, and the day;
And the farmer worked away
At labors not a few.

Home from his work one day—
One glowing summer day,—
His children showed him a perfect flower:
It had burst in bloom that very hour,—
How I cannot say.

But I know if the smallest seed
In the soil of love be cast,
Both day and night will do their part;
And the sower who works with a trusting heart
Will find the flower at last.

A Hint to the Boys.

I stood in a store the other day when a boy came in and applied for a situation.

"Can you write a good hand?" was asked.

"Yass."

"Good at figures?"

"Yass."

"That will do—I don't want you," said the merchant.

"But," I said, when the boy had gone, "I know that lad to be an honest, industrious boy. Why do you not give him a chance?"

"Because he hasn't learned to say 'Yes sir,' 'No sir.' If he answers as he did when applying for a situation, how will he answer customers after being here a month?"

What could I say to that? He had fallen into a bad habit, young as he was, which turned him away from the first situation he had ever applied for.

Playing Stage-Coach.

"All wanting the same place make a great deal of trouble in this world," said mamma, thoughtfully. "Shall I tell you a little story about it—something I know is true?" "Oh, yes, do!" chimed the children. "It is a very sad story, but I will tell it to you," she went on, "and the next time you are tempted to be selfish stop and think of it. Once, long ago, there were four children playing stage-coach just as you have been doing now, and, just like you, they all wanted the first place. Instead of playing on a log, however, they were in the spreading branches of a willow tree. 'I want to drive,' said Lucy, getting into the driver's seat. 'No, let me drive,' and Harry climbed up beside her. 'Let me sit there.' But Lucy did not more. 'Let me sit there,' repeated Harry, giving her a slight push and crowding his way on the same branch where she sat. 'You must let me drive.' A moment more, a sudden crash, and they were on the ground. The branch had broken. Harry was on his feet instantly, trying to raise his sister, but there was a sharp cry of pain, then she lay very still. Mother and father came running out of the house and gently lifted the little, fainting form, from which the arm hung limp and broken. There was sorrow and crying, but it was too late, nothing could turn aside the weeks of suffering and pain that must be borne before the little girl could take her place among the other children. I think they all learned a lesson of loving unselfishness in those weary days, each trying who could bring the brightness and happiness into dreary hours. I was that little girl, and I learned to appreciate little kindnesses as I had never done before. It was then that I learned something else, too—something I want you all to remember," and mamma looked at the little group, "It is, 'Even Christ pleased not himself.'"

Dear Children:

Toward the evening of a certain day, a little company of worthy men entered a boat, intending to go fishing. The lake in which they were fishing signifies, "A good vision, or a breaking asunder," and sometimes it is called by another name, which means, "The Garden of a Prince." No doubt the fishermen had been successful many times before, but hour after hour passed, and the toilers caught nothing. The darkness of midnight overshadowed the fatigued laborers, and still their efforts were fruitless. At last the dawn came, the light which by its spread, forms the morning. Little did they imagine a dear one, whom they loved was watching their weary toil, and was hid in the folds of the night, waiting for the dawning of the morning that he may manifest himself to them. The watcher stood on the shore, his sweet, welcomed voice with a touching tenderness called to them, and said, Children have you any food? The sleepless toilers answered, No. Then the watcher said, Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and you will find. Then they threw it, and were no longer able to draw it for the multitude of fishes. The one beloved, whose name signifies "The favor of God" said, It is the Lord, precious Redeemer. He had come to give his weary, tired children their breakfast, and minister to their wants, he had been watching them battling with the billows of the deep on the wrong side of the ship during a long night of darkness, and his kind, gentle voice directed them to the right side, where fulness and plenty lingered to be caught. One of the fishermen whose name signifies, "A stone", threw himself into the lake. Perhaps the surprise of seeing the Lord overcame him, being clad only with an under garment. They were not far from land, and when the net was drawn in, the fine, large fish were counted, one hundred and fifty-three in number, and although the net no doubt had been mended often, this time it did not break. Without any preparation a fire was ready with fish thereon, and bread sufficient, and again the blessed Redeemer said to them, Come and breakfast. Still they were not positive who he was, they knew not that he was the herald of a new morning, the first-born of a new creation, the first-born from the dead, and being girded with deathlessness he had come forth to serve them. The little company sat down to enjoy their breakfast, wondering no doubt, he did not make himself known. Pleasantly he handed to them fish and bread, until they were sufficed. After breakfast he said to the fisherman whose name signifies, "A stone," lovest thou me more than these? He said to him, Yea Lord, thou knowest that I affectionately love thee! He says to him, Feed my lambs. Jesus said to him again, lovest thou me? he says to him, Yea Lord, thou knowest that I affectionately love thee. He says to him, Tend my sheep. The third time Jesus said to him, Dost thou affectionately love me? He said, Lord thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus says to him, Feed my sheep. Perhaps while they were eating their breakfast this fisherman in particular was calculating how much money the fish when sold would bring, and his mind no doubt was filled with the idea of following the line of business he was accustomed to. Therefore the Lord who knew his thoughts, unfolded to him in this way his future career, showing each one, He wanted them to be fishers of men, instead of fishermen, so that when they had drawn them in by the gospel net, they would feed them with the true bread of life. This was indeed a good vision. Like all the Lord's faithful children they are toiling in the little bark of life all through this Gentile night of darkness, hopeless often, but waiting for the glorious resurrection morning when their blessed Lord will manifest himself—but in his absence it is sweet to remember he is on the shore watching his struggling ones—longing to feed them in his kingdom of glory, when there will be "a breaking asunder," and the faithful will realize they are on the right side when all things will be ready, and there will be no night there. The desire of my heart is, that we may be among the little company.

Your affectionate Teacher,
E. COFFMAN.

"MASTER, SAY ON!"

Master speak! Thy servant heareth,
Longing for Thy gracious word,
Longing for Thy voice that cheereth;
Master, let it now be heard,
I am listening, Lord, for Thee:
What hast thou to say to me?

Often through my heart is pealing
Many another voice than Thine,
Many an unstilled echo stealing
From the walls of this Thy shrine.
Let Thy longed-for accents fall;
Master, speak! and silence all.

Master, speak! I do not doubt Thee,
Though so tearfully I plead;
Savior, Shepherd! oh, without Thee
Life would be a blank indeed.
But I long for fuller light,
Deeper love, and clearer sight,

Resting on the "faithful saying,"
Trusting what Thy gospel saith,
On Thy written promise staying
All my hope in life and death—
Yet I ask for something more
From Thy love's exhaustless store.

Speak to me by name, O Master,
Let me know it is to me;
Speak, that I may follow faster,
With a step more firm and free.
Where the Shepherd leads the flock,
In the shadows of the Rock.

Master, speak! I kneel before Thee,
Listening, longing, waiting still;
Oh, how long, till I inspire Thee
This petition to fulfill:
Hast Thou not one word for me?
Must my prayer unanswered be?

Master, speak! Though least and lowest,
Let me not unheard depart:
Master, speak! for oh! Thou knowest
All the yearning of my heart:
Knowest all its truest need;
Speak! and make me blest indeed.

Master, speak! and make me ready
When Thy voice is truly heard,
With obedience glad and steady
Still to follow every word.
I am listening, Lord, for Thee:
Master, speak, oh speak to me!

THE PERPETUATION OF APOSTOLIC INSTITUTIONS.

Of necessity, the preaching of the gospel must precede all possible action for the teaching of those who are thus called out from the world. Because of this priority some seem to reckon gospel preaching the supremely important apostolic institution, and that therefore the chief, if not sole, object of the Church's existence is to evangelize the world. We cannot but question this view when we examine the conduct of the apostles, coupled with the abundant and special provision made for the edification of the church.

"When the Lord ascended on high he gave gifts unto men....for the perfecting of the saints unto the work of the ministry, unto the building up of the body of Christ, till we all attain unto the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, that we may be no longer children." (Ephes. iv.)

The teaching of this oracle convinces us of two things:—First, that the service of those several gifts was for one main object—"the perfecting of the saints unto the work of the ministry;" and second, that the purpose of that ministry was for "the building up of the body of Christ." A great work was to be done, and the spiritual gifts speedily or instantaneously prepared men for that work. But this rapid preparation of the men did not necessarily imply that their work was speedily done—it was a life-long labor, and never pretermitted the exercise of patience, forbearance, and prudence. The teaching of the apostle in 1 Cor. xiv. shows how, in a richly endowed church, it was necessary to be cautious in the use of the special capacities, in order to the general good of the whole. First, the service was to be intelligible—"let him that speaketh in a tongue pray that he may interpret;" then it was to be respectful to one another, for "if a revelation be made to another sitting by, let the first keep silence, for ye all can prophesy one by one, that all may be comforted:" and again, all was to be "done decently and in order." However great the variety—though "psalm, teaching, revelation, tongue, and interpretation" crowded upon each other, this order was possible, because "the spirits of the prophets were subject to the prophets," and we may presume the exercise of all other gifts was equally under personal control. The "word of wisdom," "the word of knowledge," and "the discerning of spirits"—appearing in the spiritual category of 1 Cor. xii.—were also gifts to be exercised in the Church; finding their most evident scope among the brethren. And thus we have a very abundant provision made for the teaching of those who had put on Christ.

But teaching is not a sufficiently comprehensive word to use in defining this work in the Church; rather say Edification, that is, building up. The man who essays the building of a house for himself and his goods, has not only to select his material, but to rear it after a definite plan and on correct architectural principles; else, if his house do not tumble about his ears, it may perhaps be a laughing-stock to all gazers. How much more important is the building up of "the house of God." And though the master-builders may lay the foundation over so well, there is still great care and much wisdom needed in the superstructure.

In the Scriptures there are frequent references to the style of building necessary—as to quality, see 1 Cor. iii. 10-15. The "gold, silver and costly stones" contrasting favorably with the "wood, hay and stubble," which the fire of trial is sure to destroy. As to kind, Peter gives it without a figure in his second epistle chap. i., where faith grows into virtue, virtue into knowledge, knowledge into temperance, followed by patience, godliness, brotherly kindness and love. This is the edifying or upbuilding which results in noble, good, and holy character.

Our own words instruct and inform carry with them the same idea of building; and whether in natural or spiritual things we cannot reckon a man to be properly taught or trained unless he is built up within—in-structed; neither can he be perfectly fitted for all service till he adds to his outward and visible aspect the quality of being in-formed—furnished unto every good work. It is easy to see how good a structure the spiritual house must be when it is built up of such elect, precious, living stones as these.

We presume it was in pursuance of such service as this that Paul and Barnabas retraced their steps in Asia Minor—confirming the souls of the disciples and confirming the churches. (Acts xiv. 21-23; xv. 36-41.) A necessary work; for how else could those who were called to holiness and virtue maintain their stand against evil, and grow up unto Christ?

It is true we lack those primitive spiritual endowments so well fitted to qualify for the building up of the Church; but we are not deprived of their utterances. If the gospel of the grace of God, originally ministered by apostles and evangelists, has been written and "set forth in order" that thus we may be taught what was surely believed by the first disciples; we are no less fully supplied with "the words of wisdom and knowledge" and even much of "the discerning of spirits" of the olden times—all faithfully expressed—not in words and sentences of man's wisdom, but in those of the Spirit of God. Therefore to us most precious; the living oracles and divine testimonies by which we are to be built up, and brought to the inheritance of the kingdom of God.

The teaching of those inspired Scriptures is inexhaustible: they furnish instructive lessons and educative provision for ages of disciples and students; possessing a living and growing power like the other works of God, which forbids them ever becoming stale or useless. The Word of God has all shades of power, and every possible degree of fitness. If it is like the thunder blast to split the cedars of Lebanon, it is no less the gentle electric current which thrills in the telephone; a hammer so heavy as to break in pieces the rocks, yet anon so light that its pulsations on the tenderest chords of the human heart can elicit sweet music; a two-edged sword piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, and of both joints and marrow, yet so delicate a probe as to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart. Wonderful treasure! How can we be poor or void of ability when thus furnished?

Whatever we may be short of in our Church needs for building up, it is a great fallacy to look for help to mere professional teachers. We may not have spiritual gifts, neither have they. We may not be able to show any apostolicity in our call to particular service, neither can they. They are to be tested simply by experience of their certain or probable utility. Are the Churches better taught by hirelings? Is it indeed likely that they should be? It is easy to compare the real intelligences of Churches with or without clergy; and always to the disadvantage of the former. And it would not be reasonable to expect otherwise, because for this kind of moral building there is of necessity moral training. Mere faculty of speech, or depth of knowledge, or power of discernment, or even prophetic insight, must be qualified by love of the truth, by faith in God and devotion to personal holiness. No man can know the doctrine who has not done the work of God. (John vii. 17.) This rule was true in apostolic times, and is true to this day. How little are we the better of those scholastic men who affect to be pastors and teachers in the Church of God: hiring out their learning by the month and year, and seeking for preferment to good livings in virtue of their college breeding.

"A peasant may believe as much
As a great clerk, and reach the highest stature"

not only in faith, but in church service. Witness the choice of the all-wise Master, when the foolish and weak and base things of the world were chosen to confound the wise and great and honorable; that no flesh should glory before God.

By the good providence of God we have most excellent translations of all the Holy Scriptures, and in addition, have access to a large amount of illustrative literature and Biblical criticism calculated to awaken a still deeper and more permanent interest in the meaning and application of Scripture. And, again, the occurrences of ordinary life and the relations of society, in or out of the Church, when viewed through the divine medium of faith and holy life, are instructive and suggestive in the highest degree.

Not every one is qualified to be a public teacher or exhorter in the Church; but every one may do something towards edification or correction. The most diffident may find opportunity in private; and indeed, in the family of God, where all are closely knit together, their never fail times and occasions when a quiet word, an earnest appeal, or a friendly remonstrance may be used. Where every one has access to the divine library, all may be wise; and who is there to forbid the loving and hearty service of the humblest in the Church?

The whole drift of the apostolic exhortation and teaching is toward universal, personal interest. They were to speak to one another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs; they were to examine themselves, to confess their faults one to another, and to pray one for another; they were to build up one another in their most holy faith; and was there an urgent call for help, they were all to contribute according as God had severally prospered them. Now, if this spontaneous and general ministry was the rule in early times when they were so beholden to spiritual gifts and spiritual guidance, and before the copious Scriptures of the Apostles were written out, surely we should be no less energetic in the cordial exercise of every power. The counsels of divine wisdom sound down the long ages, and demand attention at this hour. Only when they are faithfully attended to can the Church be built up, and subsist as the pillar and ground of the truth.—G. Dowie, in Messenger.

"THE KING OF THE NORTH."

It is thought by some that because the power that held Thrace, the northern division of Alexander's empire, was denominated "the king of the north" in the wars that followed, that therefore the power that controlls that territory when we enter the time of the end, must of necessity be the king of the north spoken of in Dan. xi. 40-45.

As Turkey is unquestionably that power, those holding the above view have been watching Turkey with intense interest, expecting her to carry out the prophetic programme there outlined.

I consider this view of the matter a peculiarly unfortunate one for two reasons. (1) It blinds the minds of those holding it, to the real significance of the work which the genuine "king of the north" is doing right before their eyes. (2) It involves them in some very serious difficulties, from which I do not see how they can extricate themselves.

Let me notice some of them.

1. If Turkey was the king of the north because she controlled the northern division of the Grecian kingdom, when we entered the time of the end; she was "the king of the south" at the same time, and on precisely the same principle; for she controlled Egypt just as certainly, as she did Syria or Thrace.

But it is evident that the kings of the north and south at the time of the end, are separate and independent kingdoms.

2. Most of those who hold this view, would doubtless agree with me in that the great river Euphrates, as used in Rev., is a symbol of the eastern empire bordering on that river; and that "the waters thereof" which are being dried up under the sixth vial, represent the Turkish political power over that empire. Is it not arraying Scripture against itself, to make one prophesy represent a power as being "dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared;" and another time portray it as going "forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly to make away many," at the same period of time?

3. What countries has Turkey stretched forth her hand upon, since we entered the time of the end? for it must not be forgotten, that this picture of the king of the north is hung in that part of the Prophetic Gallery.

4. When did "Edom, and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon," escape out of the hand of Turkey?

5. Please read Dan. xi. 40-45; and see if the work there outlined, taken as a whole, is not rather vigorous work for "the sick man of Europe" to perform.

But there is a principle involved, which if properly applied, will lead us out of all this difficulty.

North and south are relative terms, consequently there must be some central point to which they relate, and which determines what is north and what is south.

At the time Greece was divided, and for centuries after, the great central point of prophecy was Palestine: consequently Thrace was king of the north, because it was located north of the prophetic standpoint; and Egypt was king of the south because it lay south of the same point. But no one will claim that Palestine is the central points of prophecy when we enter the time of the end.

If we follow down the stream of time from the breaking up of the Roman empire, we shall find a power (symbolized by a horn having eyes and mouth), that will "wear out the saints of the most High," and cause them to "fall by sword, by flame, by captivity and by spoil, many days,"—"even to the time of the end." Just at that point, "the king shall do according to his will, and shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every God."

In other words, this last representative of the "eleventh horn," will utterly refuse to be longer subjected to that religious influence symbolized by the mouth and eyes, which had demonstrated and controlled him for 1260 years. "Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers, nor the desire of woman, nor regard any God, but he shall magnify himself above all."

This wonderful change is brought to view again in Rev. The beast that had carried the woman (both as a ruler and a burden) on his seven heads for forty and two months, suddenly emerges from this "abyss" of subjection as an eighth head, that will neither support the woman, nor be controlled by her.

In the eleventh chapter we are told that when the "two witnesses" have finished their twelve hundred and sixty days of sackcloth testimony "The beast that ascendeth out of the abyss, shall make war on them, and shall overcome them and kill them." We have seen that he comes out a rank atheist, hence a deadly enemy to all religion, true or false.

If we begin this sackcloth period with the famous Justinian edict to unite all men in one faith, on pain of death or banishment, which was issued in 532, (and there is where we must begin it; for the saints were then given into the hands of the eleventh horn power), it will end in 1792, and the beast out of the abyss will be due at that point.

Will any careful reader of the history of the French Revolution, question but what France, the seventh and last head of the beast, that supported the woman, had thrown its rider, and fairly broken away from her control, at some point in that year?

Just at that point we enter the time of the end, and all must admit that the "willful king," alias "the beast out of the abyss," alias Atheistical France, was the central point of prophecy at that time.

"And at the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him."

Spain lies just south of France, and England directly north. Did Spain push at France at the designated time? Let "Alison" answer that question.

"The Spanish government made vigorous efforts to increase their army in Feb. (1793) and the zeal and patriotism of the inhabitants, soon enabled them to put on foot two considerable armies, one of thirty thousand....and the other of twenty-five thousand.

The latter army commenced offensive operations on the 17th of April. On the 1st of May, the French were forced back from their positions, [Spain pushed them] with a loss of fifteen pieces of cannon; and on the 6th of June, they were driven from a second entrenchment and abandoned all their artillery and ammunition."

On the 29th of August, the French attacked "the Spanish posts fortified within the territory of France: but they were repulsed with such loss, that they could not renew the strife again during the remainder of the campaign."

The fortunes of the other army were more varied. A battle was fought on the 22nd of September "which resulted in the total defeat of the French, with a loss of four thousand men and ten pieces of artillery." The 7th of Dec. Ricardos "totally defeated the Republican army, capturing forty-six pieces of cannon and twenty-five hundred prisoners. He took the town of Port Vendre with all its artillery, compelled Collioure to surrender with more than eighty pieces of cannon; while the Marquis Amarillas overthrew the right of the French forces, and so terrified those inexperienced troops by his assault, that whole battalion disbanded themselves, and fled in confusion under the guns of Perpignan."

We shall have to admit that Spain made a vigorous "push at him," and that too at just the right time.

"And the king of the north shall come against him like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships."

I once witnessed what might be termed a baby whirl-wind, that displayed in a small way, the characteristics of its fullgrown brothers.

It would swoop down on a certain locality, circle round and round, and gather up the straws, and sticks, and other light material into its vortex, and then away to another spot, and go through with the same process.

How very like the operations of England in those first years of the war, when with her "many ships" she swept the seas, circling around the islands, and outlying possessions of France and her confederates, and drawing up into the vortex of her mighty power.

The following, selected from items noted down as I read the history of those times, will give some idea of the general character of the work performed by the king of the north, during this whirlwind period.

Tobago taken soon after commencement of hostilities. Martinique surrendered, 1794. The principal forts of St. Domingo wrested from the Republicans. St. Lucien and Guadiloup subdued. The last stronghold of Corsica surrendered, 1794. Cape of Good Hope surrendered in 1795.

The battle of the Nile, (the greatest naval victory on record) fought Aug. 1st, 1798. Napoleon defeated at the Bay of Acre, 1799. Malta permanently annexed to the British dominions September, 1800. They become masters of Surinome, Berbice, St. Eustache, and Demmerara. All the Swedish and Danish West Indies are also reduced. But the list is too long for a newspaper article, and I close the history of this cyclone period with a brief extract from Alison. "The forces by land and sea which she [England,] put forth in this year [1809], were unparalleled. With a fleet of two hundred and forty ships of the line, and nearly eleven hundred vessels of all sizes, she maintained the undisputed command of the waves: blockaded every hostile harbor in Europe; at once chased the Toulon squadron ashore at the mouth of the Rhone, burned the Brest fleet amid the shallows of Basque Roads, drove the Russian navy under the cannon of Cronstadt, and still found thirty-seven ships of the line wherewith to strike a redoubtable blow at the fleets in the Sheldt.....She rooted out the French flag from their last transmarine possessions....carried on the war with unexampled vigor on the continent of Europe; menaced at once Antwerp, Madrid, and Naples, and was prevented only by the dilatory conduct of her general from carrying off in triumph thirty ships of the line from Scheldt." Was it not "like a whirlwind?"

"And he shall enter into the countries and shall overflow and pass over."

Here the figure changes and a mighty overflowing stream best represents the work of the king of the north, in the closing period of this conflict.

There came a time when all Europe awoke to the startling fact, that they were engaged in a life-and-death struggle: and then England, the only power that had never wavered, and at some time made common cause with the usurper, poured out her treasures without stint.

In the language of Alison, "the undisputed dominion of the seas had passed to the British flag; it was on the land that the struggle lay; it was for the deliverance of other nations that England now fought."

The following historical extracts will present this great "overthrow" in its true light. "Upwards of £12,000,000 was in 1813, and 1814, and 1815, applied annually to foreign powers, in consequence of which the whole armies of Europe came to be arrayed in British pay, on the banks of the Rhine: while at the same time the Duke of Wellington with 60,000 men, was maintained on the southern frontier of France." Marcau's Tables.

Napoleon fell in the spring of 1814, and went to the island of Elba; but in the last of Feb. 1815, he returned to France, and re-established his imperial throne. "But, [says Bower] war more terrible than ever before was re-commenced. Britain made the most desperate efforts, paid with her taxes and subsidies all the foreign armies, and drove a million of men on the territory of France." With the battle of Waterloo the struggle ended, and Napoleon surrendered to the British.

When a river overflows its banks, it does not permanently occupy the flooded territory, but sweeps away the accumulated debris, and then returns to its original channel.

So England and her paid allies entered into the subjected countries, overflowed and passed over, and swept away the mushroom government that Napoleon had established in half the countries of Europe: and then retired within legitimate bounds, leaving them to govern themselves in their own way.

"He shall enter also into the glorious land, and many countries shall be overthrown, but these shall escape out of his hand, even Edom, and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon."

I do not know how many countries England has "overthrown" since she entered into the glorious land, and defeated Napoleon at the bay of Acre, in 1799. Suffice it to say that to-day, she controls 10,000,000 square miles of the earth's surface, and 315,000,000 of its inhabitants.

"He shall stretch forth his hand also upon the countries, and the land of Egypt shall not escape. But he shall have power over the treasures of gold and of silver, and over all the precious things of Egypt: and the Libyans and the Ethiopians shall be at his steps."

That England has this power over Egypt at the present time, goes without the saying. But how about the Lybians and the Ethiopians? Ancient Lybia joined Egypt on the west, and Ethopia joined it on the south. If the expression "at his steps," conveys the same thought as "at his feet," in the following and similar passages, "And Barack went up with ten thousand men at his feet;" then the final outcome of the war in the Soudan is settled; whatever may be the present prospect. "The Lybians and the Ethiopians" will be at the feet, or under the military control of England.

But tidings out of the East, and out of the North, shall trouble him: therefore he shall go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly to make away many.

Do we know where we are in prophecy? Are we [illegible] from the east and north, and [illegible] be likely to [illegible] Rather, is not the very [illegible] with them? Even now she is [illegible] pendulous preparations to "go forth with great fury." The next stop in the programme is, "And he shall plant the tabernacle of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain." Then comes the standing up of Michael, the time of trouble, the deliverance of Daniel's people, and the resurrection of the just.

For myself, I regard the clause "yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him." As parenthetical, thrown in as a reminder that notwithstanding the brilliant career here outlined, it is the unalterable decree, that Rome in her last representatives "shall be broken without hand."

Never was there a time when watching was more imperatively demanded; and never was intelligent watching, crowned with such rich results.

"Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments."

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXIV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 22, 1885. NO. 28.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR Payable in advance. Three and six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal, bodily resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersions pre-requisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as a preparation for translation.

To the Church of God in Christ Jesus.—Greeting in his Name.

Beloved: think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you; as though some strange thing happened unto you. 1 Pet. iv. 12.

As we look abroad upon the world we see that iniquity is abounding in all the multitudinous forms that can be devised by the wicked heart and inventive brain. And every form of iniquity foretold as preceding the coming of the Just One seems to be fully ripe for that destruction that hasteth greatly, and the weary soul cries out, in its fullness of expectancy, "How long, O Lord." When from the soul-distressing aspect presented by the busy world we turn to the Church—to those who profess to have come out of Babylon and to have put on the name of Christ; what do we behold? Alas, alas! do we not see that that which we had esteemed as the "most fine gold" is becoming mixed with dross, if indeed, the pure metal be not altogether engulfed, swallowed up by the dross. The solemn truth forces itself upon our senses; that the love of many is waxing cold and they are becoming weary in well doing. The thought comes, Why is it thus? What cause or causes lead to this result? Perhaps a few suggestions may not be amiss, seeing that we are told to exhort one another to love and to good works....and so much more as we see the day approaching....Let us prove our own selves. 2 Cor. xiii. 5. We are commanded so to do. We are also to "prove all things, hold fast that which is good." To prove ourselves is to test the fruits of our lives by the standard set forth in the Word. If we find [illegible] the fruits of the Spirit we may actively hope to reap life everlasting. But if we find that our lives, as they daily unfold to the eyes of the world around us, bring forth but the fruits of the flesh,—which leads to death, surely it is high time that we awake out of sleep, least coming suddenly he find us sleeping. In Gal. v. 18-24, we see the fruits of the flesh and the Spirit placed in contrast. Again we read in 1 John ii. 15-16. Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.

17. And the world (or age) passeth away; and the lust (or the pleasures and glories) thereof.—but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever. Our hearts cannot be bound up in the enjoyment of riches, or in their eager pursuit, and yet be in a fit state to receive our absent Lord who has gone to a far country, to return again at the time appointed of the Father. We cannot mingle in the busy world as those do who seek only the treasures of earth, neither is it necessary that we retire from the world of active, honest industry in whatever legitimate channel we are qualified either by nature or education to work. We are commanded to labor—working with our own hands—that we may have need of nothing, and that we may give to him that needeth. But doing this does not give us liberty to become all engrossed with the things of earth to the almost entire exclusion of the seeking for the more enduring riches. It does not give us liberty to use all our time and talents for the present life—to have time only to read the current literature, or rather news, of the day and not time to study the chart of life which alone can guide us over the rough and stormy sea of life. It does not give us liberty to converse socially by the hour with friends and acquaintences and not a moment to ask them of their hope, or seek to open to them the treasure house of God's word. Even if we have but the one talent, we are required to double that. If we have but one we are not expected to double ten—neither are we justified in folding that away in a napkin till the Master comes.

And what of the sons and daughters? The little ones and those of riper years? Must they not claim our most earnest and faithful attention, in seeking to guide their steps into the way of truth? To them it is of vastly more importance to be instructed in the way to eternal life, than to be made liberal partakers of perishable riches. If every home, in the Household of Faith, were made a school of instruction in th things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, we would soon see the fruit of such instruction in more numerous additions from the youth of our land.

Many, very many, who profess to know the truth, are the poor of this world, and much need to be rich in faith, that abiding faith that lets us up—above and beyond all that is death-doomed and corruptible, to the eternal weight of glory that the coming ages will unfold. Those who are so placed, have but little time to read, and perhaps no time or means to hold communion with the Household of Faith in any way. But there is one source from which they can always gather strength. This way is open to all, and is alike needful to all. It is secret prayer. We all have time to wait upon God in prayer, and unless we do, we cannot expect his sustaining grace to enable us to do his will. When our blessed Master was here, he failed not to hold communion with his Father. Are we less needy than he? Are we better able to stand alone? Let us all remember—he that asketh, receiveth, and to him that knocketh, the door shall be opened. Is not one cause of this lukewarm state into which the church has fallen, found in the want of faithfully discharging life's duties? If so, let us awake and put on the whole armor, that we may be able to withstand the wiles of the enemy. Another cause would seem the pronouncing of the human heart to build up theories not revealed [illegible] try to determine which is not [illegible] are in our midst, [illegible] us—a class of thinkers who with seemingly the highest and best of motives, misapprehend the plainest teachi[illegible] of the word, and in so doing pervert its teachings, and thereby lead the unwary into error. I refer to those who hold to the theory that every individual of the human race was represented in the first Adam, and so likewise shall they all be represented in the second Adam, and thus shall all, all of earth's inhabitants be finally saved.

That such a doctrine is not taught in the Divine record, every intelligent Bible student must be aware, and those who adhere to it are found to go outside of Revelation and seek to restrain their theory by a system of philosophy or reasoning falsely so-called. Before the Master ascended upon high he gave commission to his disciples: Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. He that disbelieveth shall be condemned. Mark xvi. 16. Within the Sacred Record there is no time referred to when that condemnation shall be removed and the once condemned one again set at liberty.

In 1 Tim. ii. 6. Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time. This seems to be one of their strongholds, but surely it is very plain from this that the "due time" has no reference whatever to anything but the Christ, who was prophecied of as the babe to appear in Bethlehem which he did, and again to appear to claim the rightful heirship to the throne and kingdom. When this time is due, he will appear. D. V. I will continue this subject.

Editor Restitution:

Please to find enclosed two dollars, for THE RESTITUTION. Am sorry that I could not remit before. We think we cannot do without it, and are willing to deny ourselves some of the necessaries of life to obtain it. We begin to lift up our heads believing that our redemption truly draweth nigh. Soon our dear Lord will come and right the wrongs of this groaning age. Even so come Lord Jesus, and come quickly, is our daily prayer. May God see fit to prolong your life and usefulness until his dear Son shall appear and give you a crown of life, is the prayer of your waiting sister in Christ.

KING JAMES' BIBLE.

Although the Revised Bible has been published so short a time, we probably know much more of its revisers and their method of working than we do of those faithful men of the seventeenth century, who performed their laborious task so well that for two hundred years and more their version has had no rival. So, while the Revision is the topic of the day, it may not be unfitting to devote a little time to King James' translators and their labor of love.

It has happened more than once in English history that the reigns of the weakest kings have been prolonctive of the greatest good to the people. As the Magna Charter was wrested from the weak and wicked John, the so-called King James' Bible appeared during the sway of the pedantic, vacillating and superstitious first ruler of the House of Stuart. When the death of Queen Elizabeth made the petty Scotch prince King of England in the spring of 1603, he was by no means overpowered by the great responsibility, but, true to his pleasure-loving nature, spent the summer and autumn in the excitements of the chase. When the plague appeared in London and thousands were dying in the city, the terrified king determined to make a royal progress, and in the magnificent entertainments given him by Oliver Cromwell, the Protector's uncle, and other wealthy country lords and gentlemen, forgot the distress of pest-stricken London. But some rumor of the general discontent of the day must have reached the king, for he called a conference at Hampton Court "for the hearing and for the determining things pretended to be amiss in the Church."

So in January of the following year about twenty persons, Puritans as well as bishops and other church ecclesiastics, met as appointed, and after various business heard with no great favor the proposal of Dr. John Reynolds, President of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, that the Bible should be again translated. Indeed, Bancroft, Bishop of London, went so far as to object that "if every man's humor might be followed, there would be no end of translating." But King James, in spite of many follies, had a certain shrewdness, which taught him he could no nothing more for the glory of his name than to adopt and direct this plan proposed by the Puritans.

Accordingly forty-seven scholars were called together and divided into six gremps, two of which worked in Winchester and the other four in Oxford and Cambridge respectively. Bedwell and Reynolds, the suggestor of the translation, were especially remarkable for their learning, but this is not true of all these chosen. Dr. Reynolds, according to Bishop Hall, was "near to a miracle" for his memory and reading. During his sickness even—he died before the work was done—his coadjutors used to meet at his lodgings once a week to compare and perfect their notes.

The Bible ordinarily used in the churches, and called the Bishop's Bible, was followed by the revisers, and King James desired that it should be changed as little as possible, the divisions of the chapters, ecclesiastical words and old interpretations being retained as far as might be. Every man of each company translated by himself the portion assigned, and then compared it with the others; after a book was finished it was sent to the other groups for criticism. The first translation was finished in about four years; afterward twelve were chosen from the forty-seven translators and they made the second revision in London, meeting in Stationer's Hall to compare notes. Then the Bishop of Winchester and Dr. Smith, afterward Bishop of Gloucester, revised the whole and prefixed arguments, and the Bishop of London gave the final revision. The whole work was accomplished in about seven years, appearing in 1611.

One of the strong points of King James' Bible was its freedom from marginal notes. The Geneva Bible was loaded down with them, and its usefulness was thus greatly impaired. Indeed a note on Exodus i. 19, allowing disobedience to kings, so excited James that he forbade every kind of comment in the new version. With a liberality unusual for the time, Puritans were allowed to join in the work of revision, and only Papists were excluded; indeed, criticism and suggestions were urged upon all. The four revisions also show a laudable desire for perfection, but some directions of the king show that he wished accuracy secondary to expediency, and that new solidity might also be added to the church. He seems to have had this in mind when he appointed Bancroft, Bishop of London, final reviser, for the bishop was a man of no scholarship, and so unscrupulous that in the previous reign he had prevented a translation of the Bible, fearing the too great honesty of the translator, who was the foremost Biblical scholar of his time. But the honesty and learning of the great body of translators far outweighed the influence of the bishop, who is said to have changed only fourteen places in all. So great was the haste of the king that all work, even lectures in the universities, had to give way to this important undertaking, and it happened that some passages were mistranslated which had been correct in former versions.

The work seems to have been entirely a labor of love on the part of the translators. Most of them were well off in this world's goods, and it was needful, for until the delegation of twelve went to London no remuneration had been given them. They, says John Boyse, [illegible] shillings a week [illegible] adds confidently [illegible] coming down with the Lord to [illegible] Boyse, while [illegible] forced to eat [illegible] college table, that is, [illegible] king did indeed write to the Bishop of London that whenever a prebend or parish became vacant it should be given to one of the translators. But far from paying these faithful workers the king tried to obtain money from them, whether for his use or for the poor of their own number the authorities do not agree.

The right of printing the Bible was inherited by William Barker, whose father had paid £3,500 for the privilege; for more than seventy years the right remained in the family, and from 1577 to 1709, about a hundred and seventy years, not a copy of the Bible was sold in which the family did not have an interest. So King James neither paid for the Bible called by his name, nor suggested it: he had only signified his approbation. But when the Bible was published the title-page bore the following inscription: "Newly translated out of the original tongues, and with the former translations diligently compared and revised by his Majesty's special commandments." Then follows "appointed to be read in the churches," which was merely a form following in the footsteps of former versions, since the Bible was not brought before Parliament or a convocation, or even before the Privy Council, so far as is known. The work of King James' translators was not as cordially received as might have been expected. Some critics, Selden among others, complained that it was rather "a translation into English words than English phrase." It seems impossible to find any authority for using King James' Version beyond its own excellence, except the Hampton Court Conference, and in point of law that was not authoritative. The other translations gradually dropped off. During the long Parliament another revision was proposed, but the sudden dissolution of that body closed the debate for the time. Again in 1657 King James' Version was questioned, but the discussion was settled by declaring it "the best of any translation in the world." And such it has remained until the appearance of the New Version of 1885. Time must decide which of the two most recent revisions will outlive the other. Certainly our hearty gratitude is due to King James' translators, who, dictated by the edicts of an unreasonable king, hurried beyond their ability, unpaid, and almost unthanked, were yet able to produce a version which has proved so helpful, so reliable and so lasting.—A. M. Turner in N. Y. Observer.

THE MILLENNIAL AND HEAVENLY JERUSALEM.

We are all merely learners, waiting for and seeking for teaching on these solemn subjects. Now, in speaking on the "heavenly Jerusalem," I would observe the divisions into chapters are frequently the reverse of helpful. You find in chapter xxi. 1-8 there is a description of Millennial Jerusalem: the chapter then going on to the heavenly Jerusalem.

Now there are two cities in the Bible symbolic of principle—Babylon and Jerusalem. Of the first Satan is the head, and its pride, lust, and Godlessness are ever in opposition to the Jerusalem of which Christ is head. These two cities or systems are, I believe, headed up in two literal cities at the end. In those we see the God side and Satanic side; just as we have the mystery of godliness and the mystery of iniquity running through the dispensation.

The two mysteries culminate in the manifestation of the two persons, the Lord from heaven and the Antichrist.

Now, with regard to the heavenly Jerusalem, we find in Isa. lx. 1-14 a description, every letter of which shall be literally fulfilled. Then Jerusalem is depicted as a woman in Isa. lxii., under the figure of the captive daughter of Zion. So in Rev. xxi. 2, the Church is represented both as a woman, the Lamb's Bride, and as a city, the New Jerusalem.

Now, the Bride, or city, is caught up to meet the Lord in the air, as in Thess. iv., and it is seen in Rev. [illegible] coming down with the Lord to [illegible] adds confidently [illegible] on the earth with [illegible] the King of Zion, the [illegible] of the Jews, for he has never vacated the throne of Israel.

But with regard to the city, the word is used frequently as in Hebrews xi. 10, 16; xiii. 14, and elsewhere. Well, in Rev. xxi. 10 the apostle is carried away to a great and high mountain, and shown the City of God. First look at the Millennial Jerusalem, and afterwards at the Jerusalem of the new heaven and earth—the eternal state—these are very distinct. The millennial city is over the earth, not on it. The literal earthly city becomes a blessing to all the earth, because she is under the supervision of the heavenly city over the earth. To behold this city, John is taken up to a great and high mountain. Remember the Millennial period is an imperfect one—that many glorious passages will not be fully and finally fulfilled until the eternal state come, after the thousand years are over. The heavenly city after the millennial age is, I believe, the city of the thousand years coming down to the earth. This city is fifteen hundred miles in the air, fifteen hundred broad, and fifteen hundred miles long. Oh, what a city! meeting our Lord's words, "In my Father's house are many mansions." The city has foundations, walls, gates, streets, a river, trees, fruit, a throne, and all the accompaniments of a great city. Its walls are jasper, its inhabitants jasper, all pure as crystal.

That city is the light of the world: it has no temple, yet it is the temple of the earth: it is the temple with regard to the Jerusalem of the earth. With regard to this city we have a long list of negations; no curse, no death, no night, etc.: These things have passed away. Then the golden reed, the measuring signifying perfect consecration to God. The names of the twelve tribes are on it to show its connection with the tribes of Israel on earth. Then there are three gates open on every side, looking every way, that is, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come." Multitudes will be saved during the millennium. We are told it has twelve foundations—the twelve apostles of the Lamb—there is the strength of the city, the doctrines and truths of the apostles shall be the foundations of the city most precious. The gates and walls tell of security, the angels are at the gates to guard it on every side. The walls are jasper, clear as light, for the doctrines are clear and pure, while they give lasting strength to the city. The throne of God and the Lamb are there, for every thing that proceeds from Divine grace and love flows through that city under the figure of a river—the river of life. By that river there are trees: these bear a great variety of fruit, while the leaves are for the healing of the nations, showing there is still disease in the millennium. Notice everything seems to return to Genesis i. and ii. There is, again, the tree of life. But observe the Paradise excels the first; we shall see his face. The people of that city shall be known everywhere as the Sons of God. The name on the forehead is Jesus, the published name of the Lamb of God, and "his servants shall serve him."

Now the city of the new heaven and the new earth is the city of the millennium coming down on to the earth. In that city there is no more death—in the millennium there is death. What becomes of the saved during the millennium? They form part of the Church of saved Israel. These sayings are faithful and true; that is repeated three times; we are so slow to believe what God has prepared for us.—G. Whitfield in Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman.

The "Faith Cure" Doctrine.

The fresh outbreak of the doctrine which poor Edward Irving latterly embraced, and which made him believe that he would live when he was obviously about to die, makes very seasonable the volume entitled "The Ministry of Healing; or, Miracles of Cure in All Ages," by A. J. Gordon, D. D., Boston (London: Hodder and Stoughton). The author [illegible] well known as a scholarly [illegible] Baptist literature, as [illegible] born as being quite [illegible] his work is in [illegible] and may be regretted with having given to the subject of "faith healing" that amount of attention such as it has received from few previous writers equally well equipped as to scholarship and piety. Having stated the question and its bearings, he proceeds to cite the testimony of Scripture and also that of reason, of the Church, of theologians, of the adversary, of experience, and of the healed. The verdict at which he arrives is, that men ought to pray for the healing of the body. The hesitancy to do so, in Dr. Gordon's view, arises from the wide acceptance of what he believes to be a false theory in regard to the relation of the human body to redemption of Christ. It is taken for granted, he says, that this house of clay was never intended to be repaired or beautified by the renewing Spirit. But this "caged-eagle theory," Dr. Gordon unhesitatingly condemns; it may be very good poetry, he says, but it is very bad divinity. He complains that "the heresy of death-worship has supplanted the doctrine of the resurrection." When death gets established in the high esteem of Christians, it is easy to see how sickness, his prime minister, should come to be held in great regard also. Dr. Gordon testifies that he knows a large number who have been healed in answer to prayer, and he also vouches for their marked consecration and the extraordinary spiritual anointing which almost invariably attend them. He does not ask that the highest place in Christian doctrine should be given to faith in supernatural healing. He admits that grace is vastly more important than miracles, yet miracles, he holds, have their place as shadows of greater things. Dr. Gordon, it will be perceived, takes a middle course; and he is careful to put his readers on their guard against the danger of falling into heresy on the question. He exhorts them not to proclaim the doctrine of divine healing in an unbalanced and reckless manner, and not to push the element of human choice too strongly. At the same time, he think the teachers "misguided" who go to the other extreme—who bear so hard upon the Divine sovereignty as practically to deny man's freedom to ask or expect miraculous healing. Dr. Gordon does not hesitate indeed to describe those who act in this way as people who will probably help to swell the prevalent scepticism of the age. The work is written in a bright and telling style, with moderation of tempor and tone, and is evidently the production of a devout and earnest man, who has sought long and anxiously to ascertain the truth. The value of his book is enhanced by its numerous citations from divines of all ages.—N. Y. Daily Mail.

Dictionaries and grammars of the chief languages spoken along the Congo River are preparing and printing in England. Seven natives of the large districts of Congo who were taken to England four years ago have revised the vocabularies supplied by missionaries and assisted in preparing a grammar. A dictionary of the Congo language, containing 350 pages, was recently printed, and last month the Baptist Missionary Society published a dictionary of the Bateke language, which is spoken at Stanley Pool. The missionary stations now extend from the mouth of the river to Stanley Falls, 1,400 miles inland. Mission schools are supported at all the stations, and as a rule the missionaries have been kindly received by the natives.

"AS IT WAS" SODOM.

A revelation of abominations has been made by the Pall Mall Gazette, in recent issues of that journal, that out-Sodoms Sodom. It is not fitting for our paper that we should write out either the generals or the particulars of such diabolical business. Our allusion to anything of this kind is to show that we are fallen upon the evil times of the last days. See Luke xvii. 26-30. At this time we will do nothing more than append an extract from the Christian Herald, although we might fill a RESTITUTION with sickening details from other journals.

"English people were shocked last week by a series of disgusting revelations made by the Pall Mall Gazette, a high-class evening newspaper of conspicuous ability. It charged the aristocracy and moneyed classes of London with being guilty of crimes of the most filthy and loathsome character. Without mentioning names, it gave details of cases investigated by its own corps of editors and reporters, who have spent a month in visiting the refuges where fallen girls are received, and agencies in various parts of the city at which an abominable traffic is openly carried on. The evidence collected, the journal states, implicates princes, peers, bishops, cabinet ministers, members of Parliament, judges, barristers, distinguished army officers, and respected merchants. The facts disclosed show that the vices which brought the vengeance of God on the ancient cities of the plain, and which have made the name of Babylon a by-word in history, flourish in the British metropolis, and the guilty parties are men of the highest social position and influence. Mr. Spurgeon's solemn warning, uttered in his sermon published in these columns two weeks ago, indicated that he was aware that moral impurity was rampant, but probably he had no idea of the extent of it. He has written to the Pall Mall Gazette to express his approval of the course it has taken in publishing the facts. Public opinion is, however, divided as to the wisdom of printing in a paper read by persons of both sexes and all ages all the filthy details. It is a significant fact that no one seems to doubt the truth of the revelation. The editor of the journal seems to have expected that his assertions would be questioned, and therefore offered to disclose the names of the guilty parties, with the evidence against them, to a committee composed of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Cardinal Manning, and four representative laymen, who should be pledged to secrecy, but should inform the public whether the charges should be substantiated to their satisfaction. The Pall Mall Gazette has broken the law against obscene literature in publishing the articles, but it seems under no apprehension of prosecution, and it warns the government that if proceedings are commenced against it, it will in self-defence subpœna as witnesses the Prince of Wales and half of both Houses of Parliament. The exposure, it may be hoped, will lead to the enactment of laws for the prevention of the crimes mentioned, which is the object the Pall Mall Gazette has in view. We may hope, too, that it will lead to greater vigilance in this country, where, especially in New York, Chicago, and Cincinati, the state of society is even worse than in London."

MADRID, July 14.—There were reported throughout Spain, yesterday, 1,092 new cases of cholera and 473 deaths from the disease. The returns from Valencia, however, are complete. ### The Operations of the Holy Spirit, and Their Effects in the Soul of man.

When a man has become dead in sin, or when his spiritual powers have become dormant, none can give him new life but the Holy Spirit of God. The new or divine life, wrought through the laver of regeneration, and through renewing of the Holy Spirit, is one of the distinguishing blessings procured by the sacrifice of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. And whatever means may be used, the Holy Spirit must ever be regarded as the great efficient cause of this new creation, transformation, and sanctification. The Holy Spirit enlightens, teaches, draws, renews, strengthens, guides, and comforts. This is his office.

A measure of light is given by the Holy Spirit to every man. This light operates through the reason, conscience, understanding and conscience. In this way men have convictions of sins, of righteousness and of judgment. The evil of transgression is depicted, and the conscience is smitten with guilt; the righteousness of Christ, and not righteousness, or holiness, which might become theirs by faith in Christ, are portrayed; and their judgment of things, which is erroneous, and God's judgment, or condemnation, and the final judgment or condemnation, for sin and unbelief, are also set before them. And these workings of the Spirit are more or less powerful as men are favored more or less with education and good training. Hence persons born of very ignorant parents, and whose training is in the midst of ignorance and crime, have less of the Spirit's operations than others, because there is little development of their natural faculties, and these operations are thereby hindered. Little light from the Spirit comes to them through their reason and judgment and conscience, because these faculties have been stunted in their development.

And the Spirit was given in this sense—in the sense of giving light and conviction,—because He was given in a fuller measure, and as an abiding presence, to believers at the Pentecost. Was not scarcely conscious of men having moral and spiritual natures who had some measure of light from the Holy Spirit.

When a man is enlightened by the Spirit, he sees a meaning in life which he never saw before; he sees the true purpose and end of his existence. He no longer gropes in darkness, or treads the path of life in uncertainty, but walks with a firm step as on solid rock in ways of pleasantness, with his eye fixed on development, on perfection, on usefulness, on the appearing of Jesus, on the resurrection, on the crown of life.

Some may be curious enough to inquire how the Holy Spirit operates on the soul of man, or how the divine mind influences the human mind. This is a question we cannot fully answer; nor does our inability to answer the question fully, cast any doubt upon the great fact. We know that the Spirit always operates through the truth. The truth is brought before the mind in a variety of ways, by various means and circumstances, and by different agents; and when the truth is thus presented, the Spirit, through that truth operates, sometimes convincing of sin, sometimes teaching and guiding, and sometimes strengthening and comforting. But in what particular way impressions are made by the divine mind on the human mind, through the truth, we know not. We know the fact, and that is enough for all practical purposes. But to illustrate this: we all know that we are influenced by one another. The husband is influenced by his wife; the wife by her husband. Children are influenced by their parents. Readers are influenced by authors. Congregations are influenced by preachers and lecturers; and we all know something of the influence a writer or a preacher, who has a great mind, has upon his readers or hearers. And this influence of one human mind on another, is always through the relation of some fact or facts, or the proclamation of some principle, or doctrine, whether true or false. But who doubts the influence of mind on mind, because we cannot fully explain how the operation takes place. Let us not then doubt that our minds are influenced by the omniscient and eternal mind. And whenever the Spirit influences your mind, and convinces you of your need of any particular blessing, it is that you may at once become the happy recipient of it.

But in whom may Holy Spirit be said to have taken up his abode? In whom does he dwell continually? Certainly not in him in whom sin dwells; in whom the passions and natural desires are predominant; in whom self-love is supreme; but in him whose heart is purified, whose conscience is purged, whose affections are refined, and whose love of God, and truth, and goodness is supreme. The Holy Spirit cannot abide with anything that is not in harmony with the divine will. We do not say that believers who are lacking entire sanctification have not the Spirit, that they have the Spirit, and sometimes they have been as a Comforter, but oftener the Spirit is with them revealing to them their corruptions, their failings, their unbelief, their selfishness, their mixed motives and the Spirit shedding light on their discordant and partially sanctified state, causes a conflict in the mind. Where is the Christian that has not, again and again, experienced that conflict? But in the soul of the wholly sanctified believer, the operations of the Spirit cause no conflict. The presence and light of the Spirit produce no discord, because all within is clean. There is nothing there contrary to the will of the Spirit, and the Spirit, therefore, has nothing to oppose the consequence is there is no civil war; there is no peace; there is holy joy. That soul is filled with the Spirit, and he is ever present as a Guide and Comforter. Walk then in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost.

And as long as the Spirit is our Guide, we shall not get out of the right path. To others, and at times even to ourselves, we may not seem to be in the right way, but while in full confidence we give ourselves up to divine guidance, no fear of being led astray need trouble our minds. The apostle teaches that if we are led by the Spirit of God, we are sons of God; we have become partakers of his nature and stand in the closest and most blessed relation to him. And when a believer is filled with the Spirit, he will make Christ, and the truth, and holiness, and the kingdom prominent, and not himself. He himself will be kept meek and lowly in heart.—By Silas Hean, in World's Crisis.

An Unlocked-for Honor.

Fame does not come to all. Some are born great, and some have greatness thrust upon them. It has never been our ambition to seek for the honors of this world, nor our fortune to receive them. No college has ever threatened us with its honorary degrees; nor have we been called to any dignity or political office. Nevertheless, all things come to those who wait patiently, and this is how some of them came to me.

Sunday, May 17th, was an "off day" with us. That is, we had no engagement or appointment, and so were ready for whatever work the providence of God might lay in our way. Leaving home in the morning we started for Charleston State Prison, where we were very kindly received by the warden, and invited by the chaplain to address the prisoners, of whom nearly four hundred and fifty were present. We preached to them the gospel of Christ. We pointed out the joyous condition of the servants of the Lord; and quoting from the Sunday-school lesson of the day, we called attention to the fact stated by the chaplain, that the epistle to the Philippians, written by a prisoner chained to a Roman soldier, seems overflowing with gladness, the words joy, rejoicing, etc., occurring fifteen times in the course of the epistle. And we endeavored to point out to the restless, uneasy, troubled souls, who were chafing at the restraint imposed upon them, that their only wise course was to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and learn to rejoice in him, and then they would have peace and quietness of soul wherever they were. Paul could not have been a happy man when he was breathing out threatenings and slaughter, but when the Lord called him by his grace to know the joy of his salvation, at once his life was lighted up with peace and gladness, and he could rejoice in the midst of affliction, persecution, bonds, and imprisonment. The congregation listened with attention, as they have whenever, during the past fifteen years, we have been permitted to speak to them.

After the conclusion of the services we made our way to Boston, where we found a few disciples gathered around the table of the Lord, and were privileged to remember the death of him who bore our sins in his own body on the tree. At some little informal gatherings which we had held during the few preceding days, plans had been proposed for doing some gospel work in Boston during the summer. We at last suggested that "the way to a thing is to do it!" In accordance with this idea two o'clock found us with our little band of workers, equipped with Bibles, hymn books, and tracts, on Boston Common, ready to do with our might what our hands found to do. Bro. W. F. Davis, who had been preaching upon the Common in past years, opened the services, after singing and prayer delivered an address, while we reconnoitered a little on the other side of the slope, where the Salvation Army were drawn up in battle array, and were firing their shot into the ranks of the enemy. We presently returned to assist Bro. Davis in the services, and after singing spoke to the people the word of everlasting life, and invited them to Christ the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world. After finishing our discourse and consolidation exercises, the secretary of the Boston Y. M. C. A. came with his workers accompanied by Dr. A. J. Gordon, of the Clarendon St. Baptist church, who after suitable exercises preached a good gospel sermon. We remained a while and then, being weary, found way to another meeting of a company of disciples, and united with them in solemn worship of God and communion of saints, thus making four meetings at which we were present and took some part during the day.

The next Wednesday morning as we were reading from the twentieth chapter of Acts an account of Paul's farewell to the Ephesians, the door-bell was rung, and presently a pleasant looking policeman entered the room, bearing a warrant which read as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Suffolk ss. to wit;

To sheriff of the county of Suffolk, his deputies, to any officer of the district police of the commonwealth, and to the constables and police officers of the city of Boston, GREETING:

We command you and each of you upon sight hereof to take and bring before our Municipal Court of the city of Boston, holden at the city of Boston for the transaction of criminal business within the county of Suffolk, the body of Horace L. Hastings of the city of Boston, if he be found within your precincts, to answer to the commonwealth on complaint of George Malcolm, of the city of Boston, this day made on oath before the said court, for unlawfully delivering an address on Boston Common, at the city of Boston and within the judicial district of the said court against the by-law of the said city and commonwealth, and form of the statute in such cases made and provided. Hereof fail not at your peril.

Witness: William B. Parmenter, [illegible] at Boston aforesaid this 19th [illegible] in the year of our Lord [illegible]

[illegible] assistant clerk.

[illegible] arrant, the [illegible] appear before the Court of [illegible] Thursday at 9.30 A. M., there to answer for the crime of preaching the gospel on the Common. After a pleasant conversation on the subject, he departed to summon the other parties concerned, and we finished our chapter, in which we found such words as these: "But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God."

As we believed we had done nothing whatever against the laws of God or man, and that this city by-law was in itself illegal and of no force whatever, we went willingly to court on the following day. An account of the proceedings on this "Proud Day for Boston," will be found in another portion of this paper.—H. L. Hastings, in Christian Safeguard.

Jesus—"The Resurrection and the Life."

Jesus saith unto her, Martha, I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die. Believest thou this? She saith unto him, Yea, Lord: I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, who should come into the world. John xi. 25-27.

The above and many other passages which might be cited, if space would permit, show conclusively that Christ is the great center of prophecy—the life giver. Leaving out this central idea, there could be no such thing as a future life. The present life we receive by virtue of our relation to our federal head, the first Adam, who forfeited his life by transgression, and as per consequence, he, as the representative head of the race, must entail death upon his numerous posterity. It is an axiom, that "like, begets like," consequently, Adam become mortal, by partaking of the fruit of the interdicted tree, and thereby incurred the penalty—death, which the Scriptures define, as a return to the dust from which he was taken.

"And all the days that Adam lived, were nine hundred and thirty years and he died," not his body only according to the idea of modern spiritualists, and others who follow in their wake: the former of course do not claim to be great Bible sticklers, while many of the latter would be greatly offended if accused of not paying due deference to the Bible teaching. This latter class as well as the former assume the dual nature of man, and of course this assumption involves them in a dilemma and to take either horn, brings them into, (to use no harsher term) a very awkward predicament to say the least, for to say that the body only dies, would be virtually saying that the soul is immortal, i. e., deathless or exempt from death, as the Bible and all lexicographers thus define the term, and this would bring them into a direct collision with many which I will now cite—Behold all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine; the soul that sinneth it shall die. Ezek. xviii. 4.

Adam sinned, and therefore he incurred the penalty which was death. If our good friends still insist on the dual or double entity then they are thereby estopped from saying that the soul is exempt, for this is particularly designated as the entity that dies, while nothing is said relative to the body, which shows at once, that an unnatural and forced construction is put on it, to say nothing of the plain contradiction in the texts thus cited. Christ poured out his soul unto death. He took the place of the transgressor, in order to redeem him from death—paying the ransom price.

The spiritualists, (without in the least endorsing their theory or dogma) are by far the most consistent of the two. Their motto or shibboleth is,—"There is no death."—What man call death, is but the mortal struggle for immortality. See the inscriptions on their tomb-stones.

Taking the other horn of the dilemma, the soul probabili would involve on our opponents to show that the body as an entity in the sinner, i. e., without the attribute of breath—the breath of life, which was breathed into Adam's nostrils, whereby he became a living soul in contradistinction to a dead soul, or more properly a soul without life—a negative, can die. Man is called in the Scriptures a soul, whether alive or dead, for proof, see Moses in xix. chapter of Numbers, and 11-16, verses.

No doctrine of the Bible is of easier solution, than those we have just been considering, if we do not wish to be "wise above what is written." Paul exhorted Timothy to rightly divide, (classify) the word, and give to each one "his portion of meat in due season. Following out this line of thought we will classify the word soul, which admits of three, and only three core situations; first, person is a synonyme, "eight souls saved in the ark"—eight persons. This is probably more than forty-nine-fiftieths of its occurrences. In a few instances, life is the proper synonym, as in the case of the death of Rachel. See Gen. xxxv. 17-19.

In a few instances the word "mind," or "heart," are put as synonyms. No warrant can be drawn from the Bible to sustain the idea that an immortal soul, must be deathless, as that Adam did not, nor could not pay the threatened penalty on such an hypothesis.

This dogma of the soul's inherent immortality entirely eclipses the glorious doctrine of the resurrection. Paul in his elaborate essay on the resurrection, declares that the future life is wholly dependent on the resurrection.

If the dead rise not....then they also that have fallen asleep in Christ are perished. See 1 Cor. xv. especially from the 12 to the 24 verses inclusive. But we would candidly ask our friends what use there could possibly be in a resurrection on the hypothesis of the survival on the soul? or if man is not dependent on his organization for all his mental and moral powers, as well as his physical. A disembodied soul or spirit, is a creature of the imagination, and even that is an emanation from paganism.

The silence with regard to this central question, in modern pulpits and other places of worship, and the absence of the same in nearly all the religious creeds in Christendom, fully accounts for the declension from primitive christianity, and for the great tidal wave of infidelity which is sweeping over our country, as with the "besom of destruction."

The modern Pharisees, like their prototypes, although they nominally assent to their doctrine, yet, like them, are often grieved, because few, who "dare to do right," preach through Jesus, the resurrection from among the dead. This glorious doctrine, Paul calls "the gospel," see 1 Cor xv. 1, and this gospel is called the good tidings to the meek. See Isa. lxi. and Luke iv. 15-21. The doctrine of the resurrection, like that of the kingdom of God, is placed in the foreground by the concurrent testimony of both the Old and the New Testament.

There 120,000,000 women in India. Of these it is said 40,000,000 are prisoners in their zenanas. From eight years old and upward they never go beyond its narrow bounds. They may look out of its darkened windows, and catch a glimpse of the world outside, but can never walk out into the bright sunlight. Not one out of 12,000 receives any kind of instruction. Shut up in their cheerless homes, with darkened minds and hearts, how utterly desolate their lives must be! Woman's hand alone can open those doors, and lift from the hearts of those unhappy millions the dark shadows of superstition and despair. Are all the Christian women at work?"—Texas Advocate.

We are indebted to Pompeii for our great industry of canned fruits. Years ago when the excavations were beginning a party of Americans found in what had been the pantry of a house, many jars of preserved figs. One was opened, and they were found to be fresh and good. Investigation showed that the figs had been put into jars in a heated state, an aperture being left for the steam to escape, and then sealed with wax. The hint was taken, and some after fruit canning was introduced here, the process being identical with that in vogue at Pompeii twenty centuries ago. There are many ladies among us who can tomatoes and peaches for domestic use, and do not realize that they are indebted for this art to the people of Pompeii.—N. Y. Witness.

PORTLAND, Ore., July 11.—Last Friday a great slice from Mount Jefferson, one of the great snow-capped peaks of the Cascade Range, fell into the Santiam river, forty-five miles east of Salmon. The river was completely obstructed, and in a very short time the region behind it was flooded. It is a wild country, sparsely settled, hence the damage was very light, probably under $10,000, principally of cattle drowned and barns washed away. A blackberrying party barely escaped with their lives. Directly back of the newly formed dam the water rose to a depth of 200 feet, covering the tops of the tallest trees. When the water reached the top of the obstruction, there shot over the precipice a black mass of sand, which gradually became lighter and diminished in [illegible] fall the falls decreased [illegible] feet. What remains of the [illegible] mass of rock, which will no doubt be permanent. Until the water began to pour over the falls caused by the dam, the river bed below was perfectly dry. —Minneapolis Tribune.

The force of the earthquake in the Vale of Cashmere appears to have concentrated itself at certain spots, and there to have spent itself. The spots look as though a large amount of gaseous matter under the earth had, with the strength of dynamite, been struggling for an outlet, and had torn and lacerated the ground at the point where it found an exit. Thus one sees villages with the huts all destroyed, the earth adjacent being cracked and split, and the air putrescent from the bodies of cattle buried under the houses, while not twenty yards distant a sloping, wooded hill seems untouched. In other places the side of a vertically scarped hill has been sliced off as if by the guillotine, the earth so severed lying at the base. Some hillsides are partially disconnected, and a deep incision remains. Other hills again present the appearance of an ordinary landslip.

Near Lalledourah village three enormous chasms have been formed, one about three-quarters of a mile broad and twenty feet deep. Not far distant a tract of land 800 yards square has subsided, forming a trench 100 yards long, fifty feet deep and thirty feet wide.

No further shocks were reported last week, and it may be hoped that the earthquake has now spent its energy. The Maharajah and the British Resident are doing their utmost to relieve the distressed. The Indian Government has sent Mr. Jones, a geological surveyor, to report upon the scientific aspects of the calamity.—Calcutta Englishman, May 15.

What We Owe the Arabs.

The name "Arab" suggests to most of us only the picture of a swarthy robber on horseback; but it is a fact that, in the middle ages, the Oriental Moorish Arabs were a race of brilliant scholars and artists as well as of warriors. To them we are indebted for the invention of the figures we use (called the "nine digits") and for the name as well as the science of "algebra," and almanacs. The following article enumerates several other things:

The industrious Arabs revived those useful arts which the barbarians of Europe seemed anxious to forget. They wove the choicest fabrics of cotton, wool and silk; they manufactured cloth of gold, and carpets of unequaled splendor; their divans were covered with satin cushions, and velvet hangings, and muslin and lace of fairylike texture adorned the Moslem bride.

In metals, the Arabs also were excellent workmen. They forged huge chains and bars of iron; the steel of Damascus was renowned in the cities of Europe. Their jewelry was the fairest and costliest of the age; they furbished gold and silver in decorating their mosques and their palaces, and their mints produced a coinage that was the model of the European world.

As architects, they invented a strangely beautiful style of building, in which the fancy of the artist seemed to revel in new creations, and of which the lovely ruins of the Alhambra form a living example. They eagerly sought for knowledge among the ruins of Grecian literature, and the poets and philosophers of Athens and of Rome were translated for the benefit of the students of Bagdad and Cordova.

The colleges and schools, and the Arab cities, were thronged with attentive scholars when the great nobles of France and England could neither read nor write. They produced eminent poets and graceful writers, while Europe had neither a literature nor a language; their libraries numbered thousands of volumes, when Oxford possessed a few imperfect manuscripts chained to the walls; and the poorest merchant of Bagdad lived with more comfort, and was far better informed than the proud knight, who came at the head of his barbarous squadrons, to die on the burning plains of Syria in an ineffectual crusade.

Common schools and colleges, indeed, seem to have originated with the Arabs. The caliphs were as ardent friends of popular education as a Brougham or a Barnard. Haroun Al Raschid decreed that a free school should be attached to every mosque; the Spanish caliphs founded colleges at Cordova and Seville, that became models of those of France and England; the Saracenic workmen were accomplished artists, and the general education of the people aided the progress of the manufactures and the [illegible] Rural.

[illegible] John Bright [illegible]

John Bright has written a letter to Deputy Pasy, of Paris, in which he says: "If European nations would accept commercial liberty—that is, moderate or abolish customs—Europe might soon tend to an era of perpetual peace. At present all resources are swallowed up by military exigencies. The real interests of the masses are trodden under foot in deference to false notions of glory and national honor. I cannot help thinking that Europe is marching toward some great catastrophe of crushing weight. The military system cannot indefinitely be supported with patience, and the populations, driven to despair, may, possibly before long, sweep away the royalties and pretended statesmen who govern in their names. I hope your country and mine will remain at peace and be real friends."

Childhood's Faith.

Harassed by foolish doubtings, born
Of pride in mental power,
I planned to stray, one Sunday morn,
Beside a country bower—
A little cottage, even yet clad—
As through the open pane
The Gospel story, sweet and glad,
Was told to an aged dame.

An aged dame read God's own Word,
Spoke of His wondrous grace;
And, all intent, two children heard,
Fain written on each face.
And he? I saw no, still more
Stirred at soul's inner core,
Received the sacred writing's every
Truth, simply, implicitly.

Oh, for the childlike faith I see
That knew not world to fear,
That hears the Bible-stories told
And holds them very dear!
God grant such faith to me again—
The pure faith of a child—
To prison all my pride, and reign
With reason recast, held.

Prayers and Smiles.

When I was young I had an aunt whom I loved very much. I used to wonder how she kept her face so lovely. When thirteen I spent the winter with her, and had a delightful time. She had work, and care, and trials, but through all she had smiles. I often pondered the reason, but could not guess where she found so much love, so many smiles.

One day I went up stairs and opened a closet door in a retired part of the house, and was surprised to see my aunt there on her knees. As quick as a flash the thought darted through my mind, here is where she gets her smiles. Amazed at the heavenly beauty beaming in her face, I stood silent for a moment. Then I closed the door softly, feeling very sorry that I had interrupted her, for I was sure she was holding sweet communion with God. She loved to pray.

Heroism at Home.

How useless our lives seem to us sometimes! How we long for an opportunity to perform some great action! We become tired of a routine of home life, and imagine we would be far happier in other scenes. We think of the life's great battle-field, and we wish to be heroes. We think of the good we might do if our lot had been cast in different scenes. We forget that the world bestows no such titles as noble as father, mother, sister or brother. In the sacred precincts of home we have many chances of heroism. The daily acts of self-denial for the good of a loved one, the gentle words of soothing for another's trouble, the care for the sick, may all seem as nothing; yet who can tell the good they accomplish? Our slightest word may have an influence over another for good or evil. We are daily sowing the seed which will bring forth some sort of harvest. Well will it be for us if the harvest will be one we will be proud to gather. If some one in that dear home circle can look back in after years, and, as he tenderly utters our name, say: "Her words and example prepared me for a life of usefulness; to her I owe my happiness," we may well say I have not lived in vain.—Christian at Work.

To the Boys.

In early spring a gentleman gave each of the two hundred and fifty scholars of a Sunday-school six grains of Indian corn, or maize. "Plant them," he said, "and see how much you will bring me at the end of the autumn when the corn shall be gathered." All you make from them will go to our missionaries."

The boys and girls went home and made ready for the planting.

"They dropped the seed o'er hill and plain,
Beneath the sun of May,
And frightened from the sprouting grain
The robber crows away.

"All through the long bright days of June
Its leaves were green and fair;
And waved in hot midsummer's noon
Its soft and yellow hair."

When the harvest was over, the scholars came, bringing the corn which had been raised.

How much do you suppose there was? Why, enough to fill five barrels. It sold for twenty dollars.

Indian corn is a native of America. It was cultivated by the Indians when Columbus reached our shores—hence its name. It grows quickly and produces a very bountiful crop. When thirty years old it will grow if planted. A single stalk is said to have yielded in one season two thousand grains.

"Heap high the farmer's wintry board!
Heap high the golden corn!
No richer gift has autumn poured
From out her lavish horn!

"Still let the good old crop adorn
The hills our fathers trod;
Still let us for the golden corn
Send up our thanks to God!"

Indian corn is never meant when corn is mentioned in the Bible, but barley, wheat or other grain. In my collection of Curiosities I have an ear of Egyptian wheat supposed to be like that which Joseph sold to his brethren when he was Governor of Egypt. The native country of wheat is not known, but it is now raised nearly everywhere. That of Egypt was excellent. Wheat grew in abundance in the Land of Canaan, except, of course, in times of drought and of famine. It is, you know, one of our most valuable crops.

In Eastern countries barley is much more cultivated for food than it is with us. The bread which is made from barley meal is there baked in the form of thin cakes, sometimes called loaves in the Bible. Our Lord with five of these and two small fishes fed more than five thousand men, beside women and children. Perhaps the boy who gave them to Jesus had brought them for his own lunch, fearing he might get hungry. How great must have been his astonishment and delight as he watched them multiplying in the hands of the wonderful Teacher! In the beautiful Bible story of Ruth we are told that she came to Bethlehem in the beginning of the barley harvest, and gleaned in the field of Boaz unto the end of the barley harvest and of the wheat harvest. The story is read every year, it is said, by the modern Jews at their Feast of Pentecost.

It seems to me that the thirteenth birthday of a Jewish boy should have been the happiest day of his life; for he then became a "son of the Law," and entitled to all the benefits which were received through its observance.

In the spring, at the beginning of the barley harvest, he would go up to Jerusalem with a great company of Israelites, gathered from all parts of the Land of Canaan and elsewhere, to the Feast of the Passover and Unleavened Bread, on the second day of which a sheaf of the first fruits of the barley harvest would be waved before the Lord.

On the fiftieth day after the waving of the barley sheaf he would be again with the same great company in Jerusalem, at the Feast of the Pentecost—the name meaning Fiftieth—when two loaves, made of fine flour, would be waved as the first fruits of the wheat harvest.

In the autumn he and his fellow-countrymen would assemble for the third time in Jerusalem at the Feast of Tabernacles and Ingathering. The grain would be now all safely garnered, and the fruits, consisting of grapes, oranges, olives, pomegranates, citrons, figs, etc., all gathered in their season. The altar would be adorned with spreading palm, willow and fruitful boughs, and bridegroom branches would be waved with glad Hosannas. Also singing and players on instruments would be there.

We have on our grounds a tree called "the weeping beech," under which quite a large company can gather completely hidden by its ever-hanging leafy boughs. The Israelites when not engaged with their Temple services would feast in booths, formed of branches of the olive, palm, pine, myrtle and other trees, or walk the streets of the Holy City, carrying palm, citron and willow branches.

Each Israelite was taught to say as he placed his basket of the first fruits beside the altar:

"A Syrian ready to perish was my father, and he went down into Egypt and sojourned there with a few, and became there a nation, great, mighty and populous. And the Egyptians evil entreated us and afflicted us, and laid upon us hard bondage. And when we cried unto the Lord God of our fathers the Lord heard our voice and looked on our own affliction and our labor and our oppression. And the Lord brought us forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand, and with an outstretched arm and with great terribleness and with signs and with wonders. And he hath brought us into this place and hath given us this land, even a land that floweth with milk and honey. And now, behold, I have brought the first fruits of the land, which thou, O Lord, hast given me."

These three Thanksgiving festivals of the ancient Jews remind us of the "Harvest Home" of "Merrie England," and of our own "Thanksgiving Day."

"Build up an altar to the Lord,
O grateful hearts of ours!
And shape it of the greenest sward
That ever drank the showers.

"Lay all the bloom of gardens there,
And there the orchard fruits;
Bring golden grain from sun and air,
From earth her goodly roots."

What the Russians have not as yet gained in India by open conquest they are evidently trying to obtain through slower though no less surer means. They are mingling in a quiet way with the natives, learning the country thoroughly and extending their acquaintance and influence among the people. An Indian paper states that many of these Russians are men of good social standing, who come into the country ostensibly to study Hindustani literature. Others are of inferior grade, and seem too old to be students, while some again are women. Russian is openly taught in Calcutta, and there is a respectable demand for Russian primers and grammars. These are victories of peace which may help when the time comes for the struggles of war.

Zion the Mother of God's Children.

On the subject of regeneration, all are ready to claim that God is the Father of the Church, but with regard to the mother, little is said, save some vague speculation.

Perhaps the notice of a few passages of Scripture, wherein this subject is plainly set forth, would be in place with the Christian. "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout O daughter of Jerusalem, behold thy king cometh unto thee." Zech ix. 9. Again, "The daughter of Zion hath despised thee.... the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee." Isa. xxxvii. 22. From these two passages of scripture, we may learn two things, first, the two terms "Zion," and "Jerusalem," both signify the same thing, when its inhabitants, or institutions are referred to; second, Israel after the flesh, are reckoned as the daughter of Zion, without regard to individual sex; while Paul declares to the Galatian brethren, "But Jerusalem which is above, is free, which is the mother of us all." Gal. iv. 26. Though Jerusalem is reckoned as the mother of the saints; they are not reckoned as daughters, but sons; and that without regard to male, or female; for that distinction is not known in Christ; for Paul says, "there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." Gal. iii. 28. "But when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son.... that we might receive the adoption of sons: and because ye are sons, God has sent forth the spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying Abba, Father. Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ." Gal. iv. 4-7.

Says Paul, "But ye are come unto Mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven, and to God, the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel." Heb. xii. 22-24.

The Christian knows nothing of all these things, more than others,—except by faith; as for Mount Zion, few, comparatively, have ever seen it, though heavenly Jerusalem has not yet come down from God out of heaven. Rev. xxi. None of us can say that he has seen a single angel, even.

The general assembly is, to say the most of it, not more than now made up, and has never come together; the spirits of just men are not yet made perfect. 1 John iii. 2. "No man hath seen God at any time." John i. 18, is perhaps even yet true, and the Mediator of the new covenant, has long since entered the holy of holies, even heaven itself, and remains far away from the haunts of men: but the church, by faith, is anxiously waiting the day of recompense, which will be at the resurrection of the just. Luke xiv. 14, which will usher them into the full realization of all these associations. By reference to verses 18 and 22, it may be seen that Paul is drawing a contrast between the two institutions mentioned by him in Gal. iv., and portrayed by the allegory of Ishmael and Isaac, to-wit, the Jerusalem which now is, verses 14-21, see also Gal. iv. 25, which was thundered from Sinai, and the Jerusalem which is above, which has been introduced and will be brought to completion, on Mount Zion, by gathering together all the elements mentioned in verses 22 and 24, into one grandly organized institution, which is free, and the mother of us all; the mother, because the begetting process only of regeneration, is now in the past, and we are only children in embryo, in the embrace of the divine institution, growing to perfection, only till the "travail" of Zion is over: "for as soon as Zion travailed she brought forth her children." Isa. lxvi. 8.

The figure of a woman is used in the Scriptures, to represent Zion in its various stages of development, and its relations, not only in the case of Abraham and his two women, but in many other places. In Ezek. xvi. we find her married to Jehovah, verses 3-8, and clothed with beautiful raiment, so that the heathen could see in her perfect beauty, the ennobliners of Jehovah; verses 10-14. This idea finds its counterpart in Rev. xii. 1, where a woman is described as clothed with the great source of light, showing how that all who would know the purposes and attributes of Jehovah, must look upon Zion; and yet though the oracles of God were given to Israel, and through them to the nations, the Holy One of Israel, was first the moon borrowed his light from the Father, and delivered it to the nation of Israel, was rejected and crucified by them, and they are trampling him under foot as an impostor unto this day. The crown of twelve stars has its parallel, in the dream of Joseph, where the eleven stars represented Joseph's brethren, the sons of Israel. Gen. xxxvii. 9-10. "And she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered," Rev. xii. 2, "and she brought forth a man-child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron," verse 5. These first five verses of Rev. xii. contain an account of a vision, of the fulfillment of the prophecy of Isa. lxvi. 8, as quoted above, "as soon as Zion travailed she brought forth her children."

Our Savior has left us instructions so that we may know when this takes place, wars, pestilences, famines, and earthquakes, all in the plural all four occurring together. See Matt. xxiv. 7. "And these are the beginning of sorrows," verse 8. In the margin of Mark xiii. 8, this word "sorrows," is explained to signify, in the original, the pains of a woman in travail; and by the way the travail of Zion is a very important point to the Christian just now, as it is one of a set of circumstances which is to form the basis of the knowledge that we are to a time known in Scripture as "the Lord's day," or "day of the Lord." When John, the beloved disciple, in his "tarry till I come," John xxi. 2, was "taken in the spirit" across the dispensation line. The first phase of the old Roman world, that was presented to his view, was that of a dragon, having seven heads and ten horns and seven crowns upon his heads: he was watching the woman, (Zion) to destroy her child as soon as it was born. Rev. xii. 3, 4. The dragon has already made his appearance, for we now see a power in full working order, which covers every inch of the old Roman territory, consisting of seven great kingly powers, represented and centered in what is known as the Berlin Congress, towit, Russia first, Germany second, Austria third, Turkey four, England five, France six, Italy seven; these seven great powers only, of all the powers of Europe, are represented in the Berlin Congress, for the purpose of preserving the balance of power in Europe, and from the decisions of that Congress there is no appeal. [redacted] ers in Europe [redacted] voice in the d[redacted] although the [redacted] its jurisdictions. [redacted] Norway first, Sweden second, Denmark third, Holland fourth, Belgium fifth, Switzerland six, Portugal seven, Spain eight, Roumania nine, and Servia ten.

These seven heads and ten horns, include all of the old Roman world, save Greece, which with Persia had its life prolonged for a season and time, though its dominion was taken away, Dan. vii. 12, and which must act its part as one of the seven consecutive (Rev. xvii. 10) heads, of the beast that is to follow. Rev. xiii. 1, and Rev. xvii. when the great image of Daniel ii. shall stand erect ready to be smitten by the stone cut out without hands. Dan. ii. 34, 35.

Editor Restitution:

I send you pay for another six months. I feel it a great comfort to read the glorious truths, as I am very feeble with infirmities and old age, and not able to walk much. I feel I am near my journey's end in this life, yet I have a hope in Christ that is dear to me, and points beyond this weary life, to our dear Eden home, where we shall meet with all the pure, and see our Savior's face. Yes, the love of Jesus has subdued my hard and unbelieving heart, and my desire is to follow in his footsteps to the end of my journey; and may you long be spared to proclaim the coming of Jesus near, and may we meet on the Evergreen shore. This from you unworthy friend and sister in Christ.

Editor Restitution:

My husband, G. H. White, died the 27th of April, peacefully resting in Jesus, after a severe and protracted illness, aged 70 years.

I send you on the first dollar I could spare to pay up for THE RESTITUTION, thus far. I hope to be able to pay for it longer, but the future for this life looks dark to me, yet I am looking and longing for the coming kingdom.

Please change the address to Springfield, Mass. MRS. G. H. WHITE.

It is well for us to think no grace or blessing truly ours till we are aware that God has blessed some one else with it through us.—Rev. Phillips Brooks.

SOUTHERN INDIAN LETTER.

NAGERCOIL, April 18, 1885.

Editor Bible Banner:

My Dear Brother in Christ:—As a minister of the gospel, I wish to know more of the precious truths relating to the "Life only in Christ," and his personal coming to reign in his literal kingdom on earth. The glorious truths which a few years ago shone on my heart, become brighter and brighter, through reading the books, papers, and tracts often sent to me by the brethren and sisters in America and England. I am still in connection with the London Missionary Society, but continue to preach the glorious truths in private and openly. What will become of me in the future I cannot tell, but God knows everything, and I am not afraid of the oppositions and malice of the enemies of the divine truth. The Lord is my shield and hiding place, and the rock of my salvation. The seed of the grand truths of the word of God has been widely scattered by means of our publications and talking. What the harvest will be, I cannot now predict, but I am encouraged to believe that our feeble labors for the glory of our blessed Lord, have not been in vain. Some friends whose minds have been enlightened to comprehend the truths, openly declare them to others. Again I am very sorry to state that some of the orthodox pastors and catechists have not ceased to preach and teach against us and our teaching. But the word of God has been proved to be "mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations and every high thing." Pray for me that I may be strengthened by the Spirit of God to walk and teach according to the divine light graciously imparted to me, amidst the people who would not endure the sound doctrine of the glorious gospel of our Lord. May the heavenly Master of the harvest give you grace and wisdom in your endeavors for the advancement of the truth at home and in foreign lands, is the desire of my heart and request to God. The following is a brief sketch of my work among my benighted countrymen for the spread of the Word of Life, and of the coming [redacted]

The beginning of the year I received from Brother I. C. Welcome of Yarmouth, twenty packages of tracts, books, etc., for free circulation. Many of the English tracts and books which I have thus received from brethren and sisters in America and England, together with the numerous Tamil publications sent monthly by Brother J. Spence of Madras have been widely scattered in various places in South India and Ceylon.

Jan. 11. Had an interesting meeting with my people of Vadaseri and Dennisparam. They were very glad to see me again after a separation of six weeks.

26th. Four catechists who have read our tracts, came to my house wishing for an explanation of the truths taught in them. They were taught for an hour, on the "Life only in Christ" and his soon coming to reign in his literal kingdom on earth. They said "Our superiors do not now object to our reading those tracts as they did before, and some of our Christians are greatly interested in reading these tracts, and they urge us to procure for them such publications.

Feb. 8th. Preached to the Christians in two places. At noon taught some heathens who crowded to repose under a large Banian tree. There was among them a Hindu ascetic, who after listening to me with good attention, said: "I was formerly a slave in the government office and possessed wealth enough to make my life comfortable and pleasant, but, by reading certain religious tracts a few years ago I became very anxious about my soul's affairs. In consequence of which I left my family and entered into this secluded life of ascetic, in order to enjoy the true pleasures of more closely living with the Deity. Now I dwell in a cave on a hill and live by begging." He took with him some Tamil tracts.

17th. Preached in the open air taking my stand in front of the Transit offices at Solapuram. Among the audience there were some educated Brahmins and Sudras who interrupted my preaching by asking various philosophical questions. One of them, a young Brahmin who seemed to possess a moderate English education, and a fair knowledge of the Vedanta Philosophy, calmly endeavored to prove the natural immortality and trans-migration of the human soul. He insisted upon his belief that the soul of man is a part of God, and itself eternal and therefore will never perish.

20th. Had an open air meeting in the threshing floor of our deacon at Vadaseri, and I addressed the people from Gal. vi. 8. This deacon and his wife were, a few years back, most degraded slaves to Sudras, and demon worshippers; but since they became Christians, they have entirely renounced the idol worship, and their caste custom of being intoxicated with strong drinks. They not only live an honest and sober life, but most cheerfully help the cause of Christ with the little income of their property which they have acquired since they were emancipated from their slavery.

24th. Visited the patients in the government hospital, and distributed tracts. Had a brief conversation with a Roman Catholic priest. He was quite unable to speak and read either Tamil or Malayalam, but he has been appointed to officiate in a Papist Tamil Church; I gave him some English tracts which he read and understood with much difficulty.

Mar. 10. Addressed the people who assembled to partake of the harvest feast, made by one of my Christians at Vadaseri. In the evening had discussion with a heathen school master; he said: "Sir, I am a regular reader of the Tamil Bible Banner, and other tracts published by you and your friends, and they contain very excellent Bible truths. But I feel very sorry to find these glorious truths spoken of as false doctrine, by certain pastors and catechists, who call you a heretic, but are not able to prove the immorality of the soul from the Scriptures."

16th. Preached and distributed tracts at Kottaur. Some people asked me about the Russians invading India. This led me to teach them from the Scriptures about the personal coming of our Lord to redeem his people, and judge the wicked and to establish his everlasting kingdom, abolishing all the dominions of men. One of them questioned me: "Are you the man who teaches that there is no soul?" In answering him, I taught the people the true nature of man and his future state.

21st. Preached in the front yard of the Tasildar's Cutchery, at Harapadi, and distributed numerous Tamil tracts. The people who crowded there for their law suits to be examined by the tribunal, listened to my preaching with good attention. Among the audience there were some Mussulmans, who inquired of me, "Who is the true prophet Jesus or Muhammad?" I gave a short sketch of the lives of these two personages and asked them to determine who among them was the true prophet of God.

22d. Had the Lord's Supper administered at Dennisparam. About forty members were present.

In concluding, I give you and all the members of the Bible Banner Association, my warmest Christian love, and compliments, with my thanks for your pecuniary and other helps to me. I remain, dear sir, your brother in Christ.—G. Manikkanaval in Bible Banner.

Under a Shadow.

There are very few of us who are not at some time in our lives brought under the shadow of a false accusation. The natural way to meet it is by denial and self-defense. But that is not the New Testament way. There is a better, surer, higher way. It is to give the false accusation a plain, simple, square denial, and then leave the life and the truth to do the rest. It is not my business to take care of my reputation; it is all I can do to take care of my character. If that is clean and pure and luminous, the light that is in me will shine on and out, and by and by will pierce the clouds and dispel them. For clouds are temporary, because earthly; but sunshine is eternal, because divine. Any one can distort my shadow; but no one but myself can distort me; and if I am not distorted my shadow will not be distorted. But if it is, what matter?

Do not run after accusers. Do not trouble yourself about false accusations. Only be sure to make them false; then leave the falsehood to die. Go on with your life work; and accept the position in which false accusation, and consequent scandal and reproach, place you, only as a new opportunity to bear witness to the truth and the life by your own manifest and glorious possession of them.—Lyman Abbott.

Paul and Prayer.

With Paul his prayers were themselves quite as much a part of his work for God as his preaching the gospel or his suffering for the truth's sake. And though in this as well as in every other part of his work, he—or, as he says, "Not I, but the grace of God that was in me"—labored more abundantly than all who either went before him or have followed him in the work of witnessing for Christ, yet this, at least, is certain: that I can only follow his example in his work for God in proportion as I follow it in regard to prayer. It is very profitable to consider how much preparatory thought the apostle must have given to his work before praying; how he must have considered the various circumstances in regard to which the assistance and direction of God were needed for it; the special aid that he and others required; the special dangers and temptations and difficulties to which it was liable. Thus I shall realize better how truly prayer is itself work, not only for God, but with God and in God. And if I need a general rule for my continual direction in "my work for God," let me remember that the most general and the most practical of all is that which St. Paul has given us and exemplified in his own life: "Continue steadfastly in prayer, watching therein with thanksgiving."—H. Cotterill, D. D.

Our Father's Word.

"I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me forever, for the good of them, and of their children after them."—Jer. xxxii. 39.

"Happy the home when God is there,
And love fills every breast;
When one their wish and one their prayer,
And one their heavenly rest.

"Lord, let us in our homes agree,
This blessed peace to gain;
Unite our hearts in love to Thee,
And love to all will reign."

Our Father's precious gifts are before us this month in promise. Look at it as given above! What a cluster of good things! Is it not worth while to be a child of the King? What are these precious gifts? They are "one heart"—"one way"—the fear of the Lord in blessed perpetuity—good for ourselves and our children after us.

Mark! First, singleness of heart; "out of the heart are the issues of life." "One heart" denotes entire consecration, entire purity—a heart perfect in love.

What then? "One way." A heart in harmony with God, all its powers Godward will give unity to our way, our course of life—steady, unfaltering obedience—delight in God's will, whatever it may be—a joyous outflow of love in all the life. Loyalty in perpetuity is the next link in the golden chain, "that they may fear me forever." How grand, an immortal existence, in all its range of faculties, Godward—forever!

And now, the concluding word, how far-freighted—Good! Good for ourselves and our children after us. That single word covers the ground—temporally and spiritually—for time and eternity.—George Hughes.

THE GIFT OF GOD.

Each night is followed by its day,
However stormy father weather;
While all the works of nature sing
Their praises of joy together.
Then learn, oh heart, their songs of hope!
Cease, soul, thy thankless sorrow;
For though the clouds be dark to-day,
The sun shall shine to-morrow;
Learn well, from bird and tree and hill,
Th[redacted] of darkest sentiment;
And [redacted] the greatest gift of God
Is faith and sweet contentment.

DUTY AND ITS FRUITS.

Kindly actions begun from a sense of duty blossom into affection, and afford some of the sweetest pleasures earth can bestow. Active industry, at first painful and arduous, unfolds our powers and comes to be the source of truest satisfaction. Purity of thought, word, and deed, sought at first from a knowledge of its righteousness, comes at last to be the natural air which the spirit loves to breathe. Thus duty of every kind, containing within it the germs of delight and beauty, will, if cherished, develop the sweetest flowers and richest fruits, and the good and the beautiful thus clasp hands and claim kinship forever.

I will frankly tell you that my experience in prolonged scientific investigations convinces me that a belief in God—a God who is behind and within the chaos of vanishing points of human knowledge—adds a wonderful stimulus to the man who attempts to penetrate into the regions of the unknown. Of myself, I may say that I never make the preparations for penetrating into some small province of nature hitherto undiscovered without breathing a prayer to the Being who hides his secrets from me only to allure me graciously on to the unfolding of them.—Professor Agassiz.

All our passions are but the several eddings and flowings of the soul, and their motions are the signs of its temper, which way it is carried. If our desires and hopes and fears be in the things of this world and the interests of the flesh, this is their distemper and disorder, the soul is in a spiritual fever. But if they move Godwards, then it is composed and calm, in a good temper and healthful state, fearing and loving him, desiring him and nothing but him, waiting for him, and trusting in him. And when any one affection is right and in a due aspect to God, all the rest are so too.—Archbishop Leighton.

JESUS MY FRIEND.

"I have a Friend!—a precious Friend, unchanging, wise, and true.
The chief among ten thousand!—Oh, I wish you knew Him too!
Encompassed by a host of foes, weary in heart and limb,
I know who waits to soothe my woes: have you a Friend like Him?
He comforts me, He strengthens me; how can I then repine?
He foreth me! This faithful Friend in life and death is mine.

I have a Father, free and fond! He cares for all my needs;
His patience bore my fathless ways, my hard and fool-like deeds;
To me He sends sweet messages; He waiteth but to bless:
Have you a Father like to mine, with such deep tenderness?
For me a kingdom doth He keep, for me a crown is won;
I was a rebel once. He calls the rebel child his son.

Oh, leave the worthless things you seek; they perish in a day.
Serve now the true and living God; from idols turn away;
Wait for the Lord, who comes to reign; raise the eye above;
Give Him thy heart, thy broken heart, then'lt rest in his love more.
Trust Him for grace, and strength, and love, and all thy troubles shed;
Oh, come to Jesus! and behold! Him my loving Friend."

What is the Sin that Never Hath Forgiveness?

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned."

The final destiny of the human race is plainly revealed in this language of Christ, when the command is fulfilled. This makes the salvation or condemnation of every creature depend on their accepting or rejecting the gospel. It requires the same knowledge of the gospel to reject it, it does to accept it. The same knowledge will soften or harden, make good or bad, just or unjust, as we accept or reject; consequently there will be but two classes to be judged, the believer and the unbeliever, as stated in the text.

Again Christ teaches the same great truth "He that believeth on him is not condemned," why? because he accepts the only way and name given whereby we must be saved, "but he that believeth not is condemned already," why? because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." In this passage the same great truth is taught, which sooner or later separates men into the same two classes.

Again when Christ is accused of casting out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils, he says "All manner of sins and blasphemies shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit shall not be forgiven unto men....neither in this world, neither in the world to come." Men do not commit this sin till truly enlightened by the gospel. "My words that I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life." "He is the light of the world." "The true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." "That all men through him might believe." Why are all sins but this one forgiven? Because if men when enlightened by the gospel so as to see their sins and lost condition, confess their sins and repent and forsake them, Christ is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, while those having the same light, willfully rejecting the offer of salvation cannot be forgiven, for God has provided no other way to be saved or forgiven.

There is much speculation as to what this sin is. Many suppose Christ's accusers on this occasion were guilty of it. He did on many occasions call them liars, hypocrites, whited sepulchers, fools, blind guides, vipers, serpents, etc.; and said their house was left unto them desolate; but, in the same connection, speaking of the time when their blindness should be removed, he said they should say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," which showed they had not committed this sin, and because of their blindness he said on the cross, they know not what they did, and for that reason he asked his Father to forgive them. Could he have thus prayed had they committed the unpardonable sin? When the mysticism is cleared away from this text, we find it in harmony with the above texts, as to the gracious purpose of God for the salvation of lost man. These Scriptures plainly teach that a knowledge of the saving power of the gospel, is what brings salvation or condemnation, and that all sins are to be forgiven the sons of men but the willful sin of unbelief. Consequently all men must have the gospel before they can have this salvation or condemnation.

Paul very plainly teaches this truth to the Hebrews. "If we sin wilfully after we have received a knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." Christ has offered but one sacrifice for sin, and to reject that, is "treading under foot the Son of God, and doing despite to the Spirit of grace," who has a sorer punishment than those who died under Moses' law, blinded as they were to the gospel, for they have the redemption of the body but the second death has no awakening. "If those fall away that have been once enlightened and made partakers of the Holy Spirit, it is impossible to renew them again to repentance, seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh."

Peter speaks of the same sin committed by those who had forsaken the right way, having had a knowledge of the Lord and our Savior Jesus Christ, and the condemnation is of the same character.

The sin brought to view in these passages, for which there is "no sacrifice," from which it is "impossible to renew them again to repentance," which has the "sorest punishment," etc., is willfully rejecting the truth and the Holy Spirit, after being made partakers of it, and thus they have trodden under foot the Son of God, and done despite to the Spirit of grace.

There is but one sin that has not forgiveness, then certainly this must be the one, so plainly described, and we shall look in vain for any other.

Christ said if he had not come and done the works that none other man had done, they had not had sin. What sin could he have had reference to, which those wicked Jews had not committed before his mighty works were done among them? Certainly none but to reject him willfully after their blindness had passed away, and they should know that he was their long looked for Messiah. "He that rejecteth me and receiveth not my words hath one that judgeth him, the words that I have spoken; the same shall judge him in the last day"—the day when "God will judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel." God will judge the world in righteousness by Christ having laid the foundation for faith to be offered to all men (margin) by his resurrection.

The Scripture teachings on this subject resolve themselves into this formula. All men will be judged by the gospel, receiving salvation or condemnation as its teachings have been accepted or rejected; consequently all men must be enlightened by the gospel, prior to their final judgment.—H. L. Simonds.

How is Christ the Savior of the World?

"The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." He restores all men from the curse entailed on them by the fall of Adam, unconditionally, to a desirable condition, when in God's own due time, they will have the gospel offer of salvation; for which blessing they become personally responsible, which will prove a savor of life unto life or of death unto death.

God made a promise to Abraham of so much importance, that he confirmed it by his oath, saying, "Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen. xxii. 18; xxviii. 14.

This is a great central truth from which radiates the gospel light that is to bless all nations.

Paul calls this covenant promise the gospel, and Christ and those that are in him, the Abrahamic seed (Gal. iii.) This elect seed are to be made one perfected body with Christ, their head, at his second coming.

The object or end to be obtained by this promise, is the blessing of all the nations or families of the earth, and the seed when perfected, are the means by which this promised blessing comes.

God is now taking out this people for his name, from the nations, called the seed, the elect, the children of faith, the church of God, a tried people, pilgrims and strangers, to be associated with Christ as joint heirs in blessing the nations.

This people are always spoken of, in connection with Christ their head as ruling, reigning, judging, having authority, and sitting on thrones as priests and kings.

They are never called the nations but are taken out from the nations, becoming a peculiar people a royal priesthood, an holy nation to do this angelic work.

The work of blessing all the families of the earth by the seed does not commence till "The times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and he shall send Jesus Christ which before was preached unto you, whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

God has not purposed to bless the nations that are alive at this time, but has reasonably required all men everywhere to repent, because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by Christ, whereof he hath given assurance [illegible] faith, margin] to all men in that he raised him from the dead."

The above terms, all nations, all men everywhere, every man that cometh into the world, every creature, etc., are very significant, and evidently include the whole race of Adam, past, present, and future.

They teach the brotherhood of our fallen race, dependent on an allwise Creator for life and breath and all things, "in whom we live and move and have our being;" who is not far from every one of us;" "whose ways are equal," and is "no respecter of persons;" "who is long suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance."

"God will have all men to be saved." From any hindrance that prevents their coming "to the knowledge of the truth," in his own due time. Then having the truth [illegible] reasonably require all men to seek the Lord, and command all men every where to repent, for they have the ground work of faith made known to them in a crucified and risen Savior, which brings them to see their lost condition, and the way of life and salvation, through Christ. Then they become responsible for the offered blessing of the gospel, and can have a righteous judgment rendered by Christ, through his word or the gospel.

God does not reap where he has not sown, nor gather where he has not strewn. He does not harden the hearts of men for his glory, nor shut the eyes and understanding of the idolater that they should not know nor understand. Isa. liv, and blind the eyes of the Jew that they might reject and crucify Christ, John xii, and then make their acts an unpardonable sin. Paul says the times of this ignorance God winks at or overlooks.

"Christ tasted death for every man and rose triumphant, having the keys of death, thereby becoming the propitiation for the sins of the whole world," a "ransom for all men," and "glad tidings of great joy to all people." "For this end Christ both died and rose and revived that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." "The grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men hath appeared." The child born has already come and by his mighty works and teaching and death and resurrection, laid the foundation of faith to be offered to all men. Christ is the Savior of the world in the same way God is the Savior of all men, which is the blessing of salvation through the gospel offered to all the families of the earth in the times of restitution when the refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord. Joel calls it the common salvation.

The seed have a special salvation, 1 Tim. iv. being a chosen and tried people, pilgrims and strangers, who suffer with Christ that they may reign with him.

Christ's memorable prayer, John xvii, is in harmony with these Scriptures. He does not include the world in his prayer till those the Father has given him, out of the world are made one with him, as he and his Father are one—not divided and sub-divided as in the past and present, but—a perfected body. Then after this oneness is obtained, he includes in his prayer the [illegible] for which they were taken [illegible] "that the world may know that thou hast sent me." [illegible] perfected. [illegible] saints [illegible] kingdom under the whole heavens, ruling and reigning as joint heirs with Christ, when he shall be priest and king on his throne after the order of Melchisedec, the nations, languages, tongues, people, and dominions, are always spoken of as serving, obeying, being ruled over, as subjects of the kingdom.

"All kings shall fall down before him, all kings shall serve him." "All people, nations, languages shall serve him." "All dominions shall serve and obey him," etc.

"All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord." Paul says he has made of one blood all nations, consequently the sleeping nations as well as those that are living when that age shall arrive must be among those worshippers.

The time when the fullness of the earth shall praise him is when they hear the words of his mouth. When he shall appear in his glory, is the time when he hears the groans of the prisoners, to loose the children of death (margin), and when the people are gathered together and the kingdoms to serve the Lord, Psa. cii. 22. visits the prisoners that have been shut up for many days, when he reigns in Mount Zion. This is when the groaning creation have the redemption of the body, and when "all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth." Then Christ will visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. Christ will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down; and will build again the ruins thereof, and will set it up, that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things. Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world."

This is when Israel receives her elder and younger sisters, Sodom and Samaria and they return to their former estate, and Israel remembers her ways and is ashamed, and "I establish my covenant with thee, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord," Ezek. xvi. Christ locates this event in the judgment age, when it will be more tolerable for the cities of the plain than for the cities of Judah, for their sin is not so great.

Christ told his persecutors they should not see him henceforth till they should say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Zechariah speaks of that time when God shall pour upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem the spirit of grace and of supplication, and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced and they shall mourn bitterly, they call on the Lord and he hears them. Ezekiel says they remember their own evil ways and loathe themselves for their iniquities, and God cleanseth them from all their iniquities, and gives them a new heart and puts his spirit within them.

When the Gentile times end, the Redeemer comes out of Zion. Then blindness passes away. The new covenant is made with them, and their sins are remembered no more. And eventually if the wicked cities of the plain, and rebellious Israel are thus restored the promise to bless all nations will be fulfilled.

We have quoted a few from the many Scriptures which appear on the very surface of revelation, on this subject, so all-important to mankind, and if they have no fulfilment and the promise to bless all nations fail, then the unnumbered millions that have lived in all ages of the world, destitute of the gospel light, the propitiation, the ransom, the glad tidings, and the grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men, is a deception, and it was a vain thing for God to cast a veil over all nations and to blind the eyes and understanding of men, lest they should see and understand and be converted, when he had made no provision for the salvation of this class in the plan of redemption.

From the Scriptures of truth this conclusion we draw,
That the wisdom of men, not the works of the law,
Have the power to cleanse, nor forgive, nor to save,
Nor restore from the curse, or redeem from the grave:
But salvation is given by Christ and his word,
When the world of the love and his mercy have heard:
For the gospel redemption to all is made freer
As they heed the instructions their judgment will be.

The Jewish World has lately been discussing the old problem of the Israelitish origin of the Afghans. Apart from the "fairly large number" of undoubted Jews who are to be met with here and there in the more thickly populated districts of Afghanistan, the Afghans themselves, in their traditions, make a distinct claim of affinity. It is a mistake, however, to say that they read and consider "Beni Israel," or Sons of Israel. While stoutly maintaining their claim to be descendants of Israel, the name which they assume is "Beni Meick Talut," or Children of King Saul, a grandson of whom they say, formed their race in the time of Solomon. "This legend of the Jewish origin of the Afghans was well thought out for them by some acute scholar as Sir William Jones. How there may be Jewish families among the Afghans, and that these, having been converted to Judaism, studiously conceal their origin, is possible. At the same time the tradition must only be taken for what it is worth. The Jewish appearance of the Afghans is nothing to the question; since all Semitic people resemble each other more or less. The language of the Afghans, Pukhto, or Pushtu, is against any theory of the Jewish origin. Their customs are distinctly non-Semitic, and the true professing Jews of the country have no manner of belief in the common origin of themselves and their Moslem fellow-countrymen."

Fire takes time to die out. You can never tell from what heap of cold gray ashes a flame may start up, to begin or to renew a conflagration. Many of the most destructive fires have taken their origin from inflammable material left too near some heap of seemingly dead ashes; and often when the weary firemen have left the steaming ruins behind them, they are recalled because the flame has started anew from some rubbish heap where all was supposed to be extinguished. Yes, fire take long to die out. You may think you are safe from the fire of this or of that temptation, because the dead gray ashes have shown no sign of life. But take care that you do not bring inflammable materials too near them. A gust of passion, a breeze of memory, a wind of ambition, may blow the dying ash into a live coal, and the live coal may carry the fire to the things which are your best and dearest. A little forgetfulness, a little heedlessness—and lo! you may hear the roar of a flame which [illegible] aided effort will not extinguish. What is the preventive? Only the most constant watchfulness, only the most earnest care. These half-dead ashes are dangerous chiefly because you see no danger in them. Be on your guard against them—carefully, prayerfully—and they will indeed have for you no peril.—Sunday School Times.

PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY.

The characteristic of saints in the early times of Christianity, was a desire to be together and have mutual interests.

In a practical every day service, if one member of the body suffered, all suffered. But as time advanced, the members were scattered abroad, and never until comparatively recent times were traveling and communicating facilities such, as to render feasible on an extended scale, the actualization of the Christian principle of co-operation.

In these last times however there are not only great incentives and in many cases actual needs, but every facility, for as close personal relation as may be necessary, and no excuse for "stewards in possession," failing to measure up (when fully set before them) to the divine requirement, to be maintained in the final assize, "inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Every Christain and true lover of his brethren and his race ponders over the fact, that selfish human elements are so arranged that with the substitution on a large scale of mechanical implements for human instruments of labor, wealth is accumulating to an unprecedented degree, but mainly in the hands of a few controlling the products of the inventive genius of the age that have made easy enormous production, and enabling them to revel in luxury while the toiling masses of their brethren [illegible] the wealth of wage slaves even in free countries, and [illegible] ing power to a few to [illegible] the products of labor, [illegible] ers. There are operations [illegible] process, putting artificial distinctions between men, arraying class against class because of [illegible] and [illegible] protection—in the present order of things, which increasing now in geometrical progression, and have only the destructive outcome portrayed in Scripture as characterizing the close of the present age, and demanding on the part of Christians something more than preaching and praying, or even the spreading abroad of the word of truth. Rapidly it is coming to pass, that even small capital combined with labor no longer secures a comfortable independency for a family by the exertion of one, and younger members of the family are forced prematurely to labor, and sometimes the wife, to the neglect of the dearest interests of the household. Small businesses are everywhere giving way before capitalistic monopolists and the best off financially, are no longer masters, constituting the great middle class, but the employes of rich firms and corporations. But are there not today larger numbers than at any period since the times of the apostles—unselfish human elements—who mete up to the apostolic injunction "Let no man seek his own but every man another's wealth" and firmly enough established on the principles of the word of God to successfully unite together and comfortably withstand the present competition cut throat system of things, and especially protect the young when obliged to work from being forced into mixed and often vicious association; A single county filled with co-operative communities on a real Christian basis, with sole ownership, and the legal right to exclude all that is opposed to Christian principles, would astound the world by its material prosperity and preach the gospel more effectually than a host of evangelists. All that is necessary for such an accomplishment is a sufficient number of real Christians, with a scriptural disregard for mere class distinctions, and if faith is found on the earth when the Lord comes it will be found in such a brotherhood. In fact the great work of preaching the word has been effectually done, in so far, as there has been secured sufficient materials, willing and eager to come together and live Christianity in such style that all except those unworthy of eternal life, will desire to imitate, and will practically trust that when inaugurated, who they are that prefer the fashion of this world and the riches that perish. A time these were written, the depth of true Christian community on the Scriptural basis, of convenient size and well located, of consecrated spirits, would be a signal sure to draw other like material into similar communities, and on a large scale demonstrate the great fact most needed in this age of attempted alliances, that Scriptural truth when carried out as [illegible] unite minds and temperaments, and as in former times cause brethren to dwell together, "Great peace have they which keep thy law." The best minds of today, i. e. the most intellectual and practical, without reference to religious views know and say that the only hope in the near future for large numbers of our race is in well directed co-operative movements. The belief that there is no channel into which the money of philanthropists would more freely flow than into that of co-operative Christianity if it could be proven to them, that the right kind of individuals personally known to each other, knit together by strong religious beliefs, of different useful occupations, having wise men among them of matured judgment and large experience, stood ready and willing to unite together and in combination with capital take a band and one-balance the value of large tracts of land. What else than this, offers a solution of the problem as to how the constantly increasing number of persons of small wage or no wage at all can be rescued from dire poverty in the midst of abundance, and what better time for action, than just before greedy monopolists through controlled legislation succeed in appropriating the whole domain.

In the providence of God there are wealthy humanitarians, to-day who would gladly aid their suffering fellow [illegible] themselves, and partake [illegible] there are large amounts of [illegible] that the world wants, out if owners were convinced that there were numbers of willing workers understanding and loving each other, ready to unite together and in conjunction with capital create values. We know that just such human material exists at the present day, and our mission is to bring them into relation to each other. What more solid phalanx could be presented in resistance to the increasing tide of woe resulting from the operations of kings of capital for selfish aggrandizement than one composed of prospective Kings and Priests unto God, united into model communities on a Scriptural basis, serving as a covert from the storms that will rage during the close of this age, and gladly and industriously awaiting the coming of their Lord. For many years, brethren, we have thought about co-operative Christianity, have read up outside systems and efforts at co-operation, have compared notes, reasoned one with the other, and finally concluded that the old successful model of the apostolic time, regulated by the Bible standard, was just the thing for these times, and movement in that direction a necessity, and believing that we were directed by the Lord, have united, and now invite others to our counsels, and when mutually desirable and advantageous propose personal residence together. From all who are in sympathy with this movement, we would welcome correspondence or a visit to the valley of Virginia, and would be obliged to other publications than THE RESTITUTION if they would copy this article, give extended notice and like invitation. ### THE MISSION FIELD OF THE APOSTLES.

In the Epistle to the Colossians we read, that in Christ Jesus "there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free." The mention here of bond and free is a reference to a gigantic system of slavery which existed in those days; and is repeatedly brought under our observation in the apostolic letters. It is probable that, with but a little exception, the whole of the [illegible] known world at the time these were written, the depth of true Christian community on the Scriptural basis, of convenient size and well located, of consecrated spirits, would be a signal sure to draw other like material into similar communities, and on a large scale demonstrate the great fact most needed in this age of attempted alliances, that Scriptural truth when carried out as [illegible] unite minds and temperaments, and as in former times cause brethren to dwell together, "Great peace have they which keep thy law." The best minds of today, i. e. the most intellectual and practical, without reference to religious views know and say that the only hope in the near future for large numbers of our race is in well directed co-operative movements. The belief that there is no channel into which the money of philanthropists would more freely flow than into that of co-operative Christianity if it could be proven to them, that the right kind of individuals personally known to each other, knit together by strong religious beliefs, of different useful occupations, having wise men among them of matured judgment and large experience, stood ready and willing to unite together and in combination with capital take a hand and one-balance the value of large tracts of land. What else than this, offers a solution of the problem as to how the constantly increasing number of persons of small wage or no wage at all can be rescued from dire poverty in the midst of abundance, and what better time for action, than just before greedy monopolists through controlled legislation succeed in appropriating the whole domain.

In the providence of God there are wealthy humanitarians, to-day who would gladly aid their suffering fellow [illegible] themselves, and partake [illegible] there are large amounts of [illegible] that the world wants, out if owners were convinced that there were numbers of willing workers understanding and loving each other, ready to unite together and in conjunction with capital create values. We know that just such human material exists at the present day, and our mission is to bring them into relation to each other. What more solid phalanx could be presented in resistance to the increasing tide of woe resulting from the operations of kings of capital for selfish aggrandizement than one composed of prospective Kings and Priests unto God, united into model communities on a Scriptural basis, serving as a covert from the storms that will rage during the close of this age, and gladly and industriously awaiting the coming of their Lord. # THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, August 5, 1885.

We need the money due us. If your subscription has expired please send us the money to renew soon.

ON the day following our last issue, July 23, General U. S. Grant died in the cottage he had occupied for a few weeks on Mt. McGregor, near Saratoga Springs. He was born at Point Pleasant, Clermont Co., Ohio, April 27, 1822. As a military leader and commander he was equalled by few, and perhaps surpassed by none in the records of human history. Aside from his military genius he was, according to the testimony of those who knew him best, distinguished for his patriotism, unselfishness, and generous magnanimity of character. His fame was world-wide. What is remarkable in his case, is that the South unites with the North in deploring his death. God is in history, and the Most High rules in the kingdoms of men. The powers that be are ordained by him to fill a destined place till the close of Gentile times. The fashion of this world is passing away. While chronicling the fall of chieftains under the power of death, and the place they have filled in the eventful changes of human affairs, we are led to see the instability of worldly power, and to realize how transitory are all its honors. The imperial crown and the military laurels are alike fading. Many of the obscure and humble in this present and evil world are heirs of an incorruptible crown and of an unfading inheritance to be enjoyed forever in the soon-coming kingdom.

We subjoin what Dr. Douglass, one of General Grant's physicians, says of the last sickness of his distinguished patient.—"Nine months of close attention to him have only endeared him to me. I have learned to know him as few only can know him. The world can know him as a great General, as a successful politician, but I know him as a patient, self-sacrificing, gentle, quiet, uncomplaining sufferer, looking death calmly in the face, and counting almost the hours he had to live, and these hours were studied by him that he might contribute something of benefit to some other fellow-sufferer. If he was great in his life, he was even greater in his death. Not a murmur, not a moan, not a sigh, from first to last. He died as he had lived—a true man."

THE SABBATH.

We clip the following Book Notice from the Independent. The Cuneiform inscriptions show that the Babylonians used a week that originated in the four fold division of the lunar month and that these weeks ended on the 7th, 14th, 21st, and 28th days of each month. As a lunation consists of 29.53 days it is readily seen how much support Assyriology gives to the universality of the Sabbath observance—which is none at all.

"We do not see that A. H. Lewis, D. D., advances any essentially new facts in support of his Seventh Day doctrine. His Biblical teachings concerning the Sabbath and Sunday contain some novel attempts to prop up a failing cause with proofs from the new science of Assyriology. The real force of these facts, if established, would be to indicate that the Mosaic account is drawn from an older secular tradition, and not support its authority with a parallel secular tradition. It is rather a questionable method to quote Mr. Procter, when what he argues is that the Babylonian Sabbath had its origin in the moon's twenty-eight days of lunation, and that a celestial connection was afterward made between the seven days and the five planets, the moon, and the sun. As to the attempt to show that Christ rose on Saturday, rather than on Sunday, it is only when an argument is in extremis that such force is applied to it. A tenth part of the time, ingenuity, and research wasted in the futile attempt to carry the Christian Church away from the observance of the first day to the seventh day, if expended in rational endeavors to promote the religious observance of Sunday, would entitle the author to the gratitude of all right-minded people."

PARIS, July 30.—Terrible and destructive storms, accompanied by thunder and lightning, have prevailed over the southern provinces. In Rodez, the capital of the province of Aveyron, the lightning set fire to the priests' seminary. Many farm houses have been destroyed by the storms, and many persons are reported to have been killed.

"The Genuine and the Counterfeit."

The tract of Mrs. Carrie Williams with this title, reached me months ago, and deserved an earlier recognition. To my mind it is founded on the fundamental facts of revelation, and all the realities of its related human history. Note a few points.

1. God, who has revealed himself in his word and works is the living, everlasting God, the one God over all, the genuine. But the "many that are called gods," 1 Cor. viii 6, are the counterfeits, because the counterfeit is the unauthorized copy of the genuine, which is put forth to deceive and defraud.

Thus "the Lord Jesus Christ, he is the Son of the Father in truth and love." 2 John iii. All others who assume his title as the only begotten of the Father, are the counterfeit. They are already written as "deceivers" and when grouped together they comprise the antichrist. 2 John vii.

2. The word (logos) of God is truth, John xvii. 17, the genuine, and all the oracles of false gods are but counterfeits.

The genuine word, logos, "liveth and abideth forever," but the counterfeits are, like their author, "as grass that withereth and passeth away." 1 Peter i. 23–25; Isa. xliv. 6–20.

3. It follows from these premises that we can trace the genuine and the counterfeit through all the stages of priesthood, altar, sacrifice, temple and worship.

The genuine is Godly in Christ Jesus, life-giving, restoring by faith and hope here, and its results end up in everlasting life, with all things made new. John vi. Rev. xxi. 5.

"The restitution of all things spoken by all the holy prophets" relates to the knowledge and worship of the one God, the Father, the one Lord Jesus Christ; and the one lip, or language, with all again, "very good." Gen. i. 31; Zeph. iii. 9; Rom. viii. 21.

The false and fraudulent counterfeits in all their stages and relations, belong to "the enemy," Matt. xiii, 39, the wicked one. 1 John iii. 8, the oppressor, Psa. lxxii. 4, the evil one, Matt. vi. 13, and are to end when God in Christ shall overcome all evil with good. 1 Cor. v. 18–21; Rom. xii. 21.

Surely no one with reason will ascribe "the evil" to the source of all good; nor the good we all enjoy and hope for to the evil one; for even now the most apostate and abandoned have learned enough to swear orthodox! They damn the evil and commend the good. They recognize retribution, and the moral necessity that maintains it. The primal doctrine is that "the Judge of all the earth is right and will do right."

Hence, as light dissipates darkness, as life to Lazarus, Jesus, etc., overcame death, so the glory of God will fill the earth with untold light, life and abounding blessing.

The tabernacle of God will be with men, the genuine will be universal, and we shall know how good the creature is that God himself will take pleasure in. Rev. xxi. 1–5.

This change is embraced in the deliverance, Rom. xi. 26–29, the salvation, Heb. ix. 28, the regeneration, Matt. xix. 28; so that this present evil world, Gal. iv. 4, where the counterfeit so far controls, must end at the inauguration of the triumphant genuine in the age and kingdom to come. Heb. ii. 5.

In closing it is obvious to say that this necessary order cannot be reversed. The genuine could not possibly have come from the counterfeit, because the first idea of a counterfeit involves imposition. It is but a pretence for the genuine put forth with design to deceive and defraud. Gen. iii. 1–4; John viii. 44.

The genuine bank note bears the impress of the authorized bank plate. The application of this is easy and unmistakable as to Christ. David's son here is David's Lord. Psa. cx. 1; Matt. xxii. 42–45. Abraham's priest was Melchizedek. Of course the real Son, the Messiah, must be above either Abraham or David. Hence, being the "only begotten of the Father," but made of a woman, in the Abrahamic and Davidic line. He is indeed the seed of Abraham and son of David according to the flesh. He is the very "word made flesh," the genuine, Christ Jesus the Lord, in all the features of his heavenly portrait.

All others are counterfeits, and those who circulate them are so far deceived deceivers, without excuse. The heavenly pattern is too plain and distinctive to mislead. What can be gained by the counterfeit which will soon and so certainly be exposed? Rev. xxii. 18, 19. The judge standeth at the door. Jas. v. 9. Amen.

J. B. COX.

Editor Restitution:

This brief article was addressed to the Indianapolis Journal, but is returned, lest a discussion should follow. How afraid of the light." Well did Jesus say, "Men love darkness rather than light." So the pulpit orators are allowed to say what they please, and it must not be opposed: therefore the people take it for granted, and remain by those ye minister to perishers of the divine nature." 2 Peter i. 4. The revised version reads, "that through these ye may become partakers of the divine nature," as to either case it is shown to be in the future tense, and not in present possession.

Again. All men will not be partakers of the divine nature. For, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe." 2 Thess. i 7, 10. So as God is spirit, man must become a spirit man to be of the same nature with God, and Paul says, "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. xv. 53.

So we wait God's time, and look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. iii. 20, 21.

Over against the statement of W. J. Owen I place the Scripture statements, let the readers examine for themselves.

J. B. COX.

The chief grounds on which so many base their objections to the inspiration of the Bible are, first, theories which it is supposed the Book teaches, theories which contradict the dictates of enlightened reason: and second, objections based on the practice of the professed followers of Jesus Christ. To these may be added the claim urged by infidelity that the Bible contradicts itself. Now it is very unreasonable to hold the Bible responsible for the false doctrines of men or the bad conduct of professed Christians.

It would be well for infidels to spend a little of their misused time in the careful reading and study of the Book which they unreasonably condemn. Where infidels have honestly pursued this course they have invariably changed. It is not the part of an honest man to condemn this book for which so much is claimed by sincere and pure minded men and women all over the civilized world without first examining its claims to Divine Authorship. It may possibly have a supernatural origin is a thought that should not be dismissed from the mind until every source of proof has been exhausted and found insufficient. Then and only then should a judgment adverse to the claim of inspiration be pronounced.

Among the theories against which human reason revolts are the trinity of coequal and coeternal gods in unity, and the doctrine of eternal conscious suffering. The infidel ought to be positively certain that the Bible teaches these doctrines before he pronounces his verdict: a work of priest-craft? He should not be satisfied until he has critically examined the whole terminology of the Bible on the objectionable doctrines. If he does this honestly the result is absolutely certain. His infidelity will vanish.

Tuesday's Child.

"Tuesday's child is full of grace."

Yes, "full of grace" she is indeed,
From the swaying of her head
With its crown of golden ringlets,
To her footsteps saintly tread.

She's beautiful, our little Ruth,—
And yet the loveliest part
Of all her childish beauty
Is the "grace" that fills her heart.

She thinks of others' pleasures
Always before her own;
Her constant self forgetfulness
In word and deed is shown.

We call her little "woman,"
Our "thoughtful little Ruth;"
She blesses the whole household,
And is Tuesday's child in truth.

Pocahontas and John Smith.

John Eaton Cooke, of Virginia, has made a searching investigation of the Pocahontas matter, and he is satisfied, from all the evidence to be had, that Smith was captured by a party of Indians in 1607 and carried to the Indian capital on York river, where Powhatan ordered him to be slain. Pocahontas interfered to save him. She took Smith's head in her arms, so that it was impossible to beat out his brains without hitting her. Powhatan consented to spare the prisoner and treated him kindly. Afterward Smith released some Indian prisoners, stating that is was for the sake of Pocahontas. He told his friends in Jamestown that Pocahontas had saved his life. In a letter to Queen Anne he said that he would be guilty of the deadly poison of ingratitude" if he forgot the goodness of Pocahontas. In several letters he gave to this girl credit for his escapes from death. In answer to this account that Pocahontas was flatteringly received at the English court. After her marriage to Rolfe she was baptized and lived sprightly and lovingly with her husband."

A Remarkable Parrot.

The following account of an intelligent speaking bird, which seemed almost to have been endowed with reason, was sent to us by a lady, one of our subscribers. Since receiving it we have the following assurance from the writer: "The account is strictly true. I have heard a great many wonderful stories about Miss Polly,' but these came under my personal observation."

—New York Observer.

MISS POLLY.

Last fall my colored cook asked me if she might have her parrot sent to her, and I rather unwillingly consented. One morning the village express wagon came to the door bringing "Miss Polly," who, to the great amusement of the driver, was talking very distinctly and sensibly. After dinner I went to the kitchen to see the new arrival, and as soon as she saw me she said, "Hello, gal!" Now why that parrot did not say "good-bye" or any other words was a mystery to me, but on a longer acquaintance I found he used words suitable for the occasion. The next morning while taking breakfast I left the door open, as Polly was alone in the kitchen, and soon I heard a voice, like a child's, singing these words, and to the right tune:

"In the cross, in the cross,
Be my glory ever,
Till my ransomed soul shall find
Rest beyond the river."

After a pause she said, "Sing, Polly," and then changed the tune and sang, "Oh think of the home over there," and then, I suppose thinking of breakfast, she said, "Polly want bread and butter," "Polly want tea," "Polly want potato."

After a little while I became very fond of Miss Polly, and she of me. When I went to the kitchen I would peep into the door, without saying a word, and, after a severe look, Polly would call, "What are you doing?" and when I entered she would jump for joy and say, "How do you do, love?" "Polly pretty well." Sometimes if I was giving directions to my cook, Polly would chatter so fast that you could hear no one else, and if I took a book in my hand she would make believe read in a continuous strain.

One of her great delights was to have me open the cage and let her come out and crawl upon the top, when she would say, "Aha, Miss Polly!" and laugh loud and long. One day, when she was enjoying her freedom on the top of the cage, I put my head down on my hands and made believe cry aloud. Polly gave me just a look, then came quickly down and jumped in my lap and looked in my face. I thought perhaps this exhibition of feeling was accidental, but I tried the experiment another day when Polly was behind the cage, and she climbed directly over and came in my lap as before.

One day some very little kittens came to the house. I took one and stroked it, and Polly looked on a moment, then came to the wires of her cage, put down her head and said: "Poor deserted Polly," in this way showing her jealousy of the kitten.

It was quite an amusement to the schoolchildren to hear her say her letters. They could call to her if she was in the yard, and she would answer them. One thing I found rather troublesome. If a child or a man ran quickly past the house she would call "Fire! Fire!" so loud that you could hear her a long distance off. She must have heard people cry fire in the streets of Brooklyn, where she formerly lived. Always when I left her she would say "Good-bye, love," or "Good-bye, dear."

One day I said to her: "Polly, how nice it would be if you could live again in another world." I was startled to hear her answer, "That's so."

These are a few of the singularly appropriate remarks Miss Polly made, and I am sure you will agree with me that she is a very wise bird.—S. T. W.

[We give the above a place in this column for our young readers just as we find it in the Observer. ED.]

Dear Children:

In the Book of Life, we read of a sweet memorial spot, where centuries ago, he, whose name signifies "Supplanter," spread his tent, and built an altar, calling it, "God the God of Israel." And here, the precious bones of him who for many years had been separated from his brethren, found a quiet resting place. It was nearly forty miles from the city of the Great King. The meaning of its name is, "A portion, or early in the morning." Here the springing waters of an ancient well poured out our blessed Redeemer, who was weary with his journey. No doubt his feet were tired, and dusty, as his fatigued body welcomed the spot which must have brought many sweet recollections to his mind. He was alone, but his solitude was soon broken by a woman, who was not an Israelite, but who had come to draw water from the well. Jesus said to her, Give me to drink. The woman was surprised Jesus should ask her for a drink, he being a Jew. Jesus answered her, If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me a drink, thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water. The woman saith Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep, from whence then hast thou that living water? Art thou greater than our father who gave us the well? Jesus answered, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again, but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst, but the water that I shall give him, shall be in him a well of water, springing up into everlasting life. The woman saith unto him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw.

Children beloved, the woman knew not that he, who was speaking to her, was God's precious gift to a lost world, that he was the well of salvation from which she with joy could draw the water of life freely, but Jesus knew her need, and offered it to her without money, and without price. Truly this well is deep, and many come to it having nothing to draw with, but the twisted cord of a longing desire, hopeful trust, and a persevering will, can reach it when securely fastened to the golden bucket of faith.

The woman said, Sir, I perceive thou art a prophet, because he told her all her past history. She was struck with the wonderful stranger she had met with. She entirely forgot the errand which had brought her to the well, and in haste returned to the city, proclaiming the truth, saying, Come, see a man which told me all things which ever I did. Is not this the Christ? and they followed her and came to Jesus, and many believed on him because of her testimony, and they entreated him to tarry with them, and he remained two days, and many more believed because of his own word, and said to the woman, Now we believe not because of thy word only, for we have heard him ourselves, and know, that this is indeed the Christ, the Savior of the world. You can see clearly why our blessed Redeemer must needs go through this place, which signifies, "A brier or thorn." He was the Sower who went forth to sow the good seed, or word of the kingdom. He said the fields were white ready for the harvest, and one whose name signifies "warlike" reaped what our Lord had sown, even as it is written, "when they heard the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they believed, and were baptized both men and women." We can all do as this woman did. Having heard the words of the Lord Jesus, we can say, Come. She did not despise his words because they came from the mouth of a Jew, but gladly embraced them when she heard that salvation was of the Jews, and claimed his right as the Messiah of God. Let him that heareth, say, come.

Your affectionate Teacher.

LONDON, July 26.—It is no longer doubted that the Mahdi is dead. A special agent of the late insurgent, who has often been sent on confidential missions to the Egyptian Government, has arrived at Cairo, and has fully confirmed the report that El Mahdi died of disease on June 22. The agent says, however that the warfare will be carried on as vigorously as ever, and will reach Upper Egypt by the end of this year.

It has been reported more than once that El Mahdi died of small-pox on June 20. A despatch from Cairo dated July 28 says the reports of the death of El Mahdi are confirmed from several sources, and it is asserted that the British Foreign Office has incontestable proof of his death.

SUAKIM, August 3.—The Mahdi has elected Abdullah for the Southern Soudan, Osman Digna for the Northern Soudan, Senussi for Egypt and Mallah Abdullahman for Kordofan and Darfur, to continue the war, and appropriated 20,000,000 piastres therefor.

LONDON, July 29.—Sir Moses Montefiore died of congestion of the lungs. His death was peaceful and painless. He will be buried next Friday, and his remains will be placed beside those of his wife at Ramsgate.

RAMSGATE, July 31.—The remains of Sir Moses Montefiore were buried here this afternoon. Business was suspended and the shops were closed. The weather was cloudy, but the attendance was vast. The funeral rites were of an unostentatious character, and the coffin was placed beside that containing the dust of the philanthropist's wife.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 30.—Dispatches from Smyrna state that two earthquake shocks were felt there today.

MADRID, July 29.—Cholera has broken out on the French frontier. One-fourth of the inhabitants of Montegnado, in Soria, have died with cholera during the past ten days. The survivors fled, with the exception of one gendarme, who remained to bury the bodies of the victims.

On Monday there were 1,758 new cases and 721 deaths from cholera in Spain. The number of deaths in Madrid is increasing.

MADRID, July 31.—There were 2,616 new cases of cholera in the plague-stricken districts yesterday, and 1,039 deaths for the same time.

The thunder storms prevailing here are increasing the cholera.

MADRID, Aug. 1.—The number of new cholera cases in Spain yesterday was 2,649, and deaths 849. In the city of Madrid 28 new deaths were reported today, and in the province of Madrid 40 new cases and 14 deaths.

During Saturday 3,820 new cholera cases were reported in Spain, and 1,464 deaths, and Sunday 3,807 new cases and 1,364 deaths. Among the victims is the Military Governor of Granada.

LONDON, July 28.—Sir Moses Montefiore died at 4:30 this afternoon. He was born Oct. 24, 1784.

Sir Moses Montefiore, the most distinguished Hebrew of the present age, was born in Leghorn. His ancestors were of distinguished lineage. Sir Moses had an engaging disposition and had hosts of friends. He entered the Exchange and became a member at the cost of $6,000—one of the twelve Jewish brokers licensed in the city of London. He wedded an Ashenazi Judith, a daughter of Levy Cohen, a wealthy and benevolent London merchant. In 1838 he was chosen Sheriff of London and served with distinction, being knighted by Queen Victoria in acknowledgement of his services. In 1840 a riot against the Jews broke out in Turkey and Sir Moses was sent from London to aid his people. He did them much lasting service and on his return was presented with an excellent service of plate by the Hebrews of London. In 1846 he went to St. Petersburg to intercede for the Jewish people in Russia, severe measures having been passed against them. His wife accompanied him on the trips, and both dispensed large alms to the poor people. On his return he was made a baronet. In 1858 he went to Rome to aid a Jewish boy.

In 1859 he visited the Ionian Islands on another errand of mercy. In 1867-9 he carried on the work of philanthropy in Roumania and Morocco. In 1872 he again visited Russia in the interests of the Israelites and was received by the Emperor Alexander. On the death of his wife, which occurred in 1862, he built a college at Ramsgate in her memory. His philanthropy was so great that it is said no one ever went away from his house hungry or empty-handed. His 100th birthday last October was celebrated by the Jews throughout the world.

PALESTINE.

"Still o'er her sky the clouds of anger roll,
And God's revenge hangs heavy on her soil.
Yet shall she rise!—but not by war restored,
Not built to murder,—planted by the sword.
Yes, Salem, thou shalt rise: thy Father's arm
Shall heal the wound his chastening hand has made;
He shall judge the proud oppressors ruthless sway,
And burst his brazen bonds, and cast his scorn away.
Then on your tops shall dwell in verdure (spring)
Break forth, ye mountains, and, ye valleys, sing!
No more your fertile rocks shall frown barren,
Your unbelieving lust, the mountain stream;
The rocky sands shall tenfold harvests yield,
And a new Eden deck the thorny field.
Flow now, purchased, white waters o'er the land,
That mighty Angel lifts his golden wand,
Courts the bright vision of the reeding powers
Tells every gate, and measures every towers;
And thinks the tardy souls that yet delay
Thy Lion, Judah, from his dwelling stay!
And who is He? the vast, the awful former
Girt with the whirlwind, sandaled with the storm?
A western cloud around his limbs is spread,
His crown a rainbow, and a sun his head.)
To highest heaven he lifts his saintly hand,
And treads at once the ocean and the land.
And, hark! his voice shakes the heavens' floor,
His wheels of fire that time shall be no more!
Ye chariot bands the golden reins prepare,
Lo, thousands wake, and every saint is there!
Earth's silence bursts, confess their awful sway,
The mountain worship, and the idol obey:
Nor sun nor moon they need,—nor day, nor night;
God is their temple, and the Lamb their light:
And shall not Israel's sons exulting come,
Hail the great week, and chant their ancient home?
On David's throne shall Hark's offspring reign,
And the dry bones be warm with life again?
Hark! white-robed crowds their deep hosannas raise,
And the hoarse flood repeats the sound of praise;
Ten thousand harps attune the rapt'rous song,
Ten thousand thousand shake the strain prolong;
Worthy the Lamb! omnipotent to save,
Who died, who lives, triumphant o'er the grave!"

The Great and Learned do not Acquaint Themselves with Bible Facts.

The Savior's Prediction.—"And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains, and let them which are in the midst of it, depart out; and let not them that are in the countries come thereinto; for these be the days of vengeance. * * * * And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled." Luke xxi. 20-24.

Observe, first—The time the Redeemer fixed and left on record for his followers and children to depart from that devoted city, was the time when it must seem to them they could not get out of her. How were they to escape after the invaders had surrounded them? The church in Jerusalem had increased sometimes as fast as several thousand in a day. How were these families to depart, when Jerusalem was compassed with armies? The sign named by the Savior as the token of their flight was of itself an impassable barrier in the way of their travel. The incident which dictated their hasty journey must necessarily hedge up their way. If the reader wishes a particular recital of many striking incidents let him turn to the cotemporary historian, (Josephus,) who was himself an actor in the military occurrences of the time. This much admired and much respected writer does not seem to have known or to have remembered that the Savior had said any thing of the Roman eagle standing where it ought not, or of Jerusalem being compassed with armies. When this siege did occur, he relates the circumstances truthfully, although it is evident he did not know that they were appointed of heaven. The banner which the soldiers worshipped, and which the prophet called the abomination which maketh desolate, waved before the temple gates. Josephus relates accurately the movements of the Roman general (Cestius) on that occasion. He informs us, that when he might have taken the city speedily, and with comparative ease, thus terminating the war at once, he led his army away. He retired "without any just occasion in the world." Josephus seems to want words to express his surprise at the conduct of his commander. Perhaps Cestius scarcely knew himself why he thus acted so much to the astonishment of beholders; but had we been there, knowing what we now know, we could have told all spectators and historians, the reason why he withdrew. God's people were in the city. His little flock (little in comparison with the multitude of the ungodly,) never noticed by the haughty of this world unless to deride or calumniate, are never forgotten by him. They were to seek safety in the mountains; they were to have an opportunity to retire. To afford this, the Roman legions must be taken to a proper distance. They were thus conducted, and the followers of the Savior with their families did retire. The young reader is here again reminded that we are not giving merely the Christian account of these things. He may gather these facts from the pens of ancient and modern unbelievers, if he prefers their testimony. When those who had vociferated "Crucify him, crucify him, his blood be upon us and our children," were crucified themselves, with their children, around the walls of their blazing city, nailed many on the cross, until there was no more space on which to plant a cross, and no more wood of which to make one; when famine, gnawing unparalleled famine, was doing a work along those crowded streets, the bare recital of which would cause the stupid, the callous, or the cruel, to faint with sickening horror, there were no Christians there! A few had gone to Pella. They had watched for the Redeemer's token, and obeyed the signal. Those words spoken by the Man of Calvary, unheeded by the world then, unnoticed by after generations, and that scoffers of the present age scarcely known in the Bible, were the means of their salvation. Let the reader bear these incidents in mind, until we come to the application.

Observation second—"And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles shall be filled."

An inspired apostle, (Paul,) at the command of the Holy Ghost, had given the church to understand (shall we say fortunately or unfortunately) that this fulness of the Gentiles was to synchronize with the conversion of the Jews at a glorious period in the latter days. The prophet Daniel, in the prediction quoted by our Lord, lets us know that the desolations of Jerusalem were to continue until the end of the struggle between Christ and antichrist. The Savior himself, in his discourses, lets us know that these long desolations would not terminate until the latter days. What an opportunity to defeat the declarations of the Messiah, and to show that Jerusalem should not be trodden down by the Gentiles through after ages. The Israelites have been rich enough to build a score of temples, during any period of their widest dispersion, or of their deepest, heaviest oppression. Notwithstanding the reiterated massacres, the constant apostacies or lapses into heathenism, the uninterrupted commingling with their oppressors, etc., etc., there has been no portion from any one of the eighteen centuries now gone by, during which there might not have been counted two millions or three, (a number sufficient to populate the hills and vales of Canaan,) and zealous enough to venture almost any thing, or to endure almost every thing, for the Zion of their songs. If some king of earth, some accepted potentate, would only sanction or countenance their return, what would they not perform? The Lord allowed them just such a man; nay, a more powerful leader. One who sat on Cesar's throne, who nodded and the nations trembled. The emperor Julian was an accomplished warrior. He ruled over the land shown to Abraham, and ten times as much. He hated the Savior as bitterly as those who crucified him. He had been educated under the sound of the gospel, and knew the words of Christ. He was familiar with the writings of the evangelists. He resolved that Jerusalem should no trodden under foot of the Israelites, instead of the Gentiles. The reader is invited to examine the account of this as given by one whose hatred of the gospel equalled that of Julian himself. The author of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire was under the necessity of stating facts concerning this effort to defeat the words of Christ, made by the mighty and the wise. At the invitation of the emperor, the children of Judah assembled to rebuild their temple and to claim the inheritance of their fathers. Their enthusiasm was wonderful. Even their delicate females were seen carrying off rubbish in their silver veils. Their joyful companies labored, cheered on by the sound of instruments of music and animating voices. But the emperor did not trust this undertaking to the Israelites alone. Wealthy as they were, devoted as they were, he resolved to make this matter more certain still. He could aid by his proclamations, his royal decrees, or his treasures, but it was not a trifle he had at heart; to show the gazing earth that the Jewish worship should be restored, where the Lord has said the Gentiles should continue to tread, was no ordinary achievement. He went himself to their aid with those cohorts and those legions that had crossed rivers, hills, and deserts, that have elevated or dethroned monarchs, and before whom it was hard to stand. Here then was to be a trial of the strength of heaven and the strength of the earth, in determined contest and fairly balanced opposition. Jews and Romans, Christians and heathens, gazed to see whether the emperor could or could not go contrary to the declaration uttered by the Man of sorrows, who had not where to lay his head. The earthly potentate was defeated. He abandoned the undertaking. This fact, recorded by Christians and by infidels, would be enough for our present purpose, were we to say nothing concerning the means of his defeat. To show that Jerusalem has been still trodden down of the Gentiles is mainly the point we have in view; and it is all we shall notice when we come to the application. But for the purpose of exhibiting the way in which opposers uniformly narrate that which they dislike to pen, (we must notice the strange want of fairness and of truth belonging to the unbelieving historians, leading them sometimes to conceal, and sometimes to pervert,) we look for a time at Gibbon's history of this event. He grants that it was said the workmen were driven from their work by a supernatural visitation; that they were scorched by fire again and again; that an account of this public and marvellous defeat was published the same year by two individuals—but these individuals were Christians. That their statement was neither denied by the emperor or his friends, nor contradicted in any way, does not seem to have weighed much in his estimate of the singular occurrence. It is true that Gibbon speaks well of a certain heathen writer, (Ammianus Marcellinus,) who was the emperor's private secretary, and who became his biographer. It is true he does not omit the fact that Ammianus records this incident; he even gives the words of this author (who knew as much of the defeat and the cause of it as did the emperor himself,) but they are placed below in a note, which many may overlook, and in Latin, so that many others may not understand, if the sentence is seen. The import of the words is that horrible balls of fire, breaking out from the ground, drove the scorched and blasted workmen to a distance, and the persevering element continued to maintain its ground until they were compelled to desist. If the historian had translated the words of Marcellinus, or placed them on the page along with his other quotations or assertions, telling us, that although this reputable heathen author was a spectator of these things, and was recording his own failure along with that of his master, still he (Gibbon) did not credit the recital, there would have been nothing unfair in the transaction. We should say, in all love and candor, let each one judge for himself; but partial information afforded, or facts half hid, in these cases, certainly evince repugnance to the unobstructed ray of light. It is not our object here to enquire how much credulity they must possess who can believe that no one was found to contradict these statements of Pagans and Christians, out of all the Jewish nation, and out of all the Roman army, or from the ranks of the admirers or flatterers of royalty. A sermon which was preached within that generation is still extant, addressed to the Israelites as a persuasive, leading them to obey the gospel; they were reminded of this noted overthrow, and invited to go and look again at the materials and other tokens of their rebuke from heaven whilst endeavoring to go contrary to the purpose of the Maker of worlds. We might pause and inquire how strange that any one wishing them to embrace Christianity, should remind them of that which they had never known, and speak to them of wonders which they had never witnessed, as though these marvels were fresh in their recollections: but these are not the points before us. The certainties alone are enough for our purpose. We know that Jerusalem has been trodden down of the Gentiles seventeen hundred years. We know that the Jewish worship was not restored, and that if a wealthy and enthusiastic people, aided by an emperor and his army, were not enough to build another temple, then nothing ever could accomplish it.

Application.—Should the reader desire to ascertain whether those who scoff at Holy Writ, do not occasionally have their curiosity at least awakened by such incidents as those above named, so far as to lead them on toward further inquiry; he may soon bring the matter to a fair trial by asking such questions as the author has often asked. Inquiring the reason why the Christians left the city, and were not involved in ruin and misery, such as the world had never seen before? Had they more political sagacity than their countrymen? Or why did not some fifty or a hundred thousand of the more prudent Jews retire to Pella, and share the safety which the Christian there enjoyed? Or, if the Church had been watching for the token, and obeyed the signal of the Redeemer, did he not only conjecture the sign, or was he Lord of armies? How did he know that the dispersion would continue, and that Jerusalem would never recover her Mosaic forms of worship? etc.

Those who make such inquiries of such as reject the gospel, at the present day, find with striking uniformity, that they do not remember, or they never knew accurately, what Christ had said of that people and that place. They are not informed as it regards Julian's sobriety, or his wish to disprove the prophecy: what unbelieving historians have acknowledged on these points; what were the sufferings, of those who killed the prophets and stoned the apostles, or indeed of any other fact or facts of this kind. It is only some hireling difficulty, some seeming contradiction, or some objection of their own against the Book of inspiration, which seizes and retains their thoughts when the subject of inspiration is mentioned.—From Nelson's Cause and Cure of Infidelity.

The Flight of Time.

Time is on the wing. We feel this, when we contemplate our own fleeting years, which pass so silently and so rapidly away, as memory takes us back to our sportive childhood, when we were friends with the "daisy" and the "buttercup," and the dewy lawn, was the scene of our rural pleasures in the twilight pastime, or the low seat in school with our lowly little friends was our daily portion. But yesterday we were little higher than the flowers we went to gather, and our tiny arms could scarce carry home the treasures we had collected; but how swiftly have all those scenes passed by, and how rapid have passed the moments that have brought us into the middle [illegible] to be wept is the irrevocable period of our life! Here we pause [illegible] man below; but then, so if for breath, and look back not [illegible] welcome the state we on our own brief existence, but [illegible] great voice is heard out into ages that like retreating waves [illegible] And there shall be no stretch back into the dim and distant [illegible] death." The sight would be a part.

From the pages both of profane and sacred history, we are instructed concerning the rapid flight and the destroying influence of Time. Go where we will—travel to distant countries—search remote nations, and everywhere we hear of victories, of conquerors, of kingdoms, whose glory has long since departed, whose existence or whose lustre has long since been annihilated or dimmed by the giant hand of Time!

Where now is the temple of dazzling splendor, with its wreathes and flowers of gold, that embodied the riches of a nation and held within its brilliant walls their affection and homage? Not one "stone is left upon another" of that magnificent and heaven-pinned structure. Not one vestige of its former glory remains to draw the footsteps of the wandering Jew to his beautiful temple!

Babylon's massive walls, soaring upward three hundred and fifty feet, with corresponding width, cemented till it became like solid stone,—ask the traveller what now remains of that wonderful inclosure, and that mighty city that stood within its strong protection? Those hanging gardens—those gates of brass—those strong towers—those fifty streets stretching fifteen miles in length—those palaces—that remarkable bridge, and all those elegant works of the most skilful artists? Time with its flight and decaying touch has only left traces that such a city has ever been.

Nineveh, whose greatness and power excelled all others, and that has so long slumbered in the tomb of ages, is at this very moment yielding up the relics of her sepulchre, to show us what Time in his flight has wrought! The mouldering ruins, where the trailing vines creep and the thistle and the wild weed grow unmolested, speak to our hearts in mournful accents that all things are tending to decay as the wings of Time rush by.

But the thousands that have passed the last year away from earth should most deeply impress us with Time's solemn though rapid departure; for soon the bright things of earth that now cheer us with their sunny aspect, will be to us as if they had never been. And how wisely should it teach us the golden value of a treasure that is the whole of our earthly existence, and that is all of our worldly wealth. How should we progress in improvement, receiving each day of Time as a new gift to be employed for high and noble purposes, gleaning knowledge from every source as the miner collects the grains of gold. How should we aim at all the good we can possibly accomplish, not deferring till some distant, far-off period, but at the present moment, the present day. Ah, yes—as if Time in its flight might bear us beyond the reach of opportunities of usefulness, let us cherish the passing hours, making them subservient to duty and all high and virtuous deeds, filling up the web of life with the beautiful tissue of Christian kindness and benevolence. And as the successive days pass, may we feel that we have not lived in vain, giving to heaven the incense of renewed and grateful hearts; that when Time with us shall be no more," we may enter upon eternity prepared for endless blessedness, never to be interrupted by the changes of the years, or destroyed by the tooth of Time.

Tears Wiped Away.

"God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Tears are the visible and affecting expressions of distress, and therefore, to say there shall be no more tears, is to say that all those causes of sorrow which exist in the present world shall be eternally removed. The text therefore adds, "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying," because these are the causes which rend the hearts of men, and suffuse their eyes with tears.

There shall be no more tears of separation. The longest and most painful separations are those which are caused by death; and what eye has not been dimmed with tears by this? He must have been unhappy indeed over whose unmoistened grave no tears are shed, and whose death has occasioned no regrets. But the number of these is few. Death rends all hearts. —When Joseph died, the children of Israel wept sore. "My father! my father!" exclaimed Elisha, when Elijah was taken away from him. "O my son, Absalom! O Absalom, my son, my son!" said the much moved David, as he went up to the chamber over the gate," that he might weep alone. And when his friend Lazarus died "Jesus wept." Well; be it so. To us it is [illegible] to be wept is the irreversible [illegible] And there shall be no more death." The sight would be a blot in the tabernacle of God. The rigid limb, the silent pulse, the breathless lid, the pallid cheek, the fixed and darkened eye,—these, these are not scenes of heaven. But this is the decree: "There shall be no more death." This shall restore and perpetuate your friendships, and wipe the tears of separation away forever.

And with the tears of separation pass away all those which pain wrings from the tortured body, or sorrow from the wounded spirit. Martyrs, you have been racked and torn, but there is now no more pain for you: for, like your Master, you have exchanged your crown of thorns for a crown of glory. Patient sufferers from disease, you could weep, though you could not murmur; but wearisome nights are no longer appointed you. Nor does the spirit, full charged with its inward griefs, pour the flood into the eyes. No publican here smites on his breast, exclaiming, "God be merciful to me a sinner!" No Peter the cowardly denier of his Lord, goes out to weep bitterly. No tears of shame and grief are shed over barrenness of spirit, and hardness of heart. Zion no longer cries, "The Lord hath forgotten me." "There shall be neither sorrow nor crying, nor any more pain."

And we may add, that there shall not be even tears of joy. For what do they suppose? The joy which finds relief in tears supposes a previous anguish, and that the change from one state to the other shakes the feebleness of mortality. Or it supposes that we are so unused to strong emotions, that our measure of joy is soon filled up; that even the bliss of earth may be too copious for the contracted vessel of our hearts, and therefore so easily overflows in tears. But there shall be no such alternations in heaven; nor will the capacity for blessedness be thus limited. Joy will not be so much a stranger that we shall weep at meeting it. It will be a habit, not accident. It will be, not the transient flash which dazzles, overpowers, and disappears, but the fixed and steady element in which we shall live forever.

And the text gives the reason of all this: "The former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new." How impressive and sublime is the scene thus presented!—Under the throne of him who is arrayed in the glory of the Father, He heaven and earth, the present seat of death, sorrow, and pain. He speaks, and they vanish, and the former things are passed away." He speaks again, and a new heaven and earth spring into being: "The tabernacle of God is with men;" and he that sitteth upon the throne saith, "Behold, I make all things new." What a dream our earthly sufferings and labors, our joys and our sorrows, appear! They have passed away, and a new world opens to our view to abide forever.

"While joy the sails [illegible]
Spreads all its canvas [illegible]
While joy our [illegible]
See the [illegible]
Wait for the [illegible]
But [illegible]
Where the tides [illegible]

And if the sailor thus, of [illegible], the tempest must be ruin heaved, and the laborer, though to-morrow's sun must awaken him to new labors, and shine again on the fetters of the slave, what is that joy, when the vessel of the last tempest rides upon the sea, when the last harvest is completed, and our chains fall off for ever! Behold, he creates all things new! The heavens are new, the earth new, clouds unseen now, and new for this reason, that all is perfect, and all unchangeable.—Watson.

SPIRITUAL RELIGION.

Man has an unspiritual nature and tendency. We often hear of man's religious instincts, and such a one is said to be naturally religious, but the religion in all such cases is not a spiritual one. It is a mere sentimentality, the expression of ennui or weariness with earth's deceitful joys, a mere negation, or else it is a devotion to form and manner, to routine and ceremony. In neither case is there a particle of godliness in the religion. Man is by nature sinful and hates God. A religion to suit him must be a religion that degrades God to his own level and makes his worship a fraud; and that is a religion virtually without God. The Jews, with a perfect religion given them by God, with priests and prophets to remind them of a spiritual service, and with a written word from God demanding the homage of heart and life, perverted all this more and more until nothing but a form of religion remained, with all the spirit gone. It was the regular process of the human heart to hate, oppose and crush out all that is truly [illegible] that because of sin, because the divine testifies against sin and brings it [illegible] before the soul. Hence when the gospel came to the Jews, instead of being prepared for it as they ought to have been, and would have been if they had rightly used Moses and the prophets, they rejected it with [illegible] violence, persecuting its [illegible] after crucifying the Messiah himself. Paul, who for a time took part in the scorn and violence, but who through a deep experience was brought into the humble and energetic service of the Messiah he had himself persecuted, put the whole truth in a succinct sentence when he said, "The carnal mind is enmity against God."

This natural enmity to God and spiritual things will show itself in acts of opposition. It will develop as all feeling develops, into action, and it will attempt to justify itself by action corresponding to the feeling. In refined times and places, it will not take the rough form of bodily persecution. It may accommodate itself to all the requirements of polite society. But both the enmity and its activity are as potent in these circumstances as in those of the ruder peoples. A literature that makes light of spiritual religion, a philosophy that attacks it, a manner of life that wounds or corrupts it, are some of the forms of this enmity which prevail now among us in this nineteenth century, and in the countries most civilized and where Christianity is most thoroughly disseminated. The mob rushing on Paul could not do as much harm to the cause of truth as those polished assailants of spiritual religion who wear a mask of friendship and courtesy in their onsets. They carry away many of our inexperienced youth, and give the fatal bias to their lives. The world's fashion is on the side of enmity to God, and into this fashion the mass of youth pours. On every side in this false society are the assaults upon truth made. In the name of art and literature everything is offered to excite the sensual passions, and in the name of business success everything is offered to promote the narrowest selfishness of the human heart. To remain outside of this maelstrom is to be peculiar and puritanic. He who has the courage to remain outside must incur ridicule, contempt, slander and ostracism. Blessed, indeed, of the Lord is he who cheerfully and happily thus takes up his cross to follow his Master! Blessed is he who by his singular life bears testimony against a godless world and the nominal Christianity that fraternizes with it!—Howard Crosby, D. D.

THE EMPIRE OF THE GREAT MOGHUL.

In A. D. 1557 the greatest potentate which India has ever seen ascended the throne: and history points with the deepest pride to the illustrious Akbar, as surrounded with all the intellect of the Eastern world, attracted to his court by the moderation and toleration of the author of the celebrated institutes which bear his name, he discussed matters of state and affairs of public interest. Among the numerous measures which this enlightened ruler introduced was the abolition of the poll and pilgrim taxes, and the establishment of a land revenue, for the principle of which latter innovation he was indebted to his minister, the well known Todar Mal. It is not ordinary modes of praise to say of the solemn decree in which it forms the basis of the "Settlements" prevalent at the present day throughout the length and breadth of the empire in India. In Akbar's time the annual revenue of the whole was computed at three hundred millions and upwards of £10,000,000 sterling.

If Akbar was an eclectic, his son and successor, Jahangir was a "many"—a drunkard to the amount of six quarts of spirits a day. The one redeeming feature in his character is his love for and devotion to his accomplished and beautiful wife Nur Jahan. The Mughul empire was then at its zenith, the splendid "Peacock's throne" at Delhi being typical of all that can appeal to the senses or enchant the imagination. It was the very embodiment of "might, majesty, dominion, and power." Yet what a change a few short years were destined to accomplish. Within was inconceivable luxury and enfeebled administration, without were the ravages of Pathans from Afghanistan, Rohillas from the north, Mahrattas from the south, Persians and Sikhs from the west, and, to crown all, rebellion stalking in the east. But the hand to strike was wanting when the mind to direct was enfeebled by indulgence and enervated by vice; and the mighty empire of the Great Mughul began to crumble and decay. True, the vigor and genius of individual monarchs stayed for a while the hand of Fate, but the decree had gone forth from the portals of heaven that the dynasty had been "weighed in the balance and found wanting." Two centuries sped away ere the crisis came. During that period a small cloud like a man's hand had arisen, and rapidly extended over the whole horizon—a mere handful of British settlers had developed into a mighty race of conquerors and rulers, at whose feet the representative of the proudest of India's sovereignties—the Great Lord of Earth and Sea—the mighty Mughul, now "a blind and half-starved pensioner," paid homage, "under a tattered awning, and passed from the hands of a paid jailer into those of a British resident." Behold, everything is vanity, saith the Preacher! The splendid heritage of dominion and power was thenceforth destined to grace the brow of the "faring-bit" from England's shores.—The Academy.

MARRIED.

BEASON—LENWELL.—July 26, 1885; at the residence of J. L. and S. R. Wince, by Elder Wm. T. Jaffin, Mr. C. C. Beason and Frances Adelia Lenwell.

Oh, peace and joy be thine our foster child.
In this new life to which we give thee now;
Thy days be like the twilight soft and mild,
Writing new beauties ever on thy brow.

May God go with thee and thy chosen one,
That from thy home his blessed light may shine,
And like the glorious rays of yonder sun,
Lead other feet into the paths divine.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:
THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a beauty belief of the simple, unpretentious, and immaculate appropriation to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for daily salvation.

To The Church of God in Christ Jesus—Greeting in His Name.

And the witness is this, that God gave unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath the life; he that hath not the Son hath not life.—1 John v. 11, 12. R. V.

The above texts are in harmony with the teachings of the entire word, wherein we learn God's plan of salvation for man, as wrought out by, in, and through his only begotten Son.

Paul in 1 Cor. xv., speaking of the different phases of animated creation concedes to each its own peculiar body. It is a fixed law of creation that every body contains within itself power to reproduce itself, and to every seed is given a body as it hath pleased God; any attempt to modify or change this law results in the production of that which is imperfect.

For every species of living nature whether in the animal or vegetable world, there is a principle of life perfectly adapted to that species of life, which vital principle not only sustains it in life, but enables it to repeat itself by reproduction.

In looking back to the morn of creation we learn that the All Wise then endowed each and every branch of his vast creation with this vital principle and constituted each member of the then present creation as the source through which each separate kind of life should pass, in order to perpetuate each kind of life to itself. Infinite wisdom marks the whole. The life bestowed on Adam was but a mortal life. The same living principle that vitalized all the animal creation and sustained each order in their separate spheres, by inhalation and exhalation exactly modified to suit their respective physical organisms.

All things are of God. He is the Great first Cause of all. All things that live and move and have a being are of him, for he it was who called all things into life. He it is, who sustains in life all things that exist. David says in Psa. civ. 29, "Thou hidest thy face—they are troubled: Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust." They go back to the elements from which they were made. It may be suggested, To what portion of the animate creation has this reference. Turning to Gen. vii. 21-23; we find it definitely settled. "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl and of cattle and of beast, and of every thing that creepeth upon the earth and every man.—"All in whose nostrils was the breath of the spirit of life, of all that was in the dry land died." From these passages as from the entire unfolding of the Scripture we learn that though the life principle imparted was especially adapted to each separate form of life; yet was it of the same essential quality as to its vitalizing power, and when withdrawn, or suspended all the multitudinous forms of life sustained by it, ceased to exist and again returned to dust.

The life given at the creation was only a temporal—a natural life, and we have seen its end. But there is another life brought to light in the word, to which we ought to give more earnest heed, first because it is eternal; and second, because we are left free to accept or reject it. Man in his primal state was neither endowed with this life, nor was he commanded to accept it as a gift. He was left perfectly free to choose for himself; and in this we behold the infinite wisdom of Jehovah, for only by permitting the exercise of free will, could an intelligent character have been developed. The first means to attain to a higher, an immortal life was by partaking of the tree of life. It was the embodiment of immortality, and the means ordained to reach this end, was to eat of the tree of life which grew in the midst of the garden. This was the only possible means whereby human life might be extended into the eternal years—and human beings alone were given free access to that means. If they desired life eternal, the means to that end was within their reach. If they desired it not, we have no Scripture evidence that it would have been passed upon them. As soon however as man sinned, he was denied access to the means which would lead him to the life immortal: and here again we behold infinite wisdom. Could man have partaken of the tree of life after his transgression, and in a mental condition at enmity to God that life would have been a curse, not a blessing. But immediately after his transgression, he was removed, and forever excluded from that source of attaining to immortality.

By, or through sin, death came into our world, and beyond that fearful chasm, there shone for man no ray of hope. The seeds of death had taken fast hold on his vitals. The sentence had gone forth—dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return, and beyond this all was an eternal blank. The tree of life was no longer for him. In it had rested his only hope of an endless life, but it was no longer his to take and eat. But here comes the promise of victory over death—Death indeed had come, but here is a promise of one who shall prove the victor over death. Of one who shall yet crush, utterly destroy, and wipe out the last stain of the curse, Gen. iii. 15. I will put enmity between thee and the woman and between thy seed and her seed. It shall bruise thy head, thou shalt bruise his heel. By diligently searching through the Divine Oracles we find this seed to be the Christ of God, the seed of the woman, not of man. The only begotten of the Father, who by Divine appointment was designed to take the place of the tree of life to our race. He was to be the embodiment of immortality—the only way to life beyond the grave. This high and important office demanded for him a higher life than could have come through human paternity—and therefore was he the only begotten Son of God.

When we are removed from a means which would have led to a certain end, and another means is provided whereby we may attain to that same end, we jointly say, that the second means presented, is a substitute for the first, and represents it. Unless one thing be removed or abandoned, another cannot be substituted for it.

In this our first creation, the only "missing link" in the tree of life. The "genus homo" has been present on the earth, since his first introduction into Eden—therefore he needs no substitute or representative. He stands to-day before Jehovah as the fleshly heir of him who by violation of a just command, forfeited eternal life. That life was not before him through means of the tree of life and through it alone. While yet free from sin, he could have attained to that life simply by putting forth his hand, taking, and eating.

Transgression changed his nature, and divine wisdom ordained that another and a better means to attain to eternal life should be substituted. A means which would not only embody the immortal principle, but also purify from sin, that transgressions might be blotted out, and men again be placed at one, or in harmony with his Creator Disbelief led to disobedience, and placed men at enmity with Jehovah. Faith leads to obedience, and reconciles that enmity and places man at one or in harmony with his Creator.

The act of separation was voluntary, was an act of the will; so also must be the act of reconciliation. Faith is a voluntary acknowledgement of God's wisdom in providing a way from the present, to a higher life. The way he has provided is his only begotten Son. Without faith (in him), it is impossible to please God. Heb. xi. 6. Only by exercising faith in the promise he has given we become reconciled to God. We must believe the record that God has given us of his Son. Through the inspired word we learn that while Jesus was on earth he said to his followers "I am the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh to the Father but by me." "I am the door, by me if any man enter he shall go in and out and find pasture." "I am the bread that came down from heaven of which if man eat he shall live forever." By these and many other similies and parables he taught that he was the absolute and only means through which eternal life might be attained. He was to accomplish the embodiment of immortality. We are also taught that it was the Father's plan that he should impart out the entire race and through the unfolding ages mould, and change, and immortalize, every son and daughter of Adam into his own glorious image. The only begotten Son of God, pure, holy, harmless, separate from sinners, he in whom there was no sin, could not represent the sinner. He did, and he does represent the way to life, and so will he continue to represent the only way to life until he returns to reign as a King over earth restored. Then will the tree of life be restored and its leaves will be for the healing of the nations.

The first Adam did not represent the race. He only represented the channel through which the human race came into existence. Life, from the dawn of creation was manifested through myriad channels, but none was human life save that which came through Adam. He represented the only channel through which human life came, so of the Christ. He represents the only channel through which life immortal may be obtained.

Being but unconscious atoms of matter anterior to birth, we are without our volition brought into temporal life. Then endowed with consciousness and volition we are left free to chose or reject spiritual life.

The following article was sent to The National Baptist for publication. But they having neglected to publish it, I send it to you. I think, in the interests of the truth, it should be published. Will you kindly insert it in THE RESTITUTION and oblige.

Editor of The National Baptist:

I notice in your issue of April 9th ultimo, a communication by J. M. Pendleton, D. D., under the heading "Materialism Impossible." In reference to which I would be pleased to be allowed the privilege of making some respectful remarks.

It appears that "Dr. Halstead, Professor of Mathematics in the University of Texas," says, Materialism is scientifically impossible. J. M. Pendleton, D. D., explains or defines materialism to be the belief of those who hold "that as the mind acts in connection with the brain, its action must cease at death until the resurrection; and they have therefore repudiated the doctrine of the soul's immortality," according to the view of Archbishop Whately.

Dr. Halstead's position is, that scientists have demonstrated that all "the various natural forces of the universe are so constituted and connected, that they can neither be increased nor diminished as a whole, that this law holds good for the processes of organic nature. If, now, mind is a part of the material world; if what we call mental energy is really a part of the sum of real energy connected with real matter in the universe, then some of this invariable quantity of energy exists from time to time as mental energy, and so that we would expect to be able to say that a certain amount of chemical energy disappears but reappears as mental energy, or perhaps disappears as mental energy but reappears as mechanical energy or heat. But the absolute tests of science demonstrate that such is never the case. No bit of physical energy ever disappeared as physical energy to become even for an instant mental energy.

There is not a single point in the series of changes which take place in the brain at which all the energy is not in actual existence as physical energy. There is not a point where anything of the nature of thought could be inserted, as a possible link in the chain of transformations of energy. Thought and physical energy, then, are totally different in essence and kind, and one can never be transformed into the other. Therefore materialism is scientifically impossible."

Now while it is true that thought and physical energy are totally different, yet I think the above contains radical mistakes. He seems to use "mind" and "mental energy," and "thought," as all the same thing, which is a great mistake. He says, "If mind is a part of the material world," etc. If he means by mind "thought," then of course it is not a part of the material world but, if he means that which thinks, then, even it is not a part of the material world, except in connection with the great universal life-force. To speak of mental energy as thought is also a radical error.

Mental energy is simply the life-force. Whereas thought is the result of the connection of mental energy (or life) with the organization—organs of the brain. The mental organization, endowed with life—mental energy—evolves or produces thought. Neither mental energy nor mental organization, can be thought. But mental organs being endowed with the life-force, through the medium of the air or breath, (in connection with the lungs) which is the vehicle of the life-force, thought is thus produced. The sum of the universal life-force with the organs, endows them with the power to think, which is their native function when alive. Just in the same way, the organs of speech, of respiration, of sight, of taste, of digestion and assimilation, of the circulation of the blood, of expurgation of offete and refuse matter, and of all the other physical organs, are rendered capable of performing their natural functions, by union of the life-force with the entire organization or body through the medium of the breath, as aforesaid. Animal "physical energy" and "mental energy" are one and the same—simply life-force, not thought, nor [illegible] but the cause of [illegible] with the organs [illegible] imbibing the [illegible] act. The terms [illegible] used to mean [illegible] and sometimes [illegible] the result [illegible] ing faculties [illegible] —the lungs [illegible] sight and [illegible] functions [illegible] nection with [illegible] cal energy"—so [illegible] of thought, the [illegible] organs of the brain. Hence to mere mental energy, as thought is a great and fundamental error.

Therefore "[illegible] Materialists" as Dr. Pendleton pleases to call them, may be scientifically right in their conclusions; that as soon as the life is extinct, as soon as the physical energy or life force ceases its connection with the organization, through the incapacity of the organs of respiration, as the result of disease; that is, "from death to the resurrection," the mental organs as well as all others, cease to perform their natural functions, cease to act. But the life-force or mental energy, of course still continues to exist; but it is neither thought nor thinking organs, nor an immortal soul or personal being.

So also the life-force becomes connected with the organic germ of a tree, through the medium of earth and air, and thereby is the building up of a large tree, manifesting almost thought and intelligence, in the germination and production always of its own genus, with its own peculiar and perhaps beautifully rounded body and shaped branches, and lovely foliage; and altogether just sufficient in size to not overtax the power of the roots, to maintain it in all its stateliness and beauty. So also with the lovely "lilies of the field which array themselves more gorgeously than even Solomon in all his glory." If the Creator has constituted vegetable material, so as to do all this when connected with his life-force; is it a marvel that animal material—the brain of man made in the image of God—should be so constituted and organized as to be capable of thought, intelligence and wisdom when connected with the same universal and wonderful life-force?

Those so-called "Christian Materialists" hold that these scientific facts are in perfect harmony with the Scriptures, which say, "Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust," Psalms civ. 29. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 4. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was and the spirit (life-force) contained in the breath, return unto God who gave it," (at creation, when he "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life," not an immortal soul, and "MAN became a living soul"—Gen. ii. 7. "The dead know not anything." Eccl. ix. 5 and xii. 7.) Hence, they hold with Dr. Pendleton, that, "As the God of nature is the God of Revelation, there can be no real antagonism between science and the Bible. Apparent discrepancies no longer appear where the TRUE light shines." Those "Christian Materialists" will no doubt think it clear, that "the statement" which Dr. Pendleton was delighted to hear, contained a fundamental error, which is therefore a misunderstanding and contradiction of both science and Scripture.

As to their "repudiation of the doctrine of the soul's immortality," a similar strange mistake has obtained. They hold that MAN himself is the soul. Hence, "what is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose himself." Luke ix. 24. That at creation, he was made or "became a living soul," (not immortal) by "God's breath of life"—"the breath of the spirit of life." Gen. vii. 22, margin.

As Job says, "All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils." That is, the breath which God gave him. Job. xxvii. 3, margin. "If he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath (not immortal soul, but his breath, which contains the spirit of life, or life-force) all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust." Job xxxiv. 14. They hold that the (nephesh) breath contains the (ruach) spirit of (chay) life; and for that reason the spirit of life and the breath are often (doubtless) used when [illegible] dust returneth to earth as it was, and the spirit (or breath) to God who gave it," [illegible] not surely die," as the [illegible] "the father of lies," said to [illegible]. But that the real man, the living soul does die. And that man, a "living soul" can become an immortal soul or being. In God's appointed way—by "seeking for immortality by patient continuance in well doing," Rom. ii. 5-7, after believing the gospel and being baptized into the one name and "one body"—the one family or "household of God," which immortality, and its consequent, eternal life, are to be "rendered" to him at the resurrection, by Christ, the Life-Giver; his identity being preserved between death and resurrection, in the mind of God—the life being "hid with Christ in God." (Sharknight.)

They hold that between death and the resurrection, the children of God "sleep in Christ," as the word says, in a perfect sleep, which therefore knows no passing of time, though it be thousands of years: hence exactly the same to them as though the resurrection followed them the very next moment. That when Christ returns, he will do as he said, "raise them up at the last day." "The dead in Christ shall rise first." not merely their dead bodies, but themselves, as "resurrection of the body" does not occur in the Scriptures, but always "resurrection of the dead."

Paul says: when the dead in Christ are raised, they shall be caught up or away to meet the Lord in the air: to meet him implies a turning about, and returning with him, and so he will "come with ten thousand of his saints" not from heaven, but from where they meet him, "and so ever be with the Lord." "For them which sleep will God, through Jesus, (R. V. and Dia.) bring with him," for as Jesus was "brought again from the dead," so will the sleeping members of his body be brought (raised) 1 Thess. iv. 14-17; and Heb. xiii. 20. Not once in all the Scriptures are we told that the righteous go to heaven when they die, either as an immortal soul or any other way. As the patriarch "David is not ascended to heaven, but is both dead and buried," Acts ii. 29-31. so also is the same thing true of all the righteous dead.

This is their understanding of mortal immortality—that immortality will be natural after the mortal nature shall have been changed to immortal nature—"the Divine nature," 2 Pet. i. 4, after this mortal shall have put on immortality"—the spirit nature of "the King of kings and Lord of lords: who only hath immortality" inherent. They hold, that, as "immortal soul," "natural immortality of the soul," are terms not once found either in nature, science, or Scripture, they cannot be correct. But there are many, even scientists, and philosophers, as well as theologians, who, through the various confusing, distracting theories and "isms" of popular theology, have become so beclouded in mind, as to this question of immortality, that they strangely confound "eternal life," "future life," or "the possibility of future life," with "the immortality of the soul;" using and treating these terms, as all expressing the same idea or doctrine. A. Wilford Hall, who has become so widely and favorably known within the last few years; in his very able work, "The Problem of Human Life," on pages 523 and 524, made the above named unaccountably strange blunder. Large numbers who do not believe in the popular doctrine of the "immortality of the soul," do believe most firmly, and with much rejoicing, in "the possibility of man attaining to an immortal nature, and its consequent, "eternal life"—an incorruptible spirit or Divine nature—"the gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord"—which is the "one hope of the gospel," which man has not by nature, but "which God that cannot lie promised before the world began, or long ages ago," (R. V.) upon condition of [illegible] dience, in and to the name of Jesus [illegible] not ceased to [illegible] ing, and [illegible] not [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Of all the obnoxious theories afloat at the present time there is none more repugnant to our own feelings than the one claiming that our Lord Jesus Christ was a natural son of Joseph. This is perhaps enough to say at the present time, and for our own vindication we could not say less. We may add, however, that the proper place for discussing this theory, if one contradicting so many plain Scriptures must be discussed at all, is in papers that advocate that view, and not in THE RESTITUTION. As a matter of justice to Brother H. V. Reed we shall probably next week give his reply to some questions designed to criticise an article of his that appeared not long since in THE RESTITUTION.

BETWEEN Russia and England the attitude of each to the other is very much like an armistice between contending armies in time of war. Military preparations are progressing just as actively as though war was a foregone conclusion. War councils are held weekly in Afghanistan and large sums are laid aside by the Ameer to be used in fortifying Herat, for the defence of which he is also raising a large body of native troops. The warlike feeling still prevails in Russia, and it is claimed by a leading French journal that England and China have concluded an alliance for mutual action in the event of a conflict between England and Russia. From the dismal cloud brooding over the Eastern world a tempest is likely to burst that will overturn thrones and sweep existing dynasties away.

QUERIES.

Admitting the Sabbatarians' approved inference to be correct—which we do not—that God enjoined the observance of the Seventh Day upon Adam and Eve in Eden before they transgressed his law concerning the tree of knowledge of good and evil, will those same Sabbatarians please unerringly point out of what avail Sabbath keeping would be to them and their posterity in their fallen condition as guilty sinners condemned to death. We would like to have it explained as to just what extent laws made to govern the relation of sinless beings in Paradise to their Creator would benefit rebellious transgressors after being sentenced to death for their crime and then expelled from God's presence in the blissful Garden, even if observed. Would the observances ordained for the Holy Angels in their heavenly condition avail anything for those fallen angels who kept not their first estate even if observed by these lapsed beings? Tell us something about God's subsequent arrangements with lost man will be no answer to our question about the perpetuity of an Edenic law. There is another question back of this which is—If a Sabbath law was given to Adam and Eve in Paradise, what was its penalty? A law without a penalty is a nullity. If death was the penalty, then there were at least two positive institutions enjoined upon sinless beings for the non-observance of which they would be inevitably doomed to capital punishment. The Bible teaching is clear and precise that there was only one positive institution enjoined upon man in Paradise to which death was affixed as the penalty for disobedience.

Editor Restitution:

I was one of the original subscribers and contributors to THE RESTITUTION. But have not seen it for years except an occasional number. Lately however Sister Carrie Williams has sent it to me pretty regular. I have been much interested in many good articles I have found in it. But I am prompted to write this, to suggest to you that the name of your paper "THE RESTITUTION" is the most important, significant and applicable to the programme of Christianity that could be used at this most eventful period of history.

We look for the execution of the covenants and the performance of their promises, but how can this be accomplished without the restoration of the nation and kingdom of Israel?

The covenant says, "and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." When the seed of Abraham became a nationality God would place them in their rightful covenant relation to the nations, hence his purpose to constitute them a kingdom of priests to mediate if they would faithfully keep his covenant which he proposed to them as recorded, Ex. xix. 5, 6. This is why when he separated the seed of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. Deut. xxxii. 8. Priests are intermediaries between parties who are estranged. The nations are at enmity again God. He would have "the lot of his inheritance" restored to himself that they might fully understand this and be reconciled natures.

As Israel failed to keep her covenant obligation she became incompetent to fill her mission. She was endured as a loving father endures a wayward restless disobedient child, till the persistence in the ways of the Gentiles induced her father to constitute the Gentile executioners of his wrath upon them. Hosea says, "O Israel thou hast destroyed thyself; but in me is thine help. I will be thy King: where is any other that may save thee in all thy cities? and thy Judges of whom thou saidst, give me a king and princes? I gave thee a King in mine anger, and took him away in mine wrath." Hence the language of the prophet Ezekiel to Zedekiah. "Thou profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come when iniquity shall have an end, thus saith the Lord God, remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him."

Thus the kingdom of Israel, the throne of Israel, the diadem of Israel was removed out of the way "overturned, overturned, overturned" to be soon, known or acknowledged no more, till he come, whose right it is." Who did this? The head of the Metalic Image, or Gentile government. Seeing Israel rejected God from reigning over them, and chose a visible ruler, God gave them human enmity against himself in [illegible] as their ruler and as executioner of his wrath by [illegible] of their voluntarily assumed covenant obligations to him. Since then the Gentiles have been God's ministers to execute wrath upon them which do evil. The consequence has been that, God's people, God's kingdom, God's throne, God's diadem, have not as yet been restored. But we are assured that God has provided a king to whom and on whom he has conferred all that he consigned to oblivion in the person of Zedekiah. This king he has manifested to the world, and especially to the Jewish nation for identification as the promised seed of Abraham, the promised Son of David, and the promised Son of God.

He was legally identified by the genealogical record of the nation, as of the seed of Abraham, and also the son of David. By the voice from the excellent glory, as the Son of God as well as the cloven tongues of fire. And again by his resurrection from the dead.

After these demonstrative manifestations of his identification as the rightful heir to the overturned throne and kingdom of Israel, He ascended to heaven in the presence of the assembled disciples to receive his investiture of Royalty, that when he returns, he may bring his kingdom with him.

When he had reached the right hand of the majesty on high, and perhaps had already received his investiture, the Father said to him, "sit thou on my right hand till I make thy foes thy footstool," in other words till I make it manifest that notwithstanding I am "the invisible," and all fallen humanity has manifested an indisposition to be governed by any but visible rulers, that I, the invisible, have ever ruled them, and do now rule them, and have made their visible rulers who are my ministers the willing, joyful and acceptable footstool of my Son. When this is fully accomplished then David's Lord and Christ will come and claim the kingdom of Israel as his own, and the sayings of what is written will be understood—"salvation is of the Jews." The kingdom must exist before the nations can be blessed. Hence Peter's affirmation that our Father shall send Jesus who already has been preached to you and legally identified among you, "whom the heavens must retain until the times of restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began."

His retention therefore at the right hand of the Father has been part of the programme and necessitated that all the [illegible] agencies for the blessing of [illegible] should remain in [illegible] as long as the Gentile government continued to act as God's ministers.

We see that the little steps that has in the meantime been put out of this great mountain government without hands, that is without manifest or visible agency, will smite the image or its feet and precipitate its perfect overthrow. This however not before the king returns.

Your name is correct and embraces the faith of the gospel. There is no promise due till the times of restitution of all things." And if due they could not be executed till the kingdom is restituted, as it constitutes the channel through which alone they can be performed, or our Father can use to his purposes.

It is in the regeneration. In the restitution our hopes, the hopes of Israel, the hopes of the world are consummated. G. B. STACY.

C. B. H. N.—Though my private letter may have been deemed enough, yet a faithful witness is bound to cling to "the word of faith," both for himself and "the household of faith." It involves the integrity of truth and its author.

1. Through some six thousand years we have the record of God dealings with man, personally, nationally, and dispensationally! Did Adam and Eve escape death, with its cause by argument? Gen. iii. 3-21. Rom. v. 12. Did the antediluvians escape the catastrophe of the flood by their boldness, audacity and violence? Did Israel, though delivered from Egypt, sustained by unnumbered miracles and chastened by God's prophets—escape captivity and national destruction? Nay. Did they escape the dispersion and depredation of their remnant among their Gentile oppressors, as foretold? No! No! No! There is but this one truthful answer.

2. On this basis of God's word and its matter-of-fact fulfilment we find for our age "faith in Christ" justifies, while unbelief, "condemns!" Those who believe and take in "the spirit of Christ" are "the wheat" worthy to be garnered as needed for "the kingdom!" But those (as the serpent beguiled Eve by his subtlety) who become "corrupted from Christ," are "the tares" to the "burned up." Matt. xiii. 30-43; 2 Cor. xi. 3. The gospel net also "gathers of every kind; and when drawn to shore—[illegible] gather the good into vessels, but [illegible] Matt. [illegible] written in the [illegible] into the lake of fire—[illegible] death!" Rev. xx. 12-15.

In this brief outline we have the first and last—the beginning,—intermediate and ending of God's grand ordering of human destiny—the end of evil and all again "good!" Amen.

Now what avails an argument from "dust and ashes" to contradict Revelation—human experience and history? —the record of God's administration! All men have the right to overcome evil and establish good, to the utmost; in their sphere. How much more so with God!

The righteous are saved, the wicked lost,—and the ways of God vindicated. Amen and Amen. Psa. lxxii.

Surely it is a preposterous, inexcusable and ruinous mistake to deny to God, the duty and privilege that each man has to "put away dross" (Psa. cxix. 119,) nuisance or wrong; and so set things right about him.

Righteousness needs no wrong—gold needs no dross—wheat needs no tares! Nay further, they cannot be confounded, but so far as they become corrupted!"

"Wisdom is profitable to direct:" that is, Christians are held to exercise common sense! Thus, they "grow in grace and wisdom from above."

Lovingly for the right and true.

Deeds, Not Years.

The deeds, not years, that make a life
Serene long upon the earth,
A man may live till fourscore years
Is counted from his birth.
But when at length he hears the knell
Of mother's last greatest toil,
A marble mark will [illegible]
He lived, and that is all.

A man, living [illegible]
Will fill with deeds his span;
And though he dies, he still will live
Within the heart of man.
No crumbling marble to remind;
[illegible]
But [illegible]
[illegible]

There is no [illegible]
In useful life or duty,
As planting some [illegible]
Or [illegible]
Thus, though a simple shrub on earth
Their deeds would mock, it brighter

The Beautiful.

True beauty is moral and spiritual. What is all material beauty compared with it? The song of birds, the starlit firmament the many-colored [illegible] how the expanses of evening sky are beautiful. Heaven's light as it streams over castle tower, and town—sunrise upon the Alps—sunset on the lake, are beautiful. Men spend health, time, and money in search of the beautiful, but, after all, it chiefly consists in character. Material forms of beauty are ill-at-ease, but beauty of character has a deathless life; it withers not with the bloom on the cheek. [illegible] into [illegible] The beauty of holiness never fade.

Little Bettie.

"Hand me [illegible] water [illegible] won't you?"

"In a minute, Bettie."

And Bettie's feverish cheeks were pressed again to the pillow; and little Harry's hands went on as busy as ever with the trap he was making, and at length he entirely forgot the request.

"Please get it now, Buddy," he at last heard, and scattering knife, fingers, and strings in haste, he was soon holding a cup to her crimson lips. But she turned her head languidly from it.

"Not this, please; but some fresh and cold from the well," she said.

"Oh, don't be so particular, Bettie, this is fresh; and I'm so busy I can't go now won't this do?"

She no longer refused, but quietly took the cup which he offered; and it was the last, last time she ever called upon her brother for an act of kindness; for another day had passed, the little sufferer was dead. And of all who wept over the little brown coffin, as it lay on the table before the pulpit, there were none who shed more bitter tears than the little boy who could not forget that he had refused the last request of his little sister.

Little children, are you kind to one another, or are you cross, selfish and fretful? Remember, then, the time will come when they will be beyond your reach, and then. Oh how gladly would you give all you possess to have them back again. You might gather all your books and toys—everything for which you are so willing to contend—but all you could do with them would be to place them on the grave of one you had wronged. It would not bring them back. Henry was a kind hearted [illegible] and dearly loved his little sister; [illegible] had only been sick a little [illegible] he did not consider her [illegible] But this was [illegible] he would say, if I [illegible] ought that water for her, [illegible] bear it, but now she is where [illegible] never, never wait on her again."

Think of this when you are tempted to quarrel, to be selfish, or unkind; for do you not know, if one of you should die, the rest would remember every act of unkindness, every bitter word which had fallen from their lips? But then it would be too late to recall it, too late to ask forgiveness.

Dear Children:

Many years ago, from a beautiful village in Devon, England, before the dawn of day, a cry went forth, a bright eyed little boy was lost, just three summers old, an only one, who was the joy of his father, and the beloved of his mother. For hours they had searched for him, but in vain, evening had wrapped nature in her dark starry mantle, and all seemed silent in the restful bosom of slumber save two, whose hearts were crushed with distracted grief. During the long night their unwearied steps searched in every direction, calling aloud to their precious child, but no echo came back. About the morning's dawn, twelve kind hearted men who were neighbors, came to the home of the sorrowing parents, and offered to seek the lost.

Each man took a different route, and promised to search until noon. At twelve all had returned, save one, but their efforts were fruitless. The poor mother's pent up grief which had been kept silent with hope, found bounds no longer. In utter despair she wept bitterly. Clinging to her sad husband she said, Our darling is gone for ever and O, if I had laid him away in the slumber of death, then I could endure it better. Wait, said her trembling husband, the last one tarries yet, who knows but he may bring our precious boy. Hope again began to flicker in the darkness of gloom, and its faint beam cast a look of subdued joy in the face of the patient watchers, who were eagerly looking from every window for the first glimpse of the last one. The anxious mother, to whom every moment seemed an hour, cried, Look watchers, look, do you see no sign of his coming? The father cried aloud, I see him, he is coming, bearing our precious one in his arms. O, cried the mother, perhaps he is dead. Instantly they all rushed from the house, and from a distance they heard a voice say, All is well.

I now [illegible] you the scene of [illegible] that mother embraced her [illegible] child, and heard her prattling boy say again, My mamma. You see, my dear children, this kind neighbor was a savior, a restorer, and a redeemer to his lost child, he saved it from death and brought it back to its sorrowing parents. It was a voluntary act on his part; it could not have been done without the aid of him who [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

WHEN WILL THE LORD COME?

Mark xiii. 32, 33.

Will He come in solemn midnight,
When the world is wrapped in sleep?
While the church of Christ is slumbering,
Only angels vigil keep?
Will he come when sorrow sits spell
Thousand hearts in thrilling woe?
When the power of sin is deepest,
Darkening every home below?
"Prepare your hearts, and make him room,
At any time the Lord may come."

In the silent hour of dawning,
In the early morning watch,
Will he come with sudden splendor,
Thunder loud, and lightning flash?
Will he come while saints are watching,
All expectant for the sign,
When the clouds shall part asunder,
And reveal the Christ divine?
"Prepare your hearts, and make him room,
At any time the Lord may come."

Will he come when glorious morning
Floods the earth with blaze of light;
Every prospect fair adorning,
Will the Lord appear in sight?
Will he come while men ignore him,
Asking o'er their hoarded gold,
"Where the promise of his coming—
All continues as of old?"
"Prepare your hearts, and make him room,
At any time the Lord may come."

Will he tarry till the evening,
When the shadows fall apace?
Will he turn their gloom to brightness
By the shining of his face?
Will he come while earth rejoices,
Gay with music, feast and dance,
Singing with a thousand voices,
Heeding not the Lord's advance?
"Prepare your hearts and make him room,
At any time the Lord may come."

Will he come while war is raging?
Will he come while mourners weep?
While ten thousand souls are praying,
Will the Lord his promise keep?
In the midnight, and the morning,
At the eventide and dawn,
Heed your Savior's words of warning—
"Watch," he saith, "I quickly come."
"Prepare your hearts, and make him room,
At any time the Lord may come."

Shall We Know When the "Day of the Lord" is at Hand?

By the expression, "Day of the Lord," it is generally understood that it is the time of judgment. See Mal. iv. 5; 1 Thess. v. 2; 2 Peter iii. 10, and other expressions which refer to the same event.

But in answer to the question at the head of this article, we are met by the declaration of Christ, that of that day and hour knoweth no man, not even the angels, but the Father only. But we shall do no violence to the Scriptures or this declaration, when we say that the testimony of the Scriptures, when properly understood shows positively when it shall be at our very doors.

When Jesus' disciples came to him as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, they asked him this question, "Tell us when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming and the end of the world?" (Youngs translation. What is the sign of thy presence and of the full end of the age?)

He then tells them of things which should take place at various times, of the rising of false Christs, that the gospel of the kingdom should be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come. A terrible tribulation was to come upon the world and its inhabitants. Matt. xxiv. He then says verses 29, 30, But immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. These predictions were not original with Christ, but he having a full understanding of the prophecies, simply quotes from them, and enlightens his disciples in regard to this vital question. Joel is the first who foretells a darkening of the sun, and turning of the moon to blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come. Ch. ii. 30, 31. Isaiah follows with similar language, Ch. xiii. 8, 11. See also Daniel vii. 13, 14.

The fact that Christ uses these prophecies, makes the evidence stronger, that they had not had their fulfilment previous to his time, and now the question, have they had a fulfilment since that time, is what we want to consider?

His reply to the disciples is such as to leave no room to doubt as to what events follow each other, and it must have been perfectly satisfactory to them, for they asked no more questions, and they did not believe he would mislead them, but he warned them against the false Christs, who should arise to deceive them.

Let us now turn to the visions of John the Revelator. After hearing, and writing down what was said unto the churches, he looked and beheld a door opened in heaven, and heard a voice of a trumpet which said, Come up hither and I will show thee things which must be hereafter. Immediately he was in the spirit, and saw a throne set in heaven, and one setting on the throne, and round about the throne the four and twenty elders, and the sea of glass, the four living creatures, the searching of heaven and earth for one found worthy to open the seven-sealed book which was held in the right hand of him who sat upon the throne, and no one was found worthy to take and open the book, until the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David did prevail (overcome), to open it, and to loose the seals thereof. We will pass over the glorious scenes he saw, and the opening of the seals, until the sixth, which we will notice more closely. It will be noticed that there is an entire change of language, descriptive of the events under this seal, from the preceding five, from the highly figurative, to the strictly literal. The events under the sixth seal are as follows: And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood, and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a figtree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind, and the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places, and the kings of the earth and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains, and said to the rocks and mountains, Fall on us and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand.

Now please read for comparison with the foregoing Matt. xxiv. 29, 30. How nearly identical is the language of Christ and the Revelator. If the language of John is figurative, so is that of Christ, but if Christ preached literal events, then John saw in vision the same events fulfilled, and as these events were to immediately precede the sign of the Son of man, and as that sign has not yet made its appearance, it follows that they are yet future.

But it is objected that these events have all transpired, that a great earthquake, that destroyed many lives, and much property in 1755, that a dark day was known in the New England states in 1780, and there was a (so called) falling of the stars in 1833.

But these events were of very limited area, comparatively, and soon passed out of mind, or remembered only as an unusual occurrence, while those predicted by Christ, will be known, and witnessed by the whole world.

It will cause the whole world to mourn, and cry for a hiding place from the wrath of the Lamb.

Still further, under the sixth seal the resurrection takes place. After these things, I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor upon any tree, and I saw another angel ascend from the sunrising having the seal of the living God, and he cried with a loud voice to the the four angels to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea saying, Hurt not the earth neither the sea, till we have sealed the servants of our God upon their foreheads. See Rev. vii. Then follows the sealing of one hundred and forty-four thousand out of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel. After this he beholds a great multitude which no man could number, out of (Revised Version) all nations, and tribes and peoples and tongues, stand before the throne and before the Lamb, arrayed in white robes and palms in their hands, who cried with a loud voice, Salvation to our God who sitteth upon the throne and to the Lamb. One of the elders asked me saying, Who are these which are arrayed in white robes and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest, and he said to me, These are they which came out of the great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore they are before the throne of God and serve him day and night in his temple, and the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. That this innumerable company are the resurrected ones, please notice that their condition is the same as that described of all the saints. See Isa. xxv. 8; xlix. 10; Rev. xxi. 4, etc.

The angels have gone forth and gathered together the elect, from the four corners of the earth, and the four winds of heaven, Matt. xxiv. 31; Mark xiii. 27, and they are hid in the presence of God, in his pavillion; in the secret of his tabernacle, Psa. xxvii. 5; xxxi. 20. They have entered into their chambers and shut the doors about them, and hid as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast.

For behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity, the earth also shall disclose her blood and shall no more cover her slain. Isa xxvi. 20, 21.

Hence, the sixth seal has not been opened, and we may look for great things before the Lord comes.

THE MORNING-STAR.

It was "early in the morning," while "it was yet dark," that Jesus rose from the dead. Not the sun, but only the morning-star, shone upon his opening tomb. The shadows had not fled, the citizens of Jerusalem had not awoke. It was still night—the hour of sleep and of darkness, when he arose. Nor did his rising break the slumbers of the city.

So it shall be "very early in the morning," when "it is yet dark," and when nought but the morning-star is shining, that Christ's body, the church, shall arise. Like him, his saints shall awake when the children of the night and darkness are still sleeping their sleep of death. In their arising they disturb no one. The world hears not the voice that summons them, or if it hears, shall only say, "it thunders," as did the unbelieving Jews when the Father's voice responded to the prayer of Jesus.—John xii. 29. As Jesus laid them quietly to rest, each in his own still tomb, like children in the arms of their mother; so, as quietly, as gently, shall he awake them when the hour arrives.

He is the morning-star. "I am the root and offspring of David, the bright and morning-star."—Rev. xxii. 16. And this name is given to him not only because of the glory of his person and the brightness of his appearing, but because of the time when he is to appear.

The first act, at his appearing, when he comes in glory,—the first indication of the arrival, while yet aloft "in the air," is likened to the shining of the morning-star. Afterwards he shall come forth as "the Sun of righteousness," filling the whole earth with his brightness, and shadowing the nations with his healing wings. (Mal. iv. 2); but at first he shows himself as the Morning-star,—big with the hope of day, yet not the day; brighter than other stars and eclipsing all of them; yet not the Day-star; foreteller of the dawn, yet not the dawn.

"Patient of stars, last in the train of night,
If birds in their high hearts forget to sing
Before thou belong not to the dawn,
Sure pledge of day, that crownst the smiling morn
With thy bright circlet, praise him not but joy,
Whose day arrives, that sorest fear of night."

—Paradise Lost. Book V.

Hence his promise to the conqueror is, "I will give him the morning-star" Rev. ii. 28: that is, I will give myself to him as the morning-star: I will show myself to him as such; I will confer on him this pre-eminence, this special blessedness.

We read in the Scripture of "the eye-lids of the morning;" and the morning-star is the first beam shooting from under these lids as they begin to reopen, that the eye of day may again irradiate the earth. It is only they who awake early that see the first opening of these eye-lids, or gaze upon the morning-star, or breathe the morning freshness, or taste the morning dew. So is it with those of whom it is said, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." To them come the quickening words, "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust."—Isa. xxiv. 19. Into their tomb the earliest ray of glory finds its way. They drink in the first gleams of morning, while as yet the eastern clouds give but the faintest signs of its uprising. Its genial fragrance, its smoothing stillness, its brooing freshness, its sweet loneliness, its quiet purity, all so solemn and yet so full of hope, these are theirs. Oh, the contrast between these things and the dark night through which they have passed! Oh, the contrast between these things and the grave from which they have sprung! And as they shake off the encumbering turf, flinging mortality aside, and rising, in glorified bodies, to meet their glorified Lord in the air, they are lighted and guided upward, along the untrodden pathway, by the beams of that Star of morning, which, like the star of Bethlehem, conducts them to the presence of the King.

There seems to be more periods than one (it does so very often) that may be called by that name) opening out upon us when the Lord comes. Just as there are more scenes than one, and more acts than one, in "the day of the Lord," so there are more periods than one. And it is interesting to notice these in connection with the Morning-star.

All the time up to the moment of his appearing is reckoned night. Then the scenes change, and step by step, the day with its full sunshine is brought in. First, there is the period of the Morning-star, during which the dead saints awake and the living saints are changed; then that which is sown in corruption is raised in incorruption, that which is sown in dishonor is raised in glory, that which is sown in weakness is raised in power, that which is sown a natural body is raised a spiritual body; and they that have long dwelt in dust awake and sing. In every land they have found a grave, and every land now gives up the sleeping clay. They come forth "in the beauties of holiness from the womb of the morning," like the ten thousand times ten thousand dew-drops of the night, made visible by the morning-star, and sparkling to its far-coming glory.—Psa. cx. 4; Isa. xxiv. 19. It is long since "light was sown for the righteous," Psa. xcvii. 11; and this is the first-fruits of the harvest.

Next there is the period of the twilight. This is the time when "the light shall not be clear nor dark," like "the morning spread upon the mountains."—Joel ii. 2. Then has the last battle-strife begun; then the Lord with his rod of iron is breaking his enemies in pieces like a potter's vessel; then he cometh forth from his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for his saints, he executes the infinite vengeance, delivers Israel, destroys Antichrist, lays waste the world with sore calamity and purging fire. "Before the morning he is not," says the prophet, foretelling the ruin of the great enemy of Israel and the church.—Isa. xvii. 14.*

Next there is [illegible]. The enemy has disappeared, the wreck that marked [illegible] destruction is [illegible]. The face of the earth is re[illegible] the storm is laid to rest, and the [illegible] of an unclouded sun and a [illegible] creation s[illegible] the Believer's love, my fa[illegible] lo, the winter [illegible] and gone; the [illegible] earth; the t[illegible] birds is com[illegible] turtle is heard in our [illegible] putteth forth [illegible] vines with [illegible] grape gives a good smell. A[illegible] love, my fair one, and come [illegible] Sol. Song ii. 10-13.

Lastly, the [illegible] day in its full brightness. [illegible] path of the Just One is like the [illegible] shining more and more unto the p[illegible] of that day, earth has never [illegible] like. For that day it waits in [illegible] hope, struggling hard, meanwhile, with darkness, and laboring to throw off its long, sad weight of ill.

It is as if the glory of the Lord, when first coming within sight of the earth, showed itself in the far distance, as the star of morning; token most welcome and hopeful, recognized at once by those who know the true light of the world, and who had often in other days looked out wistfully for the Star of Jacob. It is, next, as if the same glory, when it neared the earth, showed itself in terrible majesty as the sign of the Son of man, in seeing which all the tribes of the earth mourn, Matt. xxiv. 30; Rev i. 17; for just as in the morning-watch the Lord looked through the pillar of fire and cloud and troubled the host of the Egyptians, Exod. xiv. 24, so, when he cometh with clouds, "all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." It is, next, as if the same glory of the Son of man, coming still nearer, took up its destined position, and spread its skirts over earth, as did the pillar-cloud over the tents of Israel. It is, lastly, as if this more than Shechinah-splendor, showed itself as the Sun of righteousness, bearing healing in his wings, wherewith he heals the nations, so that the inhabitant shall no more say, I am sick; wherewith he heals the earth, so that the curse takes flight; wherewith he heals the air, so that it poisons no more. Then day shall utter speech to day in a way unheard of before; then shall their line go throughout all the earth, and their words to the end of the world, when out of that "tabernacle which he hath set for the Sun," that sun shall come forth as a bridegroom out of his chamber, rejoicing as a strong man to run a race. Then shall come to pass the saying that is written, "Behold, the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east, and his voice was like the noise of many waters, and the earth shined with his glory."—Ezek. xliii. 2.

With all these in succession the saints have to do, from the time that they are roused out of their tombs by the first beams of the Morning star, to have part in the first resurrection. But it is only the first of these that we are now considering.

The promise "to him that overcometh" is, "I will give him the morning-star."—Rev. ii. 28. Of all the blessing symbolized or indicated by that star, he is made partaker. The first streak of dawn is his. He is summoned from the dust to meet morning, ere yet one ray of it has touched the earth. The glimpse of the long-waited-for glory his eye shall see, when others abide in darkness. In this first token of a coming Lord, his soul shall rejoice. At this, the first sound of the returning Bridegroom's voice, he shall go forth with ready love. The first object that shall meet his eye on awakening from the tomb, shall be the Star of Jacob.

This earnest of creation's better day is the portion of the saints. The deliverance of creation is at hand. The time of "the manifestation of the sons of God" is come. Now, arrayed in light, themselves the sons of light, they shall shine as the brightness of the firmament and as the stars for ever and ever. Now, transformed into the image of the Morning-star—themselves the stars of morning, they prepare to sing together over the new creation, when its foundations shall be fastened and its corner-stone laid by him who is to make all things new. See Job xxxviii. 6, 7; where the references is of course to the old creation.) Death is swallowed up of victory; the grave is rifled; the spoiler is spoiled; ashes are exchanged for beauty; the light that was quenched is rekindled; the sorrow passes to joy; and the darkness of a brief night ends in the uprising of the endless day.

As for those that "are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord," though they shall not go before those that are asleep, yet they shall not be behind them in the blessedness. They shall have the same privileges of the early morning,—the same honor, the same glory. Their eyes shall look on the Star, and it shall be to them all that it is to those who were "dwelling in dark." Living in the last days of a God-forsaking world, days dark and hateful as those of Noah or of Lot, [illegible] saved, [illegible] pressing, comfort-[illegible] persecution assailing, sorrows multiplying,—how welcome shall that sign be to them, springing up like hope when all is hopeless, and foretokening life, refreshment, rest, gladness, to the troubled and despairing earth!

Like the anxious watchman on some fortress, they have been wearying for the morning; and if his coming is "as" last Like the belated traveller pressing on over hill, and moor, and rock, and waste, and thicket, they have been seeking at every turn to catch the light of their cottage window; and it is seen at last! Like the tempest-tost apostle, when neither sun nor stars for many days appeared, "they wish for day," and are glad beyond measure at the tokens of its approach. The glimmer of the light-house has hitherto been their comfort and guide. By it they have shaped their way and cheered their hearts. But, of a sudden, the beacon seems to sink away, and ere they are aware, its light is lost amid the far-outrivalling brightness of the Morning-star.

But upon the unready and unwatching world that Star rises with no ray of blessing. It rises only to shed "disastrous blight," and give token of the desolations that are at hand. For as when Noah entered the ark the flood burst forth, or as when Lot entered Zoar the fire came down, so when the saints are caught up then the wrath is poured out and the door is shut.

Till then the gate of peace stands wide open, and into the chambers of safety all are beckoned. The most unready of all the children of men may go freely in; for the grace that invites makes no exceptions, but welcomes the unworthiest. It would fain allure the seekers of vain joy, from joys that are so vain. It would fain win the heart of the sorrowful, who mourn and yet have no comforter, because they have no God. It would fain draw in the secure into a place of true safety, ere the storm arise that is to break in pieces the strong foundations of the earth.

Children of the earth!—you especially whose sorrows are multiplied, and whose hearts are sick with disappointment,—give heed to the gracious warning. Enter the hiding-place and be safe for ever. Thrice blessed are those griefs, and disappointments that lead you out of lying refuges into the sure covert from the storm, that call you from the joy of the world into the joy of God.—H. Bonar.

*It is either to this or the close of the preceding period that such passages are to be referred: "All the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee."—Ezek. xxxii. 8. "The day of the Lord is darkness and not light."—Amos v. 18, 20. "While ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death."—Jer. xiii. 16. "The light is darkened in the heavens thereof."—Isa. v. 30.

A Psalm and Comment for the Times.

In its general style, allusions and sentiments, the Ninety-first Psalm is allowed to be one of the finest of the Hebrew Odes. It has no title in the original; nor can we determine on what occasion, or by whom it was composed. But there is a probability that it was penned under the direction of the Spirit, when David felt himself the subject of Divine protection, during the severe pestilence which came upon Israel after he had numbered the people. 2 Sam. xxiv. 10. The full intent and purpose of the writer, is to remind us where man is to place his safety and confidence in a season of imminent peril and pressing trouble. At such a time, neither on the mountain's brow, nor in the valley at its foot, is there a stronghold or castle visible for his aid and defence. The secure spot is an invisible fortress, known only to a faithful soul. To "dwell in the secret place of the Most High," is, in other words, to place ourselves by an act of faith under the Divine protection. The allusion may be to the mystic symbols of the ark. He who entered legitimately there, would be covered with the cloud of Jehovah's glory—the protection of the all-sufficient God. Under the ancient economy, this, once a year, was the privilege of the high priest alone; but under the present bright and merciful dispensation, every believer has access with boldness into the holiest of all; and he who now dwelleth in the secret place of prayer and communion with the God of his salvation, shall find the shadow of the Almighty—the Divine mercy and care—spread over him for his daily protection and solace—Enviable privilege of unhesitating faith! It calls forth the liveliest expressions of our obligations to God for the [illegible] everlasting defence. Other [illegible] will say of the Lord, [illegible] the refuge of [illegible] God in [illegible] will we trust. [illegible] from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence. He shall cover us with his feathers, and under his wings shall we trust: his truth shall be our shield and buckler. [illegible] such a God, and the means, both of the protection and deliverance, are hourly and daily under his immediate control, and at his sovereign and gracious disposal. Does he, as it were, take hold of shield and buckler, and stand up for our help? Then the most subtle stratagems of the cruelest foe cannot prevail, nor can the most contagious disease enter our doors. The combinations of tender and warlike figures employed by the Psalmist are very beautiful and expressive. The fluttering of the parent bird over her helpless brood, and the instinctive trust with which they nestle beneath the warm shelter of her outspread wings, is the very image of God's vigilant care of his people, and the abiding satisfaction and delight with which they cast themselves on his paternal government. His innumerable and unfailing promises of support and protection in the hour of danger, and their complete fulfilment, may most fitly be called the armor that covers the believer's head in the season of severe conflict. This confidence in God will always be recognized by its sure results. What else will divest the mind of that dread and anxiety which threatening events are calculated to inspire? He who feels that God is near to him, for his protection and defence, knows not how to yield to undue fear in the prescribed path of duty. He retires to rest unmoved by the thickening shadows of darkness, and he rises to go forth to his labor, even when disease may be on the wing, calming every perturbed feeling by the remembrance, that no weapon of death can reach him without receiving its command and its aim from God. "Thou shalt not be afraid of the terror by night, nor for the arrow that flieth by day; nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noon day. A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee." In scenes like these, of desolation and woe, it is the privilege of the Christian to possess his soul in undisturbed tranquility, and wait with unshaken confidence the event, whether of life or death. How often in such seasons have the faithful been delivered!—and when it has pleased God to suffer them to fall, how firm has been their reliance on his omnipotent arm, and how rich their consolation in the moment of their last conflict? Had we more of the fear of God upon our minds, all other fears would be thereby subdued. A dying saint once beautifully remarked, "There is no danger to the Christian." His daughter whispered tremblingly, "You do not think there is any danger to the Christian?" "My child," he answered, "do not use such a word; there is no danger to the Christian."

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

A little while we sit at earthly tables, and then the deep shadows shall flee away. I said we were brethren round a family table. Alas! it is a table that has no Head. Since the Lord went away, the table of communion in the household of God has been a table of orphans, bereft of their natural chief. The good-man of the house is no longer here; and for that reason we have no lordship at his table or in his house. We have none here to be intercessors or mediators for us. We are all brethren and we are all equal. We have each the same access to the same Father, through the same sacrifice of Jesus. We are brethren in adversity, without our Leader. All the more, therefore, should we hold together, clasp hand in hand, honor each other for our work, hearten each other in it, and keep far away divisions and alienations and jealousies.

But the table which tells us of the Lord's absence, tells us, also, of his return. In these dear memorials we have a pledge that he is not to be always an absent head. And yet, thank God, he is not wholly absent even now. We thank him for the real presence at this table—the presence of the Master by Spirit in our hearts. But this is no substitute for the personal Lord. Bread and wine, though consecrated by himself into memorials of his person, are not his person. They tell us that he has not forgotten us in his absence; that, as of old, he breathes forth upon us, and says to us: "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." It is a presence, real though spiritual, and real because [illegible] But I say it is [illegible] as always [illegible] which the hearts of [illegible] say to [illegible] Let us keep the memorial till he come. Thankful that, for that day and for [illegible] memorial feasts no more [illegible] shall we know him as he is and we shall [illegible] with his likeness.

Public Expense Account.

The following chart, illustrating the comparative cost of intoxicating drinks and other items of expense in this country, would be an excellent card for members of the legislature to keep before them as a guide for their action upon the high license bill. No argument is necessary.

THE HILLS ARE GIRDED WITH JOY.

Psa. 65, 12, 13.

What is the record of all the gladness
Bellowed from wild to sea,
From the mountain-tops and from the valleys
Ringing all the earth?
The waters are the tuneful instrument
And the hills are the trembling strings
And the birds are the joyful singers
And the flowers are the silent worshippers
Bowing their heads in prayer.
Why do they sing and pray?
Is all this music and worship
But the praise and prayer of inanimate things?
Is
And is the song which the whole world sings
But a hymn of self-adoration?
Is
Is the universe one vast temple
Filled with idolaters and idolatry?
Is
Is the earth one huge Pantheon
Where all the gods of the heathen
Are worshipped?
Is
Is the whole creation
But a mass of self-deceived
Worshippers of false gods?
Is
Is the whole earth
But a vast Babel
Where all the tongues of the nations
Are mingled in confusion?
Is
Is the whole earth
But a vast Babylon
Where all the kindreds of the earth
Are drunken with the wine of her fornication?
Is
Is the whole earth
But a vast Egypt
Where all the people
Are in bondage to sin and Satan?
Is
Is the whole earth
But a vast Sodom
Where all the inhabitants
Are filled with pride and fullness of bread
And abundance of idleness?
Is
Is the whole earth
But a vast Gomorrah
Where all the people
Are filled with all uncleanness?
Is
Is the whole earth
But a vast Jericho
Where all the people
Are encompassed by the enemy
And are shut up
And none can go out or in?
Is
Is the whole earth
But a vast Jerusalem
Where all the people
Are crucifying the Lord afresh
And putting him to an open shame?
Is
Is the whole earth
But a vast Jerusalem
Where all the people
Are filling up the measure of their sins
And are ripening for destruction?
Is
Is the whole earth
But a vast Jerusalem
Where all the people
Are shut up
To the fearful prospect
And certain doom
Of famine, pestilence, war and bloodshed?
Is
Is the whole earth
But a vast Jerusalem
Where all the people
Are hastening on to the day
When the Roman eagles shall gather
And encompass them round about
And lay them even with the ground
And their children within them

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXIV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUGUST 19, 1885. NO. 31.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR
Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates literal "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the eternal retribution of the righteous, and the total destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

CHALDEAN BELIEF AS TO DEATH, THE GRAVE, AND IMMORTALITY.

This formed the theme of Mr. St. Chad. Boscawen's concluding lecture of the third series at the British Museum, upon the history and antiquities of ancient Assyria and Babylonia, and in many respects it was the most interesting yet delivered. The whole of the lectures are being published in pamphlet form separately, but in the meantime we have only the condensed newspaper reports to refer to.

In reading over these reports one thing has struck us, that while no doubt there was a belief in a conscious survival after death evidenced in some of the ancient inscriptions, yet these are by no means frequent, and some are highly poetical, and no more to be taken as sober truth than the vivid imagery of Isa. xiv.--"Hell from below is moved for thee, to meet thee at thy coming, even all the chief ones of the earth;" which Mr. Boscawen points out is paralleled by the inscription--"I have raised the dead to prey upon the living."

It was to be expected that there would be a similarity of idea and expression between the Assyrians and the Hebrews, considering their close blood relationship. Thus their ideas of the grave correspond exactly as a place of darkness. One tablet reads--"The house of darkness--the dwelling of the great devourer," where "light they see not, and in darkness where the dwell." Mr. Boscawen is reported to have said that "the relationship is still more close when we find the graveland of the Assyrians called Sunia--a word which is the exact equivalent of the Hebrew Sheol. The lecturer then went on to show how many interesting points the Assyrian inscriptions revealed as to the various similes employed regarding this abode of death. The 'bars of Sheol,' and the 'gates of Sheol,' were certainly referred to in the tablets, as in the phrase--'I will strike the doors (of the land of death); I will burst open the doors; I will strike the hinges; 'I will burst open the doors'. . . . The idea, again, of the grave as the place of corruption is common alike to the Assyrians and to Hebrews. Thus in the Book of Job we read--"The worm shall feed sweetly upon him;' so in the inscriptions we find the expressions applied to the underworld of the 'house of corruption,' and the place 'where is the worm and corruption."

Referring to the question of the underworld as a place of punishment, Mr. Boscawen said--"the only inscription which directly referred to this was one in which the goddess Istar was punished for her sins, and which seemed to indicate more or less distinctly that there were regular cycles of punishment in the underworld." It is somewhat remarkable to find that there are several inscriptions in which the resurrection of the dead is referred to. "Marodach bore the titles--'He who raises the dead'--'the revivifier.' One of the most interesting texts of this class was one which offered an almost direct parallel to the story of Saul and the witch of Endor, in which a witch, in the presence of Gindubar, raises the soul of Hea-bani from the dead." This report is too meager to form a correct conception of the Assyrian ideas of resurrection; but, judging from the foregoing, we fancy that there could not be any belief in the resurrection of the body which was derived from contact with their Hebrew brethren, for the doctrine is one peculiar to the Hebrew Scriptures.

The last point upon which Mr. Boscawen touched was the Assyrian ideas of "heaven," or the "abode of bliss;" but we cannot form a proper idea of what these were from the brief report before us. However, the statement which the lecturer made towards the close is worthy of notice, that "throughout the whole of the Old Testament there was no reference to or description of heaven as a place of reward for the good." Thus, from time to time, independent and unprejudiced support is given to some of the positions on Divine truth which we have assumed, for we teach that the earth--redeemed and purified from the curse of sin and death, and glorified by the presence of its Redeemer--is the place promised in both the Old and New Testaments to become the abode of the redeemed. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

Looking over the report of the lecture, we see no indication of the Chaldean belief upon immortality, for it is too common to jump at the conclusion that these ancient people believed in the immortality of the soul, because there are indications that they had some idea of survival after death, and of future bliss. Mr. Edward White, who can speak on this question with some authority from the long attention and study he has given to it, has recently contributed a very valuable article to the Homiletical Magazine, being one of a Symposium upon "The Foundations of the belief of immortality of man." We quote the following important testimony:--

"It has been asserted several times in this Symposium that the historical evidence now before us in monuments and books shows that the general belief of ancient nations favored the opinion of the immortality of all souls. Nothing can be farther from the fact. If the Egyptian beliefs, reckoning from the remotest antiquity, may be taken as a specimen of primeval doctrine on this subject, it may be positively declared that all the leading Egyptologers of Europe are now agreed that this belief restricted immortality or eternal life to the good; that the Egyptians believed only in a temporary survival of the wicked, whose souls, they steadfastly held, were at last devoured and destroyed by avenging demons, under the judgment of Osiris in Amenti, or the underworld. M. Edouard Naville, of Geneva, who stands at the head of this department of study, recently favored me with a letter, in which he says of the ancient Egyptian belief:--'I have no doubt that the fate of the wicked is destruction. We often hear of treacherous guides who lead the soul to the place of destruction. It is spoken of enemies who devour souls, who live upon them. It is spoken of 'dead spirits,' of the furnaces wherein the deceased asks not to fall. There is a chapter in the 'Book of the Dead,' of not dying the second death. All these images indicate a final destruction, and that explains why, contrary to what we see in other mythologies, such as Homer's, there is hardly any description of the state of the wicked in the Book of the Dead.' Precisely of the same judgment is the great French Egyptologer, the Vicomte E. de Rouge:--'La seconde mort figure au premiers ligne parmi les supplices des mechants. Horus, le dieu vengeur, livre leurs ames a l' annihilation.' M. Lichtenberger, in the Encyclopedia des Science Religieuses, M. Lenormant, and Mr. Reginald Stuart Poole, of the British Museum, in recent articles, have expressed an equally positive judgment in the same direction. Among literary men who are historians of opinion, without being Egyptologers at first hand, Professor Rawlinson may be mentioned as maintaining the same conclusion. The Egyptians, from first to last, from the earliest times to the latest, believed in the immortality of the good, but only through union with Osiris, and 'justification,' after trial; and they also believed that the incurably wicked, through various modes of punishment would be utterly destroyed. There is nothing more surely regarded as settled by the most learned authorities on Egypt than this. Perhaps we shall now hear fewer confident statements as to the belief of all antiquity in a future state, necessitated and determined by the quality of the soul as essentially immortal."--Messenger.

"Among the punishments for sinners, the second death takes first in the scale. Horus, the avenging deity, delivers their souls over to annihilation."

A Repentant Atheist Recants.

PARIS, July 28.--Leo Taxil had the courage to present himself at the meeting of the Free-thought Societies, convoked last evening to consider his recantation, but he had hardly entered the hall when he was violently abused by the President, who, in the course of his denunciation, exclaimed: "After having obtained 17,000 adherents, after having created the great anti-Clerical movement, you abjure it all, and this at the supreme hour of the struggle. This is more than infamy; it is a crime. It would have been better had you killed the men than deceived them thus."

M. Leo Taxil, accused of having betrayed his allies, replied that, on the contrary, as long as he was of their opinion he held frankly to them. When his views underwent a change he candidly informed them of the fact. This apology was, however, of no avail. The blood of the atheists was up. The man who had organized their societies, who had drawn up their anti-Christian text books, who, in short, had been their champion, had actually dared to leave them and to acknowledge the error of his former ways. This was too much for their feelings, and the hall rang again with cries of "traitor and coward." M. Leo Taxil went on to declare that he was thoroughly disgusted with the republic.

After another exciting scene the following motion was put to the vote and unanimously adopted:

Considering that Gabril Jogand, called Leo Taxil, one of the founders of the anti-Clerical League, has abjured all the principles which he defended, and has betrayed free thought and his co-religionists, the members of the League present at the meeting of July 27, without pronouncing on the motives which have dictated his infamous conduct, expel him from the anti-Clerical League as a traitor and a renegade.

The President then ordered E. Leo Taxil to withdraw, and he left the hall amid furious denunciations from the entire assembly.--From the London Telegraph.

We clip the following from the "Review and Herald" published at Battle Creek, Mich. Napoleon was a shrewd Statesman as well as a great military leader and chieftain. Prophecy hardly seems to warrant Russia's success to so great an extent as Napoleon seems to have anticipated.--[Ed. Res.]

A NAPOLEONIC PREDICTION.

For the information of the reader before he peruses the following interesting article, we will say respecting the characters brought to view, that the Barry Edward O'Meara mentioned was Napoleon Bonaparte's favorite physician. He was born in Ireland about 1780. Being on board the Bellerophon when Napoleon was taken prisoner, the latter requested that O'Meara might accompany him to St. Helena as his surgeon. He remained there till 1815. The "Paul" mentioned was emperor of Russia. In the language addressed by Napoleon to O'Meara, "When Paul was so incensed against you," he addresses him as the representative of the English government, and simply means when the emperor of Russia was incensed against England, he consulted Napoleon in regard to the invasion of India. The whole document is a remarkable evidence of the patience and persistency with which Russia pursues her designs, and also of the foresight of Bonaparte. Bro. H. Williams copied and sent the article to Sr. E. T. Palmer, by whom it is forwarded for the Review. It is taken from the bulletin to the St. Thomas Commercial and Shipping Gazette, of Monday, June 29, 1885. [Ed. Review and Herald.]

Barry O'Meara's half forgotten record contains a passage or two worth raking up just now. His illustrious patient indulged a prophetic vein respecting the future relations of England and Russia. In May, 1817, he told the doctor the day would come when Russia would either invade India or throw herself on Europe. Addressing O'Meara as an incarnation of his country, he said: When "Paul was so incensed against you he asked me for a plan for the invasion of India. I sent him one with detailed instructions." Here Napoleon showed on a map the different points from which a Russian army ought to start, and the proper routes to take, and added that the port of departure should be somewhere on the Caspian Sea. Russia, continued the captive emperor, must either collapse or increase, and the natural supposition is that she will increase. According to the probabilities, she will be obliged to seize India. Irresistable conditions impel her in that direction. She will have to make the attempt if only to provide plunder and occupation for her Cossacks, and Kalmucks, and other barbarians, and "par l' entier une revolution en Russie." The doctor objected to this opinion that the distance was great, and Russia had not the money requisite for so vast an enterprise. To this the emperor replied that the distance was nothing, that it would be easy to transport the commissariat on camels, and that the Cossacks might be trusted to forage sufficient provisions for themselves. As for the money, Russia would find that when she had arrived in India. The mere promise of transit and spoil of a few wealthy cities would draw hordes of her barbarian subjects to her standard.

Rising on a further wind of prophecy, the prisoner of St. Helena went on to forecast the time when Russia would have Constantinople, part of Turkey, and all Greece. Mistress of Constantinople, Russia will become a great maritime power. From that vantage she will force a quarrel on England, she will march upon India with 70,000 "bons soldats"† and 100,000 "centailles de Cosaques"‡ and other semi savages, and England will lose India. Napoleon remarked that he had endeavored to prevent what he foresaw from the aggressive power of Russia, and to that end wished to revive the Kingdom of Poland, but was foiled by the imbecility of English Cabinet, who --let living diplomacy listen!--by their policy, "ont agrandi la Russie au lieu d' agrandir leur pays."

Song of the Sparrow.

"Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God? Fear ye not, therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows."--Luke xii. 6, 7.

I'm only a little sparrow,
A bird of low degree,
My life is of little value,
But the dear Lord cares for me.

He gives me a coat of feathers--
It is very plain I know;
Without a speck of ornament;
For it was not made for show.

But it keeps me warm in winter,
And it sheds the rain;
Were it bordered with gold and purple,
Perhaps it would make me vain.

And now that the spring time cometh,
I will build me a little nest,
With many a chirp of pleasure--
In the spot I like the best.

I have no barn nor storehouse,
I neither sow nor reap;
God gives me a sparrow's portion,
And never a seed to keep.

If my meat is sometimes scanty,
I love praising notes the sweet:
I'm sure always enough to feed me--
And life is more than meat.

I know there are many sparrows--
All over the world they are found--
But our heavenly Father knoweth
When one of us falls to the ground.

Tho' small we are never forgotten,
Tho' weak we are never afraid;
For we know that the dear Lord keepeth
The life of the sparrow He made.

I fly thro' the thickest forest,
I alight on many a spray;
I have no chart nor compass,
But I never lose my way.

I rest fold my wings at nightfall,
Wherever I happen to be;
For the Father is always watching,
And no harm can happen to me.

I'm only a little sparrow,
A bird of low degree;
But I know that the Father loves me,
Dear them know His love for thee!

A Story from Australia.

The Australian correspondent of the Glasgow Herald has sent home the particulars of a true tale regarding a little girl of 11 years of age, named Clara Crosby, who was lost for three weeks in the bush, and during that time had no food to sustain her except pure cold water.

The story briefly told, runs thus. Clara Crosby went with her mother to see some friends at Cockatoo Creek, about 40 miles from Melbourne, and while her mother stayed at one bush hut, Clara went on two miles further to stay with another friend. While there she took a wearying fit, and told her friends that she was going along the track to see her mother and would return in a day or two. They, knowing the danger to one so young of going astray, tried to dissuade her from starting, but she felt certain that she knew the track, and went. It turned out, however, that little Clara had been too self-confident, for she did lose her way, and here are her own words. After going on a long way without finding the cabin where her mother was, she says:--"I saw some sheep, and followed them, and they ran away. I got tired, and sat down, and fell asleep among some long grass. When I awakened, I went on and saw a house, but there was no one in it, and I went on again. At last I came to a creek, and seeing a fallen tree that made a bridge across the creek, I went over it, and just when I was on the other side of the creek a branch of the tree broke and I fell into the water, but managed to scramble out and get up the bank. As it was now nearly dark, I went into a hollow tree growing near the creek, and made a little bed with part of my clothes, and covered myself in my ulster. I was wearying to be with my mother, and I prayed to God to preserve me, and take me back to my home, and I sang little hymns and then fell asleep. When I awoke I could not find my way, and I often went down to drink from the creek. I used to sleep very much. Often in the night-time I heard dogs fired in the forest and I cooeed, but no one came to me.

Two days elapsed before Clara's friends became aware that she was really lost in the bush, and then parties were sent out to search carefully for her. Two black men who were skilled in tracking footsteps, and well acquainted with the bush, were employed, but all in vain, Clara could not be found, and after a lapse of time she was given up as hopelessly lost, because it was not thought possible she could live so long without food.

But God has said:--"I love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me;" and so as Clara had prayed to God to send her help and then thanked Him for the beautiful clear water of the creek," so God heard her cry for help. As it turned out, the breaking of that branch of the tree, when she crossed the creek, was but a part of his watchful care over this erring little one who had ignored the wise advice of her elders. She was afraid to re-cross, and there was no other way of escape, so that her strength was not wasted in vain roaming about, but preserved by good sleep and rest to sustain the three week's fast before her. At last, at the end of that time, when she was becoming very weak, one day she was fast asleep when there came very near where she lay two gentlemen, one of whom had already been of those who searched for her, but now was merely searching for a strayed horse. They were so near to where Clara lay that their voices could be heard across the creek, but they were without the faintest suspicion of her presence, and would never have found her without direction. Here then was Clara's help, but how was she to benefit by it? She was asleep, who was there to awaken her? Just at that moment "a large black spider fell upon her face, and she was awakened by its movements." Who sent that spider? Can you doubt that it was God's answer to the little girl's prayer? I cannot.

Being now awake she heard the voices speaking, and was able to utter a faint coo-ee, which the gentlemen heard, causing them to search until, to their great joy, they found the little lamb that had gone astray. And thus she is restored to her mother, and is growing strong and fat again.

Now will you take the practical lesson of this story in real life, and carry it into your own lives? It is this--to believe that "God is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him;" that he is everywhere, and that his eyes are over upon you, and his ears open unto your cry. Be not afraid to trust him, and forget not to give him thanks for all the blessings you enjoy, and to ask him for continued care over you in the time to come: for the Lord Jesus has promised that "every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."--H. K. S., in Messenger.

Dear Children.

It is written in the Scriptures, "Better is a poor, and wise child, than an old and foolish king who will not be admonished," therefore how much better it is to get wisdom than gold, and to get understanding rather to be chosen than silver, for happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding for she is more precious than rubies, and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her. We read of a beautiful bird whom God hath deprived of wisdom, and hath not imparted to her understanding, for she leaveth her eggs in the earth and warmeth them in the dust, therefore wisdom is the right use of knowledge. Let me illustrate this to you by giving you an incident which happened during the reign of the wisest king who has ever lived. His dear father gave him a name signifying "peaceable perfect," but a Prophet who then lived, added another name, which means "The beloved of Jehovah". He was but a youth when chosen to be king, for his dear father said, "My son whom God alone hath chosen is young and tender, and the work before him is great, for the palace which he is to build, is not for man, but for the Lord God. One night this youthful king had a dream, the Lord appeared to him, and said: Ask what I shall give thee, and he answered, O Lord God thou hast made me thy servant, a king instead of my father, "The beloved." "I am but a little child, not knowing how to go out, or come in," give therefore thy servant an understanding heart, to judge the people, that I may discern between good and bad, for who is able to judge this thy so great a people, and the Lord was pleased he had asked this thing, and said, Behold then hast asked this thing and not asked for thyself long life, neither riches, nor the life of thine enemies, but for understanding. Behold, I have done according to thy words, lo I have given thee a wise and understanding heart. I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both riches, and honor so that no king shall be like unto thee in all thy days. And he awoke, and behold it was a dream, and when he came to his throne in the city of the Great King, behold two women stood before him to settle a dispute; each was the mother of a sweet boy, both infants of the same age within three days. The mothers dwelt together, and it seems one being heavy with sleep, laid on her dear little one so that it died. When she awoke and found it dead, she took and placed it in the arms of the sleeping mother, who had the living child, and took away her sweet boy from her. On awakening she soon discovered the dead child was not her own, but the other mother would not give up the living child, claiming it belonged to her. When the king heard their complaint he said, Bring me a sword, and they brought a sword before the king, and the king said, divide the living child in too, and give half to the one, and half to the other. Then the poor distressed loving mother of the living child, cried out, O my Lord, give her the living child, and in no wise slay it, for her sad heart yearned for her sweet helpless boy, and could not endure to have it cut in two. Knowing well that when the king gave a command it had to be executed, this made her tremble exceedingly. The other mother to whom the dead child belonged, said, Let it be neither mine nor thine, but divide it, the youthful king said, give the sorrowing mother the child, who prays it may not be divided; for she is the mother thereof.

My children, what wonderful wisdom this was, so simple, and yet so weighty in righteous judgment. "O thou that hearest prayer, to thee shall all flesh come." To get wisdom you must incline thine ear, and apply thine heart to understanding, for God hath declared if thou orient after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding, if thou searchest her as silver, and searchest for her as for his treasures, then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God.

Your affectionate Teacher.

My pilgrimage is not yet ended. I am traveling alone, without any of the like faith to console me in my conflicts with disease and the tempter. I am trying to walk soberly, righteously and Godly in this evil age, with an eye single to God and his glory. I have seen only one in "the faith," in nine months. Oh, what a comfort are the weekly visits of the dear RESTITUTION! One by one the loved ones are dropping into the enemy's land. Bro. Field, I mourn with you, but not as those who have no hope. Soon will Sister Field come forth, clothed with the habiliments of an endless life in the kingdom of God. I have made three discourses this season to attentive hearers. I think some might be brought to see the truth if I was only able to continue my discourses, but my health has again declined, so I cannot. The Lord has prolonged my life much longer than I had any idea of. Praise unto him forevermore! Jesus is the only begotten Son of God, and there is no immortal life out of Christ. May the Lord bless you, Bro. Chaplin, with an endless life in the kingdom of God and of Christ. I am not able to do any business. Many thanks to those who pay for THE RESTITUTION for me. We have no stock but a milk cow, and not anything growing. We have all our food and clothing to buy, and but little to buy with. My wife is making straw hats for bread. I am not asking help from the brethren; I only wish to show that we should be content with plain food and raiment. To all my old friends who read THE RESTITUTION, I say good bye till the resurrection of the just.

Enclosed please find an order of $2. to pay on my paper. I deeply regret that I have not been able to remit before; sickness and depression of business has hindered. Please accept my sincere thanks for kindly sending on the paper right along. THE RESTITUTION has long ago become a welcome visitor in my family. I rejoice that it is strengthening the church with its meat in due season and it is faithfully proclaiming to a perishing world the judgments that are to follow the end of Gentile times. Oh, that some may take warning and flee from the wrath to come. May you be spared in health and strength to be able to discharge the pressing duties that you are called to bear.

I will enclose you $2.00 for one year's subscription. I am sorry to be behind on so worthy a paper. I love the paper and am very glad you have sent it from January. I love and prize the paper above all others; I love the theme of Christ's coming and kingdom. In fact the teaching of the paper suits my belief and I shall continue to take it as my preacher. I have not heard any of the same faith preach, but have taken THE RESTITUTION some three or four years and expect to as long as I see things as I do now. I prize it so much that I read all of the paper nearly every issue, and oh, how I prize it! Though I may never see any of you in these years, I hope to see many of you in the kingdom. I need not write any more. Will remit $2.00 either in money or stamps. My love to the cause. I am in a new place and have little means. Am improving a new home in the far west and very thinly settled country of Montana. THOMPSON A. KENNIS.

Brethren interested in circulating books and tracts will do well to notice the special offer made by Bro. Wiley Jones in another column of our paper, and get his really excellent works at half price--which is less than the actual cost of the books. No better literature for mission work is offered by any one than the works of Bro. Jones, and the entire stock should be taken in ten days.

It is supposed that more than 50,000 deaths have resulted from the ravages of the cholera in Spain already; and between 1,000 and 2,000 are dying daily. It is a fearful visitation of this form of pestilence.

No. 4—the July issue of the quarterly entitled—"Words of Truth," has come to hand. It is published by the "Association for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge," at five cents a year. Address John Donaldson, Sec., 656 Halsey Street, Brooklyn, N. Y. It makes an excellent tract for distribution. Numerous tracts, pamphlets and books on Conditional Immortality, may be had by sending to the same address.

We insert an article this week from the N. Y Independent on "Protestant worship in Rome." It is with peculiar pleasure that we read that the Waldenses have an organization and a church in the city from whence excommunications and crusades were proclaimed against them. We give this article to show that the Papal Supremacy is a thing of the past—the 1260 years of the temporal power have expired, and the "little horn" of Daniel's fourth beast has had his dominion taken away. Political events mark the ending of prophetical periods, and not the second advent of Christ.

We intended to write a short article for this week's issue on the grammatical and historical connection that the first two chapters of Matthew's gospel history have with the third, but have not found the time. We believe as strongly in the genuineness of these chapters as we do in the remaining part of the book. We say the same with regard to the first two chapters of Luke's gospel. We emphasize on the remark we made last week, that we have no sympathy whatever with the theory that claims that Jesus Christ was a natural Son of Joseph. For himself the Editor will say that he is not ashamed of the record given in these chapters concerning the genesis of Jesus Messiah. We unhesitatingly believe the whole record God has given of his own dear Son.

THE PROTESTANT CHURCHES OF ROME.

At a time when no less a person than the Roman Pontiff is aroused to anxiety and indignation by the inroads which Protestant teaching has made in this city, it may be found interesting to consider what has been the progress of evangelical truth in Rome during the last fifteen years of freedom from Papal rule. If we wish to recall the position of Italian, or even of foreign, Protestants in Italy, under the old regime, we have but to look at the melancholy little group of alien places of worship—English, Scotch and American—thrust out beyond the gates like the slaughter-houses and other abominations with which the holy city must not be polluted, to perceive that no great liberality was shown by the paternal government to the holders of strange doctrines, even when the holders were themselves but strangers and sojourners in the land. The very existence of Protestant places of worship was, in fact, merely a concession, obtained not without a struggle; and while the externals of the buildings were compelled to be as unchurchlike as possible, so as not to attract public attention to them, their frequenters were not at all times safe from molestation.

Meanwhile the native Protestant may be said to have no recognized existence whatever. He was simply ignored. If he could not be altogether stamped out, it was from no want of will or energy in the stamper, but rather it was due to that inherent human perverseness which has, in every age of the world's history, made of martyrs' blood seed from which martyrs have sprung, and rendered persecution but a synonym for propagation. Even the Church at Rome seemed at last to wake up to a certain perception of this fact, and during the present century at least, has not ventured on any very furious assaults on the persons of those who happened to differ with her; although there are still men in Rome—not old ones, either—who have seen the inside of the Inquisition's prisons, and it is not many years since a Bible was in all ways a perilous possession in the Italian peninsula. For not only was its owner liable to pains and penalties from the spiritual authorities, but he was also held accountable for it to the state. There is, unfortunately, not a copy remaining of the original Italian translation of the Bible of 1848, the whole edition having been seized and burnt by the agents of the Holy Office before it was fairly in circulation. It seems almost incredible to us now, but it is a fact, that among the offenses which about thirty-five years ago went to make up the crime of high treason in Italy—not in Rome only, but in Naples, in Tuscany, and other states—the possession of a Bible was one. It was in the list of revolutionary and forbidden books, and for a man to own it was to subject him to prison, the galleys, and even to death.

Now, Bible depots are established in every Italian city; itinerant dealers circulate the sacred Book throughout every village. One displays his precious little stock-in-trade in the very square in Florence which saw the martyrdom of Savonarola; and in Rome itself, in a conspicuous shop in the Corso, a whole window is filled with copies of the Italian version of the Scriptures, spread open, one at this page and one at another, to be read by those who run. The whole of the New Testament can be purchased for five cents, and the separate gospels for two cents each.

It is not surprising, that such a state of things should be annoying to the Ultramontane or priestly party, whose policy has always been to keep the people in ignorance. In point of fact, however, the priestly party is but a small minority in the city of Rome; and Rome, in spite of its teachings and traditions, is not a religious place. France may have her miracles at Lourdes; Naples may tolerate her marvel-working relics; but nothing of the kind is possible in the mocking city of Pasquino. Nowhere are the churches so empty; which, to be sure, is not wonderful, seeing that there are no less than 366 of them with space to accomodate ten times the ordinary population of the city. But further indications are not wanting, and among other things, nowhere are the priests treated with less deference than in Rome. In Naples or in Venice the people uncover to them as they pass. In Rome they have to encounter the common jostle of the Roman pavement, with but a very scant measure of courtesy shown to them. Nowhere in Italy are they so unpopular. In other cities political freedom has naturally involved religious freedom, but the two are not so indissolubly one and the same thing, as they are in Rome. The rest of Italy writhed, indeed, under the rule of her tyrants, but those tyrants were not as in Rome, her spiritual rulers: hence the reaction has not been so great elsewhere. Nowhere else in Italy have the people so thoroughly acquiesced in the bold stroke of the Italian parliament which rid the country of the disreputable hordes of begging friars that formerly infested the city.

And while this has been accomplished by the Roman Catholic people of Italy, the Protestant fraction of it has not been idle. Indeed, it has been a great deal too busy and too energetic to suit the mind of his holiness, Leo XIII.

We have said that there are 365 churches in Rome, one for every day in the year; and pilgrims and art-lovers have been known pious or energetic enough to visit in turn the whole collection. But there are yet seven churches to which no pilgrimages are made, and which offer no kind of attraction to the art-lover or the antiquarian. They are now, and for the most part, simple to bareness, they have neither architecture, nor sculpture, nor mosaics, nor paintings to represent them; and yet to the thoughtful American or English visitor they will seem to possess an interest greater than that of any of the gilded basilicas to which his guide-book directs him. They are the churches of the once proscribed Italian Protestants.

These have all, of course, sprung into existence since the Italian occupation of Rome; for up to that time, as we have said, no assembly of heretics was permitted within the sacred city. Now their light is permitted to shine with what radiance it may, undisturbed, at least, by the government; and their influence, it is believed, is gradually, if slowly, extending. To each church schools are attached, in which the children, in addition to, or rather as a foundation of their education, are taught to read and understand the Scriptures, and required each to possess a Bible in the Italian language, for the purpose of study and reference. It is these schools which are more than anything else a thorn in the pontifical side. For the scholars are by no means all, or necessarily, the children of Protestant parents, a considerable number of Roman Catholic parents of liberal views preferring to send their children to the evangelical schools for the sake of the instruction received there, which it is almost needless to say, is of a far higher standard than that obtainable in the schools which are under the priestly guidance. And it is certain that numerous conversions, not only of children but of whole families, have resulted from this circumstance.

In a report of the schools attached to the Free Christian Church of Italy, special mention is made of this matter. "Each teacher," says the report, "begins the day by Bible expository teaching, hymn, and prayer. In the afternoon, again, the whole school unites in prayer and praise before separating. The closing service is frequently attended by parents or friends, who come to conduct the children home.... Whole families are now attending the Free Italian Church who have been brought there by their growing interest in the new and better way in which they behold their children being led."

The seven Protestant churches of Rome represent, unfortunately, as many different branches of sects, the differences between them being, it would seem, the result rather of untoward circumstances than of wilful divergence. They were brought up apart. Nourished in secret, and under the sternest repression, each little community of the Reformed naturally adopted its own form of worship. The fact is one which is now beginning to be felt as a subject of regret and much noxious thought by those who desire for Italy a National Evangelical Church. But the differences are slight, the bond of union strong; and though doubtless some difficulties of pride and prejudice have to be overcome, it is surely not Utopian to hope that unification is not far off, where all take their stand on the same gospel, and look for guidance only to its precepts.

The oldest, the most influential, and from its associations the most interesting of the Italian Protestant Churches is the Waldensian, a community which, by its patient endurance and missionary enterprise under untold difficulties, has earned for itself the veneration of Protestant Europe. Through centuries of oppression and persecution, with all the spiritual and temporal power of Rome arrayed against it, and often proscribed and hunted down with fire and sword, the Waldensian Church has not only existed, but strange to say, has thriven and extended its ramifications on this side and on that. Its agents have, at the risk and often at the cost of their lives, carried the gospel from one end of Italy to the other. Beaten, but never conquered, crushed, but never killed, the Waldensian Church has carried on from age to age its heroic warfare against bigotry and superstition, to find itself at last, if not triumphant, at least free.

Not very long ago the writer had the pleasure of attending a service of this Church in Rome. The little meeting-house was filled from end to end with a reverent and attentive congregation, composed chiefly of the lower classes. The service was severely simple, the sermon forcible and eloquent. But the most interesting portion of the whole was undoubtedly the singing of the hymns, or rather that metrical version of the Psalms, the chanting of which has, for centuries past, formed so distinguishing a feature of the Waldensian worship. It is difficult to imagine any thing more heart-striking or touching than the singing of these Psalms, joined to the associations with which they are inseparably connected. As the rich Italian voices, which fall so readily into harmonies, rose, without the aid of any instrument, swelled into a wild and solemn melody, every note of which was evidently as familiar to the assembly as the words which accompanied them, the effect was simply thrilling. Remembering, as we could not but do, how from generation to generation these persecuted brethren of ours had drawn their best consolation under trial and their noblest inspiration in the face of danger from the singing of these very Psalms, it was impossible, as we listened, not to feel our hearts throb with a feeling of thankful joy that the day had come at last when these songs of praise could be raised to heaven without fear, even in the very heart of Rome itself.

Next in importance to the Waldensian, is, perhaps, the Free Church of Italy, whose influence is very extensive in the northern part of the kingdom, and whose chief seat is in Florence. But in no city of Italy is the Evangelical Italian Church without its witness now, while in Rome, as we have already said, seven distinct churches, united in heart while differing somewhat as to matters of form, are thriving, progressing, and making their influence felt. Americans may not sympathize with them fully in all their ideas—we, too, have our idiosyncrasies—but at least, we must hold out the right hand of Christian fellowship to them, with a hearty "God bless you."—N. Y. Independent.

SERVANTS OF GOD.

Have you ever observed, both in the Old Testament and in the New, the dignity of the service of God is spoken of as paramount to all the other dignities of God's people? "Hast thou seen my servant Job?" Job, according to God's own account of him, was unparalleled upon the earth. There was not another man like him on the earth, and the Lord could boast of him as "My servant Job." God spoke with Moses face to face, but when God would boast of Moses, he does not speak of other privileges, but of this: "My servant, that is faithful in all my house." The great Apostle Paul, of whom we were speaking, puts his being a servant of God before his apostleship. You never find him writing, "Paul, an apostle and a servant," but "Paul, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ." You find the same in Peter. You never find him saying, "Peter an apostle and a servant," but he also says, "Peter, the servant of God and of Jesus Christ, and an apostle." When the great Apostle speaks of James, he calls him "the Lord's brother;" but when you find James writing his Epistle, it is, "James the servant of God and of Jesus Christ." The beloved disciple lay upon the bosom of God, but we do not find him speaking of this as his primal privilege; it was, "John, the servant of Jesus Christ."

The man after God's own heart had learned the lesson that I wish we all would learn on this subject to-day. Have you marked his pleading with God? He does not plead his earthly dignity, and say, "Great God, I am a king!" nor does he plead his prophetic office, but he comes before God as a poor, needy man, and he pleads thus: "I am thy servant." If you were to take a concordance, and read the number of pleas that David founds upon this, it would interest you: "Be merciful unto thy servant," "He surety for thy servant," "Hide not thy face from thy servant." Go all through, and you find hopelessly the service of the Lord, and that he was engaged as the servant of God before than all other considerations whosoever. This also was Elijah's boast: "The Lord God Almighty," he says, "before whom I stand." He was a great prophet, and he performed mighty things, but he boasts not of his office, and not of his works; he boasts of his service: "The Lord liveth before whom I stand." This was Gabriel's dignity: "I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God." The glory of the angelic host does not consist in this, that they excel in strength, that they stand upon the mount of God, but that they do his commandments, and that they hearken unto the words of his mouth. There is no higher dignity in heaven, no higher privilege than to be the servant of God. When we come to the Revelation we read of a goodly multitude there clothed in white robes. There are palms in their hands, they stand upon a sheet of glass, they harp with the harps of gold; but what is the privilege on which the Spirit of God lays emphasis? Not their robes, not their palms, not their harps, but this—"They serve God, day and night, in his temple."—Marcus Rainsford.

Some friend sends us a copy of the Evening Star from Philadelphia with the following article marked.—[Ed. Res.]

IMMORTALITY—ETERNAL LIFE.—The word immortal or immortality occurs but six times in the Bible: in 1 Tim. i. 17; vi. 16; and 2 Tim. i. 10; where it is an attribute of God: in Rom. ii. 7; immortality is to be sought for by patient continuance in well doing; and in 1 Cor. xv. 53-54; the saints are to put on immortality at the resurrection. Man's inherent immortality is not taught in the Bible. The second coming of Christ is referred to in over three hundred texts in the Bible, and the doctrine of the resurrection is taught clearly in over one hundred texts; but no mention is made of the immortal soul as separate from the body. The Bible says the dead know not anything.

The many prophecies relating to a glorious future will be fulfilled when Christ comes to inaugurate the Kingdom of God on the earth. Read Isaiah ii. 2, 3, 4; xi. 1, 9; Daniel vii. 14, 18, 27; Micah ix. 1-7; Zech. xiv. 4-9.

The Lord's coming is not at death; the last enemy to be destroyed is death. The same Jesus who was crucified will come again with power and great glory; then the Saints sleeping in the dust of the earth shall awake, who will, with those who are alive at his coming, be made immortal; this vile body will be fashioned like unto his glorious body. Then the unbelieving world will continue mortal and unchanged; they will suffer from the righteous judgments which God in his justice is to pour out on the earth, purifying and creating it new; and when it is remembered that the time has passed for accepting that precious gift of God, through Jesus Christ—eternal life—there will be tribulation and anguish, with weeping and gnashing of teeth. Then the nations from which the saved have been taken will become the obedient subjects of Christ's Kingdom, and the Great King with his chosen saints will reign over the nations for a thousand years. Read Acts i. 11; 1 Cor. x. 51-52; Phil. iii. 20-21; 1 Thess. iv. 14-17; 1 Cor. vi. 2; Rev. v. 10; xx. 5-6; xxi. 21. He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved.

"MARCH OF THE WHITE MAN."

Such is the heading of an article in THE RESTITUTION of August 5, 1885, copied from the London Spectator. The author states facts without having any knowledge of the philosophy of their increase.

In our forth coming work, 'Eastern Question in its Various Phases," we have discussed that subject at length, under the Biblical Hebrew and American phases; to that work we direct the reader. In the present article we shall simply outline what we have there reasoned out in full.

The past history and future destiny of the Hebrew race can alone afford the divine solution to the problem as to the origin, spread and dominion of the "white man." We put no stress on color, since climate has much to do with complexion, but we rely on race or family. And in thus speaking we do not intimate the existence of the purity of any royal blood, not even that of the Son of God. His genealogy shows Gentile mixture. Jesus took on him, not simply human nature, but the blood of a family whose vital current flows in the veins of all races. What we claim is this, the Hebrew family has been, now is, and will be through endless ages, the dominant race of the world. This is the problem of the age, all other problems are, before it, as the dust of the balance. Jesus, the Son of God, the Son of David, and his reign, as the royal high priest, on the throne of God, on his own throne—the throne of his father David, are the central topics of Bible investigations.

Mark well what the angel Gabriel said to Mary, "Thou shalt bring forth a son and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 32, 33.

Jacob was not a Gentile. We know nothing of any but a literal Jacob, nor of any family of that name except the two great divisions of literal Judah and literal Israel (who was to be known by another name). Jacob was, by the angel, called Israel. That family—10 tribes after Solomon's reign—was to have another name, known among all nations, and be a dominant race among the Gentiles, in the latter times of the 4th Gentile monarchy. They were to be called after Isaac. Gen. xxi. 12; Rom. ix. 7, 8; Heb. xi. 18. In that work (Eastern Question) we have shown that the family of Isaac is now the dominant race or white family of the world; that, by that name (Saxon, Isaac, Sons, Sax, Saxon). By that family, through its language, laws and religion, the world is now principally governed. It is not simply the white man, but rather the Saxon. The divine purpose in making the Saxon the dominant family of the world, was revealed to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and enunciated by the prophets. The history of the world from the flood to the present time, is but the development of God's purpose to make of one blood (one dominating blood, that of Israel or Isaac) all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bound of their habitation. Acts xxvii. 26. With this agrees Deut. xxxii. 8, 9, "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel [literal, not spiritual]. For the Lord's portion [is] his people; Jacob [is] the lot of his inheritance."

That family's history has been remarkable, and its future will be triumphant and glorious. Who cannot see its pathway through all ages? It is the central nation—the hub of the great national wheel. The predictions of Jacob, couched in his blessings on Joseph, and his two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim, can have no meaning worthy of the occasion, except those tribes [10 tribes] have been kept somewhere in an prosperous state, yet known by another name. The "Slav."—Russian—has its mission, but the "Teuton"—German, Saxon—or Judah [or Israel], is the dominant race of the coming age. Under their prince, Messiah, all families and dominions shall render due servitude.

The theme is vast. God's purpose towards Israel is beginning to loom up. It is assuming immense proportions, and the events before us will again dwarf the ocean homes of the great west. The desert wastes of Asia and Africa will soon be clothed with Eden verdure. Who can view passing events without deep emotion? Who can believe that the great national movements are made the sport of their self-blinded rulers? A great king of the first Gentile monarchy once thought so; but seven years with the beast taught him a wiser lesson. Jehovah rules the nations and is working among them relative to the universal empire of Messiah, his beloved Son. Lord hasten the day when the Messiah shall be king over all the earth.

J. P. WEETHEE.

A Few Stray Thoughts.

What is it to be a disciple, is a question of great importance in this day and age of the world, to all those who are trying to live godly. Jesus in the commission tells his disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptised shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be condemned. Now was belief and baptism all that was embodied in that sentence? Is not Christ our pattern in all things and did not he find a work to do as long as he was in this life, and will not his disciples have to follow his example; if they inherit eternal life?

Jesus says, Rev. iii. 21, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne even as I also overcame and sit down with my Father in his throne. What was it that Jesus overcame? was not the trials and temptations of his every day life a part of that work? did he take part in all kinds of society just so they were popular? I think not, we have no record of such. He was always found doing something to glorify his Father in heaven.

We never read of him spending his time at theatres, balls, festivals, socials, tea-parties or at any of the world's amusements, without he went there to do good.

How is it with his followers to-day, do they go to such places to do good? can they take the name of Jesus with them when they go out to spend the evening playing cards or any entertainment of the world's get-up. If it is not a fit place for his name it is no place for him, and if the head cannot go how can the body?

Oh! That we, believing in the coming of Christ, would come out from the world and its amusements, and show our faith by works, "that we may present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service.

May we strive daily to overcome trials and temptations that lead us away from Christ and so crucify the lusts of the flesh. Watch and pray lest we enter into temptation; that we may be found not only ready but watching and waiting for the return of the Bridegroom, having our lamps trimmed and burning and our vessels filled with oil. Yours in hope of eternal life.

Uniting Means.

Nothing is more remarkable in the Bible than to see how God, as if to teach us to trust in nothing and in none but himself, selects means that seem the worse fitted to accomplish his end. Does he choose an ambassador to Pharaoh?—it is a man of stammering tongue. Are the streams of Jericho to be sweetened?—salt is cast into the spring. Are the eyes of the blind to be opened?—they are rubbed with clay. Are the battlements of a city to be thrown down?—the means employed is, not the blast of a mine, but the breath of an empty trumpet. Is a rock to be riven?—the lightning is left to sleep above, and the earthquake with its throes to sleep below, while a rod is used which is more likely to be shivered on the rock than to shiver it. Are man to be converted by preaching, and won from sensual delights to a faith whose symbol is a cross, and whose crown is to be won among the fires of martyrdom? Leaving schools, and halls, and colleges, God summons his preachers from the shores of Galilee. The helm of the Church is entrusted to hands that had never steered aught but a fishing boat; and by the mouth of one who had been its bloodiest persecutor. Christ pleads his cause before the philosophers of Athens and in the palaces of Rome.—Guthrie.

Conference Notice.

The Annual Meeting of the Christian Association of Iowa, will be held, (if the Lord will) at Irving, Fama Co., Iowa, commencing Thursday evening, Sept. 24, 1885. Churches will send delegates at the usual ratio, and all who love the truth are invited to attend. Those coming by the C. & N.-W. R. R. will stop at Belle Plaine; those by the M. & St. P. R. R. at Elberon. Those coming by rail will be met with teams, if they notify the undersigned of the train they will come on. A good meeting and general attendance is hoped for. To this end will exchanges having a circulation in Iowa please copy.

THE WANDERER'S DREAM.—GEN. XXVIII.

He slept beneath the desert skies,
His pillow was the desert stone,
Yet heavenly visions blessed his eyes,
And cheered his spirit sad and lone.
He saw the stair of light let down,
Whose shining steps the angels trod,
And called the desert where it shone—
The gate of heaven—the house of God.

Thy sleepless eye, O God, still keeps
Its watch o'er every covenant heir;
And angels down that ladder's steps
From thee to me a blessing bear.
Through Christ to Thee ascends my prayer,
Through Christ on me is grace bestowed;
Each place becomes, when Christ is there,
The gate of heaven—the house of God.

In dungeons dark, in dwellings mean,
Where suffering saints have bent the knee,
That mystic ladder has been seen,
And angels come with gifts from Thee.
This night may I the vision see,
My spirit climb that radiant road;
This night my quiet chamber be
The gate of heaven—the house of God.

CHRIST THE SON OF GOD.

Editor Restitution:

The following will explain itself. Please publish the questions and the replies, and oblige.

H. V. REED.

WAGON'S GROVE, Ill.

Bro. Reed.

I notice in THE RESTITUTION an article from you, on "Christ the Son of God," in which you seem to think that it is the highest presumption for any one to question the correctness of the angel's account of the Divine begettal of Christ. Now leaving out what the fathers have said, and the dates of the original MSS. of the sacred writings; will you allow me to ask you a few questions on the general subject of Christ's begettal, suggested by the Bible as we now have it? and will you answer them?

JOEL A. SIMONDS.

QUESTIONS BY BRO. SIMONDS—ANSWERS BY BRO. REED.

1. Have you never felt, secretly, a little ashamed of the record of the Divine begettal of Christ as given by the angel?

Ans. Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation; of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of the Father with all the holy angels. Mark viii. 38.

2. Aside from the account of the angel, is there any such divine begettal mentioned, or promised in the Bible?

Ans. God so loved the world that he gave his ONLY BEGOTTEN SON, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life. John iii. 16.

3. Was not Christ to be begotten according to the promise made to Abraham and to David? Gen. xv. 4; 2 Sam. vii. 12.

Ans. Yes, and it includes still more which you should have referred to. The first promise brings out the great truth that the seed of woman was to overthrow the evil and triumph gloriously. Christ is of Abraham's seed and son of David, but made of a woman under the law. See Gen. iii. 15; Gal. iv.

4. Was not this promise fulfilled according to the flesh? Acts ii. 30; Rom. i. 3.

Ans. Yes, it was fulfilled according to the flesh and also according to the spirit! Yea, "The word was made flesh and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the ONLY BEGOTTEN OF THE FATHER,) full of grace and truth." John i. 14.

5. Was not his nature like the nature of Abraham, and of David, and of Moses, and of their brethren, a little lower than the angels—corruptible? Heb. ii. 17, 18.

Ans. Christ was made lower than the angels for the suffering of death, but this does not destroy his spirit begettal any more than it affects your begettal of spirit while in flesh. You are lower than angels yet, although you claim to have been begotten by spirit. Will you not allow as much for Christ who was in all points made like unto his brethren? You have the sword by the blade, my brother. Try again.

6. Is not the record complete without the angel's account?

Ans. God has given us a record of his Son as the only begotten in three distinct epochs of his wonderful mission among men. "And there are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water and the blood: and these three agree in one" (record.)

1. Christ was begotten by spirit as the only begotten of the Father.

2. In his baptism by water he was acknowledged as the Son of God.

3. His blood flowed at the crucifixion and he was declared to be the Son of God. Truly this was the SON OF GOD. Without these three important points the record would be incomplete! Then came the vindication, his glorious spiritual birth into the fulness of divine Sonship by his resurrection from the dead!

7. Does not the angel's account require the violation of the law of generation, Gen. ii. 24; and the transgression of the law of Moses, which is punishable with death? Deut. xxii. 23, 24.

8. Does not the account deny the promise? Gen xv. 4; 2 Sam. vii. 12; Matt. i. 20.

9. Can God deny his own promise, or his own law? 2 Tim. ii. 13; Heb. vi. 17, 18.

Ans. Bro. Simonds should know that God created Adam by direct power, and he stands at the head of the old creation, while Christ was created by direct power, and is the THE BEGINNING of the new CREATION. The new creation began in Christ, for it is declared that he is the "beginning of the creation of God." This must refer to the new creation. The same applies to each heir of promise. After being begotten by spirit they are now creatures (creation) in Christ. The new creation reaches back to the begettal, hence Christ must have been begotten in flesh by spirit, or we are yet as heirs, under the old creation. The laws referred to apply to the conduct of men. All life is from God. He can convey life direct or by an agent. Hence no transgression.

10. If Christ was begotten as described by the angel, could he have been made in all things like his brethren? Heb. ii. 17. Could he have been tempted in all points like as we are? Heb. iv. 15.

Ans. Adam and his brethren are alike, yet he was made by direct creation while they are born under the law of generation. The fact that Christ is beginning of the new creation by direct power does not destroy the likeness, among his brethren. There is not much in this question.

11. Has it not been a law from the beginning, that the parents transmit to their offspring their own nature? Gen. i. 21, 24.

12. Is such a begettal as described by the angel possible? Is there any middle ground between a corruptible being, and an incorruptible being? Can there be any such thing, as a being partly corruptible, and partly incorruptible, partly human, and partly divine, partly finite and partly infinite?

Ans. Allowing your own position to be true Christ was certainly a Son of God. This proves you wholly wrong. If, as the Son of man, he had a human nature, then as a Son of God he had a divine nature! Out of thine own mouth you are condemned. Your difficulty about two natures at one and the same time would rob every saint of the title of heirship and immortality. Peter says; "Being born (begotten) again not of corruptible seed but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."

This expresses the whole truth in a few words. Each heir is now in a corruptible state, made of flesh and blood, but he has been begotten by the incorruptible seed while in the flesh. Now you do not find any difficulty about two natures. Why should you become dazed about Christ; he was begotten by the incorruptible seed in flesh and became a fit type and example to all his brethren. Please be consistent; either give up your difficulty about Christ's two natures or extend your trouble to each heir of promise. The rule which solves the difficulty with the saints will enlighten you about Christ. No one pretends that the saints are now partly mortal and partly immortal, and yet they have been begotten by spirit by the incorruptible seed while in flesh. Christ was begotten by spirit in flesh or he had a spiritual birth without any spirit begettal at all! Can there be a spirit birth without a spirit begettal? Certainly not. Then why not believe the record which God has given of his Son?

13. Is not the account itself contradictory? Does it not speak of the child as being the Son of David, and then say that he shall be called the Son of God? Luke i. 32, 35.

Ans. With your position of no account of a spirit begettal there is an open square conflict, but admitting Jesus to be the only begotten Son of God all is plain. The trouble lies at your door. Please get yourself right and the difficulty will cease.

14. Is such a begettal with the flesh, the way God begets children? James i. 18; 1 Pet. i. 3.

Ans. Yes it is just God's way. Every child of God is begotten, not by the will of the flesh but of God! See John i. This begettal is in a mortal man by the incorruptible seed.—

15. Is there any difference between being the begotten Son of God in the flesh, and being the Son of God by the resurrection of the dead in the world to come? 1 Cor. xv. 42, 51. What is the difference?

Ans. Each heir of promise must be begotten by spirit in order to have a spirit birth unless men can be born without begettal, but I presume you would not confound begettal and birth.

16. Did God know any thing about such a divine begettal? Then why did he not say something about it?

Ans. He gave his ONLY BEGOTTEN SON. Why will you close your eyes against the word of God?

17. Did inspired men know any thing about it? Then, why did they not mention it? For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh?

Ans. The record is replete with terms, promises and illustrations. It is the heart of unbelief which rebells against the word. He came out from God. God was his Father. He was his Son. He was the Lord from heaven; the beginning of the new creation. The Son given. The types foretold him, prophets lifted the veil of futurity and pointed the sin-burdened world to the greater than Solomon. Let any one read carefully the wonderful story of his life and they will agree with those who passed by at the time of his crucifixion "Truly this was the Son of God."

18. Who did know about such begettals? The heathen. They knew all about them. They had believed in them for hundreds of years before Christ was born.

19. Then, where did this account come from? God and the inspired men knew nothing about it. The heathen only knew of such divine begettal.

20. Then, is not the conclusion unavoidable, that some of the heathen were converted to Christianity; that they brought the doctrine into the church, and that the church introduced it into the Bible, just as other perversions were introduced into it. Not as forgeries, but as their honest faith.

Ans. The whole system of heathen tradition goes to show that the idea of a coming Savior was outside of the power of man, and it becomes a most powerful reproof to those who would tie all the promises to a human salvation and ignore God. Strange that men with Bibles in hand will openly slice off whole chapters and figure away into mysteries the sublimest prophecies in order to evade the grandest of all inspired revelation. No indeed. The heathen did not bring to Christianity the doctrine of Jesus being the Son of God. The apostles carried the news of his divine Sonship to the nations. The record as given by Matthew and Luke was published throughout old Syria within fifty years after the death of Christ, and aside from these narrations the whole scope of divine revelation makes him God's Son by begettal as well as by birth. The whole gospel is based upon the same system still. A spirit begettal in flesh must go before a birth of spirit at the resurrection. We most reverently bow before the exalted heir of all things and believe that Jesus Christ came in the flesh, and has led the way from flesh to spirit as the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.

THE LOCALITY OF EDEN.—NO. I.

Eden! what a blessed sound is in that name! What sweet and fragrant memories of pristine purity, felicity, and beauty linger around that word! So sweet and abiding has been its endeared remembrance, that mankind in all their subsequent wanderings have carried with them, either in one form or another, some recollections of this true Elysium. Poets have sung of its departed joys, orators have loved to dwell upon its sunny memories of innocence, loveliness, and bliss; and painters have attempted to embody their conceptions of its glorious scenes on canvas in forms of transcendent beauty that speak both to the eye and the heart with wondrous power. The ancients spoke of a 'golden age' that once had been, followed by successive steps of deterioration. Somehow or other, its memory lives enshrined, as it were, in humanity's heart of hearts, interwoven with all their conceptions of what is purest, most innocent, and best in earthly forms and scenes of loveliness. What wonder, then, it, after months or years of weary wanderings to and fro, when the primitive founders of nations chanced to alight on some uncommonly delightful and verdant spot that they should fancy with compare it to Paradise, and that, as generations rolled on, their descendants would forget that it was only a comparison that their founders had made, and would believe, as the tradition began to grow hoary with antiquity, that this was the very spot where stood that lovely primeval abode? Thus it has come about, as we opine, that the Cingalese (natives of Ceylon) fix it in some lovely part of their island, where—

> The spicy breezes
> Blow soft o'er Ceylon's isle,
> Where every prospect pleases,
> And only man is vile.

And that the Hindoo places it in the lovely vale of Cashmere, the Arab amid the fragrant groves of Yemen, in 'Araby the blest,' the Persian amid the roses and the blooming bowers of Shiraz, and the Syrian at Damascus, on the banks of 'Abana and Pharphar'—a place of which the Arabs relate that Mahomet declined to enter, saying that it was granted to man to have but one paradise, and that Damascus was so much like one, that he feared to enter it, lest he should be tempted to rest content there, and so be shut out from the one which he sought for above.

And not only have mankind sought, as it were, to still retain the fond recumbrance of its joys amongst them by associating it, as we have just shown, along with some verdant spot of earth, of superlative and attractive beauty; but they have also linked its features with human destinies, and transferred it to the final abode of the blessed; borrowing all the fair images of earthly bliss that were once enjoyed in Eden, or that form the aggregated sum of earthly pleasure and happiness now, to concentrate them around that mysterious final home which humanity hopes to reach after passing through life's chequered and troubled pilgrimage. This conception is graduated in ideal forms all the way upward from more gross and sensual enjoyments to those that are more refined and spiritual, according to the spiritual calibre and attainments of the various races who hold them, and taking the complexion of their religious beliefs or superstitions, as the case may be. Thus, the poor Indian clothes his ideal 'Spirit-land' with scenes drawn from his earthly condition, as a place where he will have the most of what he considers as good in the happy hunting grounds where his fathers have gone, as he thinks, reunited with the troubles, anguish, and pains of his present mortal life. The Mahometan reveals in the thought of sensual delights in drinking nectar under ambrosial shades in company with the dark-eyed houris—a paradise of mere animal pleasures. The mythology of Greece and Rome spoke of 'the Elysian Fields,' to which the spirits of the good went, after passing the river Styx and the waters of Lethe ('the river of death' and the 'water of oblivion'), where they basked under eternal groves and perpetual sunlight, blest with the smiles and the society of the gods, and possessing a full measure of felicity, free from all the alloy which is mixed up with our earthly cup of happiness. In short men have simply transferred their highest conceptions of good, as once enjoyed in Eden, or as now sometimes experienced, forward to the future state, and which in all cases takes its cue from the religious cast of the mind of the believer, and from the greater absence or presence, as the case happens to be, of true light and Scriptural knowledge. For the Bible and the religion of Christ, and their blessed revelations, can alone furnish us with the most solid and reliable information about the future state; and the current theologies of even our favored land are not founded, as much as men think they are, upon Bible teaching. There is far too much of heathenism and ancient mythology lingering yet in Christendom, as it is called, and even in the Protestant section of it too, whose ideas of heaven and hell are taken quite as much—if not even more, in many cases—from Greek mythology than they are from Scripture. They have sadly too much of the old paganism re-vamped under a Christian guise. That there is a foundation of truth in them to a slight extent, we grant; but let us return to the fountain head, where we can get that truth pure and simple, in the Bible accounts of Paradise, both first and second—with their consummate truths of the Fall and the Redemption—rather than wade through the corrupt stream of pagan mythology, which so many youths go to study at college, and return with a much better knowledge of than they do with a good understanding of Scripture, or of the religion of Christ. It is time to bring such folly to an end.

But in one form or another—whether associated with the traditions and obscurities of tradition and superstition, or held more purely and truly—there has lingered around the footsteps of humanity the sweet memories of lost Eden, and the ties somehow of a final restoration to its bliss. And always, be it couched in whatever shape it may, men conceive that when they are brought to it, or have it restored to them, that they shall then have bliss without alloy, and 'the rose without the thorn.' Is such an expectation groundless? Are such hopes in vain, and destined to be dashed? No! for 'Paradise Regained' is the destined supplement and consummation to 'Paradise Lost', to all the good and holy who have undergone that cleansing which the 'Redemption which is in Christ Jesus' provides for every lost child of Adam who chooses to come to it in the way appointed.

The Almighty Creator had long been preparing for the advent of man on the planet earth, as the interesting science of geology clearly shows. Slowly the fabric arose, age by age, in silent, steady progression, layer after layer of strata were deposited, which now speak to us out of their stony tablets, concerning 'aions' (ages) that are past, and 'worlds' that once have been existent here. For a world, in Bible language, does not refer half so much to the earth, as a globe, as it does to a kosmos, or economy of nature, obtaining upon it during the course of any given period, or 'aion;' for God has willed that such and such a natural system shall last during a certain great age or cycle of eternity. So that the true view is to regard the earth, or globe, as being a permanent thing, but nevertheless often changing its outward look and conditions, just as a person changes features and dress many times in the course of a lifetime. This truth is clearly brought out in Psa. civ. 25, 26; and in this light should we read and understand the famous third chapter of the second epistle of Peter. The Bible teaches that the earth and the heavenly bodies (or at least the most of them), are eternal as regards their individual existence, but not therefore changeless. Both Scripture and science show us many changes in the outward dress which the globe has worn during ages that are past, and prophecy foretells certain others that are yet to ensue in ages to come. But nothing is said about an absolute destruction of it as a mass. All talk of a contrary kind, though it may be often used by poets and orators, is not in accordance with the teachings of either of God's two great books—Nature and Revelation; for the first shows how the earth has remained as a planet, notwithstanding all the mighty convulsions and changes it underwent, and the latter foretells its permanent continuance under all that are to come; though some of these changes will be tremendously great, amounting even to a destruction, removal, and supersedence of most of our present cosmical system.

During all the time the successive terraces or layers of which man's home-world consists were in building, be it more or be it less, the Creator, who is a great benevolent economist, would not have it unenjoyed. Therefore he willed it to have each successive terrace peopled with forms of animal and vegetable life, of strangely varied shapes, but each admirably adapted to the changing conditions of earth, air, and seas, that obtained in those ages. Some of these he used as builders to rear the limestone rocks, just as he is using the coral insect now to rear new abodes for man in the southern seas. All these countless millions of living beings having each enjoyed their brief span of existence to the extent of their capacity, passed away, and gave place to new creations, each one more perfect than the last in symmetry and beauty, till the present series was reached, and man was called into being, to take the headship over all. Before his advent, there had been great uncouth creatures of colossal size and power, but upon his arrival these began to give place to a fauna more fitting and compatible to be our companions on earth; and the graceful, the richly colored, and infinite variety of beasts, birds, plants, and flowers now appeared, which distinguish the present creation above all that preceded it. It was now that nature, under the last touch of the almighty Artist, seemed to burst forth into her utmost profusion, beauty, and glory, so long maturing and held in abeyance. Now appeared for the first time such lovely creatures as the bird of Paradise and the graceful gazelle, the fragrant blushing rose, and all or most of the delicious, luscious fruits, grains, and edible plants which are so highly prized by man, and so delectable to his tastes and enjoyments. All these were brought into being at this juncture by a bountiful Creator, when a creature endowed with reason, and capable of rationally appreciating them, was about to appear on the scene. Then, at the end of the creation-week—whether or we take the 'day' periods spoken of to be longer or shorter—man, the lord of this mundane sphere, was called into being—the last of a series of physical creations, but the first of a series of moral and spiritual ones now in process of elaboration on this planet, and the connecting link between one and the other. Thus, at last, when the young creation smiled in freshness and beauty—or, at any rate, this last portion of it, appearing along with man—Adam (the red-earth man, for so his name signifies) stepped forth from the hand of his Maker, gazing with awe, wonder, and delight upon that world into which he now awoke to conscious being. Adam—the moral and accountable man—destined for a higher end than others of his fellow earth-born creatures, if he passed the ordeal of probation with success, but if not, to be found quite capable of perishing, even as they. The creation-week had seen a new economy educed out of chaotic confusion and commingled elements, into which some prior and existing world had probably been thrown by some great catastrophe, reduced to order, and clothed with forms of life and beauty.

This done, man was introduced upon the scene before the creative forces of nature had quite ceased their preparatory work, for they are going on still, and there are vast portions of the earth's surface that are not even yet fitted up for the happy and comfortable abode of civilized man. Therefore, when he attempts to sojourn in such unfriendly and inhospitable climes, he goes there before the time—before nature has got it ready for him—and pays the penalty for it by languishing out a life oppressed by many untoward physical privations and sufferings. In the Greek Scriptures, that part of our earth which may be considered as being in a more finished, and therefore habitable state, is called the oikoumene, or the 'habitable earth,' whose bounds are always enlarging as civilized man requires more room in which to dwell. See, for example, Luke ii. 1; xxi. 26; Acts xi. 28—in all of which texts the original word rendered 'world' is oikoumene, and in New Testament times was mostly included within the bounds of the Roman Empire. So that those make a great mistake who imagine that all the many regions and climates of the globe were equally perfect and beautiful, or that they have been equally affected by and permeated with the effects of the curse and the consequences of the Fall. In one sense, and to some extent, they have, but in other respects they have not, and we need to make some discrimination. Expositors often over-do the thing here too, as they do elsewhere, and make statements about all these things that are quite contrary to facts, unwarranted by science, and unauthorised by Scripture. Though God was so well pleased on taking a survey of his handiwork in the Adamic creation as to pronounce it 'very good,' this is not to be taken in a universal and absolute sense, for he yet intends to make a creation still better and in every way more perfect. The idea, then, must be 'very good' as regards the orderly adaptation of all its parts to serve its present use and intention as a natural order of things. There is a spiritual order yet to follow; but the natural takes the priority of the spiritual (1 Cor. xv. 45-50) in order of time. To judge by the way many write and speak, we would have to believe that the whole surface of the globe, at the epoch of Adam's creation, was a perfect Elysium, and nothing left short anywhere of absolute perfection and beauty, and that it has become, under the curse, like a blasted, withered plant. But the Bible does not warrant such ideas, and contains much to the contrary. A curse there was indeed, but not to such an extent as that. It is a true axiom, that where all are equally perfect, there is no chance for any to excel. So, if all the earth were an Eden, wherein could the 'land of Eden' have any chance to excel others? and if all places in Eden, even, had been equal, why did the Lord make choice of a spot in the eastern part of that region to plant a 'garden of the Lord' there? the whole narrative presupposes great natural differences, and therefore plenty of room for choice.

Here, then, in the midst of the earth did the Lord plant a 'delightsome garden' in a 'delightful' land and climate; for the word Paradise means 'a garden of delight,' 'a pleasure garden,' and the name Eden also signifies that which is agreeable, pleasant, and delightsome; and was doubtless given because of the agreeable nature of the climate. For fertility and richness of vegetation, fruit trees, etc., are but the result, the outcome of the requisite climatic conditions. It was of such a clime that the sweet poetess Felicia Hemans (well was she so named) sings so well in her beautiful poem on 'The Better Land:'

> 'I hear there speak of the better land,
> Thou call'st its children a happy band;
> Mother! oh, where is that radiant shore?
> Shall we not seek it, and weep no more?
> Is it where the flower of the orange blows,
> And the fire-flies gleam through the myrtle boughs?'
> —'Not there, not there, my child!'
>
> 'Is it where the feathery palm-trees rise,
> And the date grows ripe under sunny skies?
> Or midst the green islands of glittering seas,
> Where fragrant forests perfume the breeze,
> And strange bright birds on their starry wings
> Bear the rich hues of all glorious things?'
> —'Not there, not there, my child!'
>
> 'Is it far away, in some region old,
> Where the rivers wander o'er sands of gold—
> Where the burning rays of the ruby shine,
> And the diamond lights up the secret mine,
> And the pearl gleams forth from the coral strands—
> Is it there, sweet mother, that better land?'
> —'Not there, not there, my child!'

Yes, the glorious land of Eden was all this, and even more, although Mrs. Hemans did not accept it as the theme of her song; for Moses says as much of Paradise and its surroundings as to warrant us to believe that it was, as it were, a concentration of every scene and form of natural beauty in the animal, mineral, and vegetable world, and especially in the latter; being such as would far out-do the utmost skill of any landscape gardener, catering for the refined taste of the rich at a Chatsworth or a Versailles. Those only can realize it who have visited the East, or any tropical or sub-tropical climates, and seen nature arrayed in its utmost profusion and beauty. To see the delicate variety and richness of its vegetation, the surpassing fragrance and beauty of its flowers, the variety of its delicious fruits, the glory of its forests, the brilliancy of the plumage of its birds and insects flashing in the glorious sunshine under its skies of rosate hues and clouds of gorgeous tints; its sparkling waters and seas, abounding with gaudily colored fish, water-fowl, shells, and corals; water, earth, and air teeming with life; forms of beauty and grace flitting about and flashing with lights as of a thousand dyes; while all the time there is a balmy fragrance in the air, borne by spicy-laden zephyrs; and at night view the moon and the stars shine with a brilliancy such as we never see them exhibit here; whilst the glow-worm, the fire-fly, and other phosphorescent insects light up the shady groves; and to find precious gems and minerals abounding in the rocks, or gleaming forth from the strand—such are some of the splendors of the golden Orient even now, upon whose wonders the traveller loves to descant, till his tale sounds incredible to the dweller in these sombre northern climes. We may be sure that Eden, Paradise, and the surrounding regions combined all those beauties, even though Moses does not stay to dwell on the description, but covers the whole ground of it by a few trite statements to the effect that gold and gems were found in that quarter, and that every tree (which also includes the lesser shrubs and bushes), 'which is pleasant to the sight, and good for food,' was made to grow spontaneously out of the ground by the power of God.—Beulah.

Indiana State Fair.

The present season so far, is the most productive in the history of the state. The grass and hay crop the most important of the products, is immense and all that could be desired. The corn crop, second in importance, is magnificent, the recent hot weather with the propitious rains have given it a boom by which it promises to excel in this State any previous year by several millions of bushels.

The wheat crop, although comparatively light in quantity, is of good quality and exceeds all anticipated estimates, with enough and to spare.

The oat crop is the largest ever grown in the State by one-fifth, and the potato crop, the most indispensable to the human family, will be of such proportions that we could feed the world.

These facts in connection with the auspicious omens in the rooms of the Board of Agriculture in the shape of business connected with the State Fair, to commence September 20th, give assurance of another grand success.

It has been asserted that the last Indiana State Fair was the best agricultural exhibition in the United States. This is not mere assertion for the taste can be easily produced to prove it, and the management have reason to expect this season an improvement on the last.

The fair has outgrown its clothes, the greatest want now is more room to spread itself, and the day is not far distant, (for the idea is now being entertained) to shut out all vehicles from the ground during the Fair to give room for the exhibits and visitors.

The railroads promise better rates than ever, and there is hope of some of the prominent men of the nation being present at the Fair.

CHARITY.

Let us never judge our neighbor,
Though his light be very dim;
For we cannot know the trials
All in secret borne by him.
We may not suspect his sorrows,
Note his crosses or his cares,
Never guess his hopes and longings
Never hear his earnest prayers.

But his silent supplications,
Though to mortals never known,
On the wings of faith ascending
May the soonest reach the throne.
And the one who sees his struggles
May regard his feeble powers,
And the pearly gates may open
For his soul as well as ours.

Let us never judge the erring,
Not in patience bear with all;
For we may not know the story
Of their struggles and their fall.
The allurements they encountered
Might have tempted us to stray,
And if saved by our surroundings
Are we perfect more than they?

To reclaim and raise the fallen
Let us labor to the last.
Ever striking, are we exalted
From a single stone we cast.
Then shall we receive a blessing
For the love and mercy shown;
If we save a soul from ruin
It may help to save our own.

THE KINGDOM.

That to which the "much tribulation" leads us, is a kingdom. Acts xiv. 22. It is to this that it ministers an "abundant entrance," 2 Pet. i. 11, an entrance in itself not joyous indeed, but grievous, yet in its issue glorious.

Hitherto it has been midnight and the wilderness; ere long it shall be morning and the kingdom. For it is "in the morning" that the righteous are to "have dominion." Psa. xlix. 14. Just as the night has been the time of down-treading, and "wearing out," so the morning is the time of having dominion, the time of "bringing judgment to light." Zeph. iii. 5. When "the Just One shall rule over men," he shall be "the light of the morning when the sun riseth, a morning without clouds." 2 Sam. xxxiii. 3, 4. The time when "the Lord shall help" is when "the morning appeareth," Psa. xlvi. 5, (margin); at the evening-tide there is trouble, but "before the morning he is not." Isa. xxvii. 14. The reign of Antichrist is over, and the reign of Christ begins. The kingdom of the unrighteous is broken to pieces, and the kingdom of the righteous rises in its stead. Lucifer, the mock "light-bringer," the false "son of the morning," vanishes from the heavens, and "the true light," the "bright and morning-star," takes his place in the firmament, unclouded and unsetting in his glory. "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, is given to the people of the saints of the Most High." Dan. vii. 27. The Church's weary burden is no longer. "How long, O Lord," but "The Lord reigneth, let the earth rejoice!" Psa. xcvii. 1. Her prayer, "Thy kingdom come," is exchanged for the thanksgiving of the "great voices in heaven," "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms the Lord, and of his Christ," "We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come, because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned;" "Alleluia, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth." Rev. xi. 15; xix. 6.

That to which we are hastening on is not merely an inheritance, but a royal inheritance,—a kingdom. That for which we suffer is a crown. "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." As we have been truly fellow-sufferers, we shall be as truly fellow-reigners. The suffering has been real, so shall the reigning be. This is, "the recompense of reward" to which we have respect when we "choose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." Heb. xi. 25. This is "the better and enduring substance" for which we are willing to "endure the great fight of afflictions." Heb. x. 32, 34. This is the summing up of earth's toil and grief,—the issue of a lifetime's conflict with weariness, and wrong, and sin.

To think of trial as the preparation for the kingdom is much; but to look at it as an entrance into it, is more. At the end of time's dark avenue stands the mansion-house, the palace! At the edge of our desert-track lies the kingdom! The avenue may be rugged under foot, thorny on every side, and gloomy over head; the wilderness may be "waste and howling;" yet they are passages,—entrances; they are not interminable, and their end is gladness. They usher us into a state which will, in a moment, efface the bitter past, so that it "shall not once be remembered nor come into mind." Thus, though in one aspect tribulation seems a path or gate-way fenced with the brier, and hard to fight through; yet in another it is the conqueror's triumphal arch under which we pass into the kingdom; so that while passing through we can sing the song of him who long ago went this way before us: "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us." Rom. viii. 18.

The thought of the kingdom cheers us, and the starry gleams of it which faith gives us are like the lattice-lights of a loved dwelling, sparkling through the thicket, to the weary eye of a benighted wanderer. Yes, we are heirs of nothing less than a kingdom, however unlike such we may seem at present, and however ambitious it may be reckoned to claim so much, and to aspire so high. Robes of royalty shall soon cover all our unseemliness; and beneath the glory of a throne we shall bury all our poverty, and shame, and grief.

But this is not all. The varied excellences of that kingdom, as made known to us by prophets and apostles, are such as especially to meet our case, and contrast with our present condition. This fitness,—this contrast make the thoughts of the kingdom doubly precious and consoling.

1. It is the kingdom of God. 1 Cor. vi. 9. Man's kingdoms have passed away,—those kingdoms under which the saints of God have been trodden down. And now all that is man's is gone, and nothing remains but what is God's! The glory of the kingdom is this, that it is altogether God's. It must, then, be perfect and blessed.—wholly unlike any thing that these eyes of ours have seen. If it were but a reformation of human kingdoms, if it were a mere change of dynasty, the prospect of it would be but doubtful comfort; but it is an entire passing away of the old, and a making all things new. It is the return of God to his own world;—and Oh, what will not that return effect for us! His re-enthronement is what we desire; for it is this alone that gives us the assurance of perpetuity and stability, against which no enemy shall prevail. It was to that re-enthronement that Jesus looked forward when about to ascend the cross, and of which he spoke twice over at the paschal-table (Luke xxii. 16, 18) as if this were "the joy set before him," because of which he "endured the cross, despising the shame." Heb. xii. 2. It is that re-enthronement that we also anticipate as the day of our triumph, for then shall we "shine as the sun in the kingdom of our Father." Matt. xiii. 43.

2. It is the kingdom of Christ. Col. i. 13. This assures us that we shall feel at home there. It is no stranger who is to seat us on the throne beside him; but our nearest of kin.—The man who died for us—It is the pierced hands that wield the sceptre. This meets our case. For we are strangers here, specially feeling not at home in the courts and palaces of earth. But then it shall be otherwise. Here we are as men standing outside the kingdoms of this world. They belong to the "prince of this world," but not to Christ, and therefore not to us. They greet us with no friendly welcome. They have no honors for us. They make us stand without. They are to us what Pilate, and Herod, and Annas, were to Jesus; they bid us be wronged and smitten, or, at least, look on while we endure "tribulation, distress, persecution, famine, nakedness, peril, sword." Much of the Church's tribulation has arisen from the kingdoms of this world not being Christ's. But in the age to come, it is Christ that is to reign, all things being put into subjection to him. He who is to reign knows what it is to be hated by the world, and knows, therefore, how to make up to us, in his kingdom, for all the hatred wherewith we have been hated, and for all the sorrow which has bowed us down while here. And such is obviously the point of Christ's declaration to his disciples. Luke xxii. 28-30. For having said to them, "Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations," he adds, "and I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel;" thus linking together present suffering for Christ and future reigning with Christ,—present continuance with him in trial, and future association with him in his own kingdom; when he receive the crown.

3. It is a kingdom not of this world. John xviii. 36. The words "not of this world" are, literally, "not out of, or not taken out of, this world;" just as when Christ says, "Ye are of this world, I am not of this world." John viii. 23. This world is wholly evil, and under the dominion of the evil one. Its territory is under a curse. It is called "this present evil world." Gal. i. 4. It hath in wickedness. 1 John v. 19. Its kingdoms are compared to hideous beasts of prey. Dan. vii. Satan and his hosts, the rulers of the darkness of this world. Eph. vi. 12. Thus everything pertaining to it is unholy. Now, the kingdom to come is not fashioned out of its materials, so as to retain anything of its likeness. Between the kingdom of this world and the kingdom of the world to come, there is no congeniality or resemblance. Of "this world" it is said, that it rejects the Spirit, nay, it cannot receive him (John xiv. 17); but that world is to be full of the Spirit, for "the Spirit is to be poured from on high, and the wilderness is to be a fruitful field." Isa. xxxii. 15. Of this world Satan is king; of that world Christ is King. This world knows not God, neither the Father nor the Son; but in that world "all shall know him, from the least unto the greatest." In this world all is darkness; in that world all is light. This world is to be fought against and overcome; that world is to be loved and enjoyed. Thus the kingdom of which we are the heirs, is as unlike this as Eden was unlike the wilderness. And it is this that makes it so desirable. Had it retained any fragments of this world's evil; had it been a mere re-construction of its carnal fabric; had it taken up into itself any of its corrupt qualities, then our comfort were but poor in anticipating its arrival, and counting on the exchange. But it is not of this world,—and this is our joy. We have had enough of this world to make us long for its passing away; and to welcome a kingdom in which no taint or trace of it shall be found.

4. It is a righteous kingdom. "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink," that is, not a carnal kingdom, made up of outward observances and sensual dainties, but "righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost;" that is, a righteous, peaceful, joyful kingdom, dwelt in and pervaded by the Holy Spirit, so that all belonging to it must be like itself. Rom. xiv. 17. It is a kingdom whose territory is the "new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Peter iii. 13. The "unrighteous shall not inherit it" (1 Cor. vi. 9); but the saints alone shall possess it. Dan. vii. 18. The "sceptre of this kingdom is a righteous sceptre." Psa. xlv. 7. He who wields it is the righteous King (Isa. xxxii. 1); and in his days shall the righteous flourish." Psa. lxxxii. 7. It is a "crown of righteousness," that is laid up for us. 2 Tim. iv. 8. And then shall "the work of righteousness be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever." Isa. xxxiii. 17. The righteousness of this kingdom makes it unspeakably attractive to those who have been wearied out with the unrighteousness of an unrighteous world. The thought that "the morning" is to bring in that righteous kingdom, comforts us amid the clouds and thick darkness of this night of weeping.

5. It is a kingdom of peace. War has by that time run its course; its spears are broken and turned to ploughshares; strife and hatred have fled. The storm has become a calm, and the vexed sea is still. Holy tranquility breathes over the earth. "The mountains bring peace to the people, and the little hills by righteousness;—there shall be abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth." Psa. lxxii. 3-7. "Upon David, and upon his seed, and upon his house, and upon his throne, there shall be peace for ever from the Lord." 1 Kings ii. 33. Far more truly than in the days of Solomon there shall be "peace on all sides round about" (1 Kings iv. 24); yea, the Lord God will give rest on every side, so that there shall be "neither adversary nor evil occurrent." 1 Kings v. 4. Everywhere shall be inscribed the motto upon Gideon's altar, "Jehovah-Shalom." Judg. vi. 24, margin. "The beasts of the field shall be at peace with us" (Job v. 23); for "the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together, and a little child shall lead them; and the cow and the bear shall feed, their young ones shall lie down together. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain." Isa. xi. 6. The groans of creation shall then be over, and its desires accomplished. All shall be peace; for the great Peace-Maker is come. His name is King of Salem, that is, Peace. Heb. vii. 2. He is called "the Prince of Peace," and "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." Isa. ix. 6, 7.

With what longing hearts do we desire the arrival of that kingdom, so unlike what this troubled earth has yet known from the beginning hitherto. Each new sorrow stirs the longing. Each new conflict makes us glad at the thought that there is such a kingdom in reserve. Were it not for this, how we should "faint because of evil doers," and how soon should our patience give way! But with our eye upon this kingdom of peace, we can "glory in tribulation," we can drink the bitterest cup, we can face the blackest storm, we can endure the rudest clamor: and when the world's uproar waxes the loudest we can "lift up our heads, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh.

6. It is a kingdom that cannot be moved. Heb. xii. 28. All other kingdoms have not only been moved, but shaken to pieces. Great Babylon, "the glory of kingdoms," has been a sand-wreath, raised by one tide, and levelled by the next. So have all others been, greater or lesser. One by one they have been overthrown and crushed, or they have crumbled down and become like the chaff of a summer threshing-floor. But the kingdom that we look for is "the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." 2 Peter i. 11. It abides for ever. Neither fetter nor age can affect it. It rises out of the ruins of earth's present empires, though unlike them all. The things that can decay or moulder are "shaken off," and that those things that cannot be shaken may remain. And then there comes forth the immovable kingdom,—the kingdom into which sin comes not; in which change has no place; into which the curse eats not; of which wisdom and holiness are the strong pillars; where misrule is unknown; where order triumphs; and of which the glory never dims. It is joy to us in such a world of instability and convulsion, to think of such a kingdom. Driven to and fro with the changes of the kingdoms we inhabit here; wearied with the falling and rising, the casting down and the building up, we long for a kingdom that will give us rest, a kingdom that cannot be moved. From this uncertainty and fickleness, how many of our griefs have come! For what is there so saddening, so sickening, as the thought that every inch of ground beneath us is shifting,—that every prop on which we lean is breaking, that every twig on which we clung is snapping? As we draw our curtains around us, we know not what change, what loss, what sorrow shall greet us on the morrow. Or though going forth lightheartedly and unburdened in the morning, we tremble to think what clouds may have gathered over our dwellings ere the evening has fallen. Such is the perishableness, the changeableness, of earth and its kingdoms! What joy to look beyond them all and that ere long he "who is without variableness or shadow of turning," shall bid us welcome to its unchanging rest; and he who is "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever," shall seat us upon the eternal throne.

"Heaven," says an old writer, "is a company of noble venturers for Christ;" and we may add, of "noble sufferers too." Of such is the kingdom heaven! It is in that kingdom that we shall rest from our labors, and find the end of all our suffering. We shall find that we have not ventured too much, nor labored too much, nor suffered too much. The glory of the kingdom will make up for all.

"Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Along with "the King of glory," we shall take our place upon the throne, in that day when, after "raising the poor out of the dust, he shall set them among princes, and make them to inherit the throne of glory;" when "the wicked shall be silent in darkness, and the adversaries of the Lord shall be broken in pieces;" when "the Lord shall judge the ends of the earth, giving strength unto his king, and exalting the horn of his anointed." 1 Sam. ii. 8-10.

"Thy kingdom come!" This is the burden of our cries. Weary of man's rule, we long for God's. Sick at heart with this world's scenes of evil,—man spoiling man; man enslaving man; man wounding man; man defrauding man; man treading upon man,—we long for the setting up of the righteous throne. Oh, what a world will this be, when man's will as well as man's rule shall be exchanged for Christ's rule and will; when God's "will shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven!"

It is our joy to think that the kingdom is near; and that there are no centuries of sin and wrong still in reserve either for the Church or for the earth. Its nearness is our consolation. The hope that it will come cheers us; but the thought that it is coming soon cheers us more. For both faith and hope are fed by the thought of nearness. We do not fret at delay, nor grow faint and disconsolate. Yet in some respects our feelings are not unlike those thus described by one of other days,

> ....So tedious is this day,
> As is the night before some festival
> To an impatient child that hath new robes,
> And may not wear them....

Our bridal robes are ready, and we long to put them on. Our princely royal raiment is also ready, and we desire to exchange for it these weeds of poverty, and shame, and widowhood. "Yet in patience we possess our souls."

We are on the daily out-look for a kingdom, lifting up our heads, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh. It will not tarry. The signs of its approach are multiplying. The shadows are still passing and re-passing along the grey cliffs, but their increasing rapidity of movement shows a momentous change at hand. Kingdoms are still rising as well as falling, but the deep force of the vibrations—the brevity as well as the abruptness of oscillation—betoken a crisis. At this crisis the world's movements are brought to a stand. Then, touched by a Divine hand, they re-commence. A better order of rule begins. Satan has been bound. Rev. xx. 1-3. "The oppressor has ceased." Isa xiv. 4. He who "smote the people in his wrath" is smitten. Isa. xiv. 6. The misgoverned world rejoices. "The whole earth is at rest and is quiet; they that dwell in it break forth in singing." Isa. xiv. 7. The anointed King has appeared. The great kingdom has come.—H. Bonar.

Editor Restitution:

Dear Brother:—Say to the dear ones scattered abroad that I have just returned home from a trip west.

I left home Friday before the second Sunday in July. Took the iron horse and started for Sumner Co., near Bitter Creek P. O. There I met my old friend Ira Vickery and his family, and Brother Barber and his family, and others. Here I gave five discourses to an interested audience. Although it was a busy time, people stacking their grain, yet the house was nearly full every night. We left them with a promise to return some time this fall. I heard one man say that he heard more Scripture in a few discourses than he ever had in hearing preaching. So we took courage and gave God the glory, and bid them farewell and left for Brother R. Chaplin's. Here we met Brother Chaplin, and Brother Cochenour. There we spoke one evening to a very interested congregation. The people seemed well pleased. Here we visited Genda Springs and drank some of the healing waters of the different springs, and also took one bath in the healing waters.

From there Brother R. Chaplin conveyed me to Brother Russell's, eight miles from Wellington. There the enemy, death, had laid his death grip on two of Brother Russell's children, Hannah and James. James, the son died in Canada with consumption. And while Sister Russell was in Canada taking care of him, pneumonia fever laid hold on Hannah, and she too had to go. Oh, how important it is to be ready, death cometh when least expected. Two years ago I baptized two of Brother Russell's children; Hannah a strong and healthy looking girl, and their youngest son Samuel. The whole family are seeking for glory, honor, immortality, and eternal life. Here I gave four discourses to an audience of very intelligent hearers. Left them with the promise to meet with them again some time this fall. This was the third Sunday in July. The fourth Sunday we expected to be at Millerton. So on Tuesday, in company with Brother [illegible] we started for Millerton in one wheel of the buggy. When we were about [illegible] from Brother Miller [illegible] in one wheel of the buggy gave away, so that sent us off afoot. Well we walked the next six miles to Wellington. Here Brother Russell hired a one horse top buggy, and we started on our way rejoicing, till we arrived at Brother Browns. Brother Brown himself was not at home; he was down at his father-in-law's, Brother Isaac Miller, formerly from Indiana. After we rested a little we took our leave, and about six or seven p. m., we landed at Brother Isaac Miller's, near Millerton. At night we paid Dr. Hobson a visit. Had a good social talk with him, but he has got so straight that he leans the other way. He did not even attend our meetings. They are considerably divided here on the resurrection, so much so that some say that if a man believes that the Antediluvians and the Sodomites will be raised up that they can't call them brethren. Well, have we come to that? Now I ask the brethren, what difference does it make as to our salvation or condemnation whether I believe in the resurrection of the whole human family, and you only believe in a partial resurrection? It does seem to me a weak point in either of us to fall out with one another. Well, Saturday night came on, and we met at Sunny Slope. Here we met my Brother Hugh Barnhill and Sister Barnhill, whose friendly faces were as familiar to me as ever. Brother J. W. Hoffman and Allen Clum and wife, Restitution Junkers or German Baptists, and John Fisk, Brother Ogilvie from north of Plymouth and a host of others. On Saturday evening I was so sick I hardly could stand up to talk. On Sunday I was a little better, and on Sunday evening still better. Saturday night I discoursed on the plan of the ages. On Sunday, at eleven, by request, on the unconscious state of the dead. On Sunday night, on what must I do to be saved, from Acts ii. 22.

Well after all I must say that with all the divisions there, I believe there was good done, all seemed to enjoy themselves, and I believe the Doctor will see that it is he that is standing in his own light. He will reconsider his non-resurrection and see that it is no good news and no part of the Gospel, hence no test of fellowship, at least with me. The Doctor is a good man, and I thank him very much for his kindness towards me in administering his medicine. And I would like very much if we could see alike. We have promised the brethren to be at their Conference in September on the fourth Sunday. Now brethren let us all live up to our duty and privileges, and if we do, all wounds will be healed, and the Church at Millerton be in a better condition than ever before. Returned home, found all well. Yes, and the brethren all remembered that they that preach the gospel must wear clothing and must eat, and the iron horse must be fed.

As ever I remain yours in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes.

JOHN FOURE.

SEFTON.—At Harrison, Ohio, June 6, 1895, Harrison Sefton, aged eighty-three years, five months and twenty-one days.

Brother Sefton's illness, which lasted twenty months, was borne with great fortitude and patience, not a murmur ever escaping his lips, while he frequently expressed his thankfulness to God for his goodness and mercy to him in sparing him from suffering pain. His disease was pneumonia which terminated in consumption. He was a member of the Christian church from the year 1852 up to the time of his death. On reading books and papers bearing on the doctrines of life only in Christ, and his near advent, he became convinced of their truth. He was able to read the Crisis and THE RESTITUTION up to within three or four weeks of his death.

Last winter he read "The Unspeakable Gift," by J. H. Pottingell, with much pleasure, he would often exclaim while reading it, "How blessed; how glorious!" While we deeply feel our loss, we sorrow not, even as others which have no hope, for we expect to meet our loved one soon, when the life, giver shall come.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXIV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUGUST 26, 1885. NO. 32.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same ratio.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

"THE RESTITUTION of all things" signifies the restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints joint heirs with him; the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked: eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel; repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

Last Sunday evening I attended religious services at the Congregational Chapel near my home. The pastor chose for the foundation of his discourse, John xiv. 30. "Hereafter I will not talk much with you, for the Prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me."—Jesus to his disciples.

The speaker gave it as his opinion, that the prince of this world,—of the text,—was Satan, and went on to say that there was a contest going on in the world between good and evil, and that often, very often, evil seemed to have the best of it—seemed to gain at least a temporary triumph, but said he believed that its triumph would be but temporary, and said we might write the word, temporary, across the face of all the triumphs of evil in this world. In this opinion I fully concurred, and the thought came to me that the speaker might abundantly prove his position by citations from the Scriptures beginning with the promise—made in the garden, where the struggle began—That the seed of the woman should bruise (crush) the head of the serpent, and ending with the account of the complete overthrow of the latter as recorded in Revelations.

This would bring prominently to the front God's chosen representative and leader on the side of good, in this contest, through whom he purposes to vanquish Satan, abolish evil, and accomplish his sworn purpose, that the earth shall be filled with his glory. The Lamb slain from the found[illegible] of the world.

The [illegible] view of the mission of the Son of God is not sufficiently comprehensive. He is presented to us as a Savior of men in an individual sense [illegible] than that he is the deliverer of the world (cosmos) from the power of the adversary. John says, Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin (curse) of the world. He will restore all that was lost by the fall.

In the opening chapters of the Bible we are given an account of man's creation and his establishment on the earth by his Creator, with dominion over the fish of the sea, the fowls of the air, over all the cattle and creeping things, and over all the earth. "And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there he put the man whom he had formed, and there he caused every tree to grow that is pleasant to the sight and good for food; and there was the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and there was the river to water the garden, and there was gold and bdellium and the onyx stone. Man was in harmony with his surroundings, with nothing lacking to make his happiness complete, and with access to the tree of life, he might perpetuate the blissful existence forever.

But the great adversary appears upon the scene. Man falls and all is lost. Sin enters in and death by sin. Earth feels the wound. The ground is cursed for man's sake, and he is doomed to eat bread in the sweat of his face, till he return to the ground from which he was taken.

Of the struggle for the mastery, going on in this world between good and evil—between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent, the Bible gives us in outline a history, past and future; and so far the odds seem to have been decidedly on the side of evil, and sometimes it has seemed that well nigh the whole human race had gone over to Satan.

At the time of the flood, only a very small minority of the race was found worthy of salvation from the general doom. And though the race takes a new start from the righteous Noah, the time comes when the prophet Elijah complains to God that even his chosen people had forsaken his covenants, thrown down his altars, and slain his prophets. The outlook from the standpoint of the prophet was truly discouraging, as it often has been to God's faithful ones, both before and since.

And even now, in what we are pleased to call the light of the nineteenth century, wickedness so abounds that had we nothing to guide us but an observation of the struggle itself, we might well regard the issue as doubtful.

In the midst of these however, having faith in God's promises, the issue cannot be doubtful, for God has never permitted Satan to gain a complete victory, and he never will; but on the other hand, we are told that his chosen representative and leader of the forces on the side of good, "must reign till he (God) hath put all enemies under his feet." "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. After having through death destroyed him that had the power of death, that is the devil." At last the victory is won, and the shout goes up, Alleluia! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!

And now in the concluding chapters of the Bible, we read again of the tree of life, the river of life, of gold and precious stones. We see man again amid beautiful surroundings. The curse removed, Paradise restored, and all that was lost by the fall. "The tabernacle of God shall be with men.... and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death; neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away."

The last picture is more gorgeous than the first. and if when creation was completed, all the sons of God shouted for joy, now with their shouts of joy are mingled the songs of the redeemed. "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book and open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation,...and they sang the song of Moses and the Lamb, saying, Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty, just and true are thy ways [illegible] King of saints."

One thing must certainly arrest the attention of all those who carefully consider the history of this contest between good and evil as given in the Bible; and that is, that the vitalizing element on the side of good, is God's Son. Whatever phase the struggle takes the forces on the side of good, rally around his standard.

The attitude in which he stands to the struggle from first to last is that of one to come. He is always "He who will be," "The promised Deliverer," and faith in him as such, faith in the promise has always been and still is the vitalizing force through which God arrays all human agents and instrumentalities on the side of good.

And as the narrative proceeds the importance of his mission, and his relation to the human race are gradually unfolded. He is the seed of the woman. The Lord's man of Eve.[1] The Yahveh (Coming One) invoked by the patriarchs, in conformity with the hope inspired by the promise typified in the ark—The Lord God of Shem. The seed of Abraham through whom all the families of the earth are to be blessed. The "I Am." More correctly I WHO WILL BE, sending Moses to the children of Israel.[2] The prophet foretold by Moses. The seed of David whose throne and kingdom shall be established forever. The Son of David "whose right it is" to restore the throne and kingdom of David after it has been overturned, and build it again as in the days of old; whose kingdom shall extend from the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Euphrates, and from the rivers to the ends of the earth, and it shall stand forever.

He is the Prince of Peace, the rod out of the stem of Jesse,...with righteousness shall he judge the poor and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth. He is the burden of the Psalms and the Prophets. The looked for, the longed for.

He comes at last and brings life and immortality to light through the gospel, and by his death and resurrection, inspired in the minds of his followers the hope of a resurrection from the dead. He ascended up on high, and as he goes up, his disciples are comforted with the assurance that he "shall so come in like manner as you have seen him go."

The hope of the human race still centers in "One to come." He will come again, but now how rapidly the grandeur and glory of his mission unfolds as the narrative proceeds. He will come again in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. All power is given unto his hand in heaven and in earth. He will come again as King of kings and Lord of lords, and sway the scepter of the universe. To him every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess.

I might continue this line of thought to much greater length, but even then could not sufficiently magnify him. "We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come, because thou hast taken to thee thy great power and hast reigned."

He is the Alpha and the Omega. The beginning and the ending. The root and the offspring of David and the bright and morning star. And the Spirit and the bride say come, and let him that heareth, say come, and let him that is athirst come, and drink of the water of life freely.

CHRIST AN ETERNAL MEDIATOR.

There seems to be a prevailing idea among many that Christ will, at some particular time, cease to be a Mediator between God and man; that his mission as Mediator will run out by limitation, or, that his entire work, as a Mediator, will come to an end. Some contend that this will occur at the time of his second appearing, others extend the time to the end of the one thousand years, while others, with a spirit of confidence extend it forward until the whole race has been reconciled.

To us, there is no doubt of Christ's eternal Mediatorial incumbency. Indeed the whole scope of Divine [illegible] seems to require this view of the subject. We hear much about his "leaving the Mediatorial throne" and he coming a Judge, and of his "Mediatorial Kingdom" etc. Fortunately these phrases are not in the New Testament. But these phrases, and similar ones have done much to confuse the minds of honest readers of the Scriptures, and lead them into many vague and erroneous notions. If the reader will examine the subject carefully, he will learn that the ministry of Christ as the Mediator of the New Covenant is eternal. Let us look at the subject a little more closely. It is conceded that the New Covenant is an everlasting covenant; in proof of this we will cite the reader to one or two plain texts. Heb. viii. 6. "But now he hath obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the Mediator of a better Covenant, which was established upon better promises." It will be seen from the above text that Christ has become the Mediator of the Covenant which rests upon promises of eternal things. But the Covenant itself is everlasting, and he being its Mediator must continue to hold his official relation during the life of the Covenant. Hence Paul says in Hebrews again, "Now the God of peace, that brought from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting Covenant, Heb. xiii. 20.

The promises under this covenant are eternal, the Covenant itself is eternal, and as God only deals with man through covenants it becomes a well established conclusion that the Mediator will continue to act officially as an eternal Mediator. The inheritance under this covenant, the kingdom of David; eternal life and incorruption—in short every thing connected with the great work of judgment and redemption is eternal. Hence Christ is to be a "priest forever" after the order of Melchisedec, which is only one part of his great work as a Mediator between God and man. The only objection which can be urged against this view is that the office of a priest is to propitiate sin, and that if the priesthood is eternal, then sin is eternal also. This would be a valid objection if the office of priest was exclusively for sin-cleansing, but when the reader stops to reflect upon the types, and to realize the multifarious duties and offices of a priest, under the law, and that the Melchisedec priesthood reached out still beyond into the wonderful life of Abraham, who had the promises, he will at once see that all worship, praise offerings, peace and glory came through the priesthood as well as Mediation for sin. Worship will ever be carried on in the eternal state under the terms and conditions of the New Covenant, which will require order and harmony under the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus. Hence the continuance of the priesthood and Mediation of our Lord forever.

THE PASSING AWAY OF THE HEAVENS.

"But the day of God will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also; and the works that are therein shall be burned up.... Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." 2 Pet. iii. 10-12.

When we quote positive Scripture language to prove that the righteous will inherit the earth and dwell therein forever, such as is found in Matt. v. 5, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth," and in Prov. x. 30, "The righteous shall never be removed but the wicked shall not inherit the earth," and again in Prov. xi. 31, "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the wicked and the sinners," we are sometimes confronted by a class of persons, who have sought in vain for a promise of an inheritance somewhere in heaven, with which to contradict us, and still are unwilling to accept the truth, but cling to the pet theory of going to heaven at death, and resort to the words of Peter as first quoted above; not noticing that the passing away of the heavens is placed in the front by the passing away of the earth is only [illegible] which makes it [illegible] If the passing away of heaven and earth, [illegible] 35; would interfere with the Bible doctrine that the saints shall inherit the earth, as such claim it does, it would certainly destroy the doctrine of man, that the good, will, after death, dwell eternally in heaven; but by a little investigation, it will appear that the passing away of the heavens and the earth, as foretold by the prophets, Jesus and the apostles, is an absolute necessity in order that the purpose of God may be carried out by the saints inheriting the earth.

Not long since I was talking with a man of prominence, who vehemently urged that Peter said positively, that the earth and the works that are therein shall be burned up, therefore it is impossible for the saints to inherit the earth for an everlasting possession. I asked him to stick right to that position while I read to him from Matt. iii. 5-6, "then went out to him Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins;" no one would take the position that all the buildings, the synagogues, the temple, the walls, the gates and the towers, or the rocks, the hills, and the olives groves went out and were baptized, but simply the inhabitants; and again from Dan. vii. 28 as follows. "The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon the earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down and break it in pieces." Of course we would not suppose that the Roman king was to break mother earth up into chunks, but the institutions are here referred to. He remarked that the connection showed plainly, that the primary signification was not intended in the passages I had read, I replied, "that is just the idea I was after." Though the primary signification of the term heaven, is the open space, between the waters and the waters, where the sun moon and stars were placed, as described in the history of creation, in the first chapter of Genesis, yet open space could not be burned up nor melted by fire, any more than John the Baptist could baptize the bread sores of Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the surrounding country in the waters of Jordan river, or the globe on which we live could be broken to fragments by the frail power of a human monarch: yet inspiration teaches that there is a system or arrangement of things in heaven, as well as on earth, that must be removed.

Paul in Hebrews ii., writes of the shaking of earth and also heaven, so as to remove those things that can be shaken, and the things that cannot be shaken he gives to the saints for a kingdom. See Hebrews xii. 26, 28; Jesus says, the stars shall fall from heaven and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Matt. xxiv. 29.

Though we may not be able to define all the various influences exercised by the heavenly bodies, or even to approximate to the number or magnitude of the stellar host, yet many things come to our notice continually, which teach unmistakably, an existing stellar instrumentality in the control of the concerns of earth, for instance, the sudden change of cold and heat, the storm and calm, the flooding rain and the scorching drouth, the wintry thaw and the summer frost, all tell of a direct cause and a special instrumentality. This brings us to notice Isaiah who says, "And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll, and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the figtree. Isa. xxxiv. 4. Here again the idea of star instrumentality is clearly taught, by the use of the military term host, which means an army, or what we know as the rank and file of an army, and we may learn who the commander is by turning to Eph. ii. 2; for according to Paul, the same one who now worketh in the children of disobedience, is also the prince of the power of the air. This is demonstrated in the case of Job who was placed in Satan's power with but one restriction "only upon himself put not forth, thine hand: so Satan went forth from the presence of the Lord, and there was a day when his sons and his daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house, and there came a messenger unto Job and said, The oxen were plowing and the asses feeding beside them, and the Sabeans fell upon them and took them away. Yea; they have slain the servants with the edge of the sword, and I only am escaped alone to tell thee: while he was yet speaking, there came also another and said, the fire of God (margin, a great fire) is fallen from heaven, and has burned up the sheep and the servants and consumed them, and I am only escaped alone to tell thee. While he was yet speaking there came also another and said, the Chaldeans made out three bands, and fell upon the camels, and have carried them away, yea, and slain the servants with the edge of the sword, and I only am escaped alone to tell thee. While he was yet speaking there came also another and said, thy sons and daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house, and behold there came a great wind from the wilderness, and smote the four corners of the house and it fell upon the young men and they are dead, and I only am escaped alone to tell thee." Job i. 12, 18. Job here made four mighty demonstrations simultaneously, two of them showed his authority as "prince of the power of the air" and the other two showed his working "in the children of disobedience." Now we can see readily, why there was seen war in heaven, Michael and his angels fighting against the dragon and his angels, and the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil and Satan, was cast out of heaven unto earth. Rev. xii. 7-9. Michael is the great prince that standeth for Daniel's people, Dan. xii. 1; while Jesus is the coming king of Israel, who has said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," Matt. xviii. 18; but though all power was given to him eighteen hundred years ago, he is not exercising that power while Satan bears rule, for to take to himself his great power, would be to inaugurate the "war in heaven," which will result in shaking, not only earth, but heaven also, and removing those things that can be shaken, including the casting of the dragon out of heaven and finally binding him for a thousand years. Mind now a few words touching the shaking and removing process, which, it may be noticed is characterized by three distinct features, to-wit; first, falling down; second, melt with fervent heat; and third, be rolled together as a scroll: and I think by a close observation, we may identify, in the starfalling phenomena of the present time, the preliminaries of the passing away of the heaven as foretold by the apostle Peter. On this point an article which appeared in the New York Sun of May 30th, 1885, is highly suggestive, an extract of which I subjoin; it is headed.

"The earth covered with star dust" and reads as follows.

Two Russian astronomers have just made public the results of a series of investigations of the fall of meteoric matter upon the earth. Nothing could seem more absolutely clear and free from all base or impurity, than the interstellar spaces; yet the studies of these investigations, show that the other of the star depths, particularly in the neighborhood of suns, is rather to be compared with the dusty atmosphere of a hay mow, than with that perfectly transparent medium that we are wont to picture to ourselves as forming the pathway of light between the stars. As the earth pursues its spiral course around the sun, and with the sun around through the universe, this star dust continually settles upon it, sifting down through the atmosphere in surprising quantities; part of it comes from meteoric bodies, many millions of which plunge into the atmosphere every day, and are consumed with a sudden flash of light and heat, part is probably mere dust when it enters the atmosphere, for these meteoric bodies undoubtedly vary in size from huge bodies larger than the projectile of an eighty ton cannon, and endowed with a hundred times its velocity to mere microscopic particles.

There is good reason for calling this matter star dust, for it partakes of the nature of the stars in its composition, and sometimes presents evidence that it has actually been such, and to the frigid filament and pressure that prevail in space.... Fortunately this meteoric dust possesses characteristics which distinguish it from dust of terrestial origin, and so its presence has been traced all over the earth. It has been found on mountain peaks, in the colwebs of unswept cathedral towers, in the snowfields of the Arctic regions, and even in the ooze of the ocean bottom. The earth is slowly growing by virtue of its constant downfall."

In the above statement we have almost a perfect duplicate of the idea conveyed by the word of inspiration, the difference being different choice of words to convey the same idea. Peter says, "fervent heat;" the writer says, "frightful heat;" Isaiah says, "the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll;" Sun says the earth is slowly growing by virtue of its constant downfall. If all the falling of the whole meteoric system was to take place during a single revolution of the earth on its axis it could not truly be said to be rolled together as a scroll.

The above piece of scientific information comes clothed in the veritable garb foretold by the apostle, for after making a statement of the facts as they appear to the scientific world, the writer follows up with the remark, "The fall of meteoric dust is one of the most ancient phenomena with which we are acquainted. Before the rains descended or the clouds were formed, before there were any lands or oceans or rock ribbed hills upon this globe, when it was yet itself a little blazing sun, and through all the ages of its development from a chaotic mass into a beautiful planet, the steady downfall of meteors upon it must have been going on." Though the foregoing remark is but a speculative conjecture and not made in a scoffing way, it is a reiteration of the sentiment mentioned by Peter when he said, in close connection with the object matter of this article, "there shall come in the last days, scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of his coming, for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." 2 Pet. iii. 3-4.

In an article headed "Zion the mother of God's children," which appeared in THE RESTITUTION of July 22nd., I referred to a set of circumstances, by the appearance of which we may be able to know when we have crossed the dispensation line, and are in what we now know as the age to come. This act is made up of three leading features, one is the travail of Zion, another is the dragon waiting to destroy, and still another is the war in heaven. In the above named article I pointed out that the dragon had appeared in view, and if the ideas in the article are correct, the war in heaven has commenced, so that the three features are already before us, and the third (the travail of Zion) is the only one that is wanting, with every indication of its nearness: and now says Jesus, "What I say unto you, I say unto all watch." Mark xiii. 37.

Jewel Casket.

The two short pieces immediately following are from a sermon by John Caird D. D., entitled—Religion in Common Life.

THE PEACE OF GOD.

There are undercurrents in the ocean which act independently of the movements of the waters on the surface; far down too in its hidden depths their is a region where, even though the storm be raging on the upper waves, perpetual calmness and stillness reign. So there may be an undercurrent beneath the surface movements of your life—there may dwell in the secret depth of your being the abiding peace of God, the repose of a holy mind, even though, all the while, the restless stir and connection of worldly business may mark your outer history.

GENUINE RELIGION.

No religion can be genuine, no goodness can be constant or lasting, that is not based, as its primary source, from faith in Jesus Christ. To know Christ as my Savior—to come with all my guilt and weakness to him in whose overwhelming positence never fails to find a friend—to cast myself at his feet in whom all that is sublime in divine holiness is softened, though not obscured, by all that is beautiful in human tenderness; and, believing that love stronger than death, which for me, and such as me, drained the cup of untold sorrows, and bore without a murmur the bitter curse of sin, to trust my soul for time and eternity to his hands—this is the beginning of true religion. And it is this reverential love with which the believer must ever look to him to whom he owes so much, that constitutes the main-spring of the religion of daily life. Selfishness may prompt to a formal religion, natural susceptibility may give rise to a fitful one, but for a life of constant fervent piety, amid the world's cares and toils, no motive is sufficient save one—Self-devoted love to Christ.

HOLY LIFE.

A holy life is made up, says Bonar, of a number of small things. Little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles nor battles, nor one great heroic act, or mighty martyrdom, make up the true Christian life. The little constant sunbeam, not the lightning; the waters of Shiloh, "that go softly" in their meek mission of refreshment, not the waters of the "river, strong and many," rushing down in torrents, noise and force, are the true symbols of a holy life. The avoidance of little evils, little sins, little inconsistencies, little weaknesses, little follies, little indiscretions and imprudences, little foibles, little indulgence of self and the flesh—the avoidance of such little things goes far to make up, at least, the negative beauty of a holy life.

REASON AND FAITH.

Reason and faith are twin-born—the one in form and features the image of manly beauty; the other of feminine grace and gentleness; but to each of them is allotted a sad privation. The bright eyes of Reason are full of piercing intelligence, but his ear is closed to sound. Faith has an ear of exquisite delicacy; but on her sightless eyeballs, as she lifts them toward heaven, the sunbeam plays in vain. Hand-in-hand the brother and sister, in mutual love, pursue their way through a world on which, like ours, day breaks and night falls alternate. By day the eyes of Reason are the guide of Faith, and by night the ear of Faith is the guide of Reason. As is usual with those who labor under these privations respectively, Reason is apt to be eager, impetuous, impatient of that instruction which his infirmity will not permit him readily to apprehend; while Faith, gentle and docile, is ever willing to listen to the voice by which alone truth and wisdom effectually can reach her.—Henry Rogers.

THE RESTITUTION.

B. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, August 20, 1886.

As we have been absent to fill an appointment, and as the Agent is desirous of going to press at once, we have no opportunity to write Editorially this week.

NUMBERS 7 and 8 of a new publication entitled The Truth have been received. It is edited and published by Robert Ashcroft, at Liverpool, England and the price to subscribers in the United States is $1.75 a year. We have not had time to peruse the second number as it has just come to hand.

THE TERRIBLE TORNADO.

Hot fires entered into the treasuries of the snow; or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have reserved against the time of trouble, against the day of battle and war? Hast thou marked lightnings, that they may go, and say unto thee, here we are? Job xxxviii. 22, 23.

The National Baptist, of August 20, has the following account of the destructive forces God can treasure up in his cloudy arsenals. The devastations that are now taking place are only forewarnings of the frightful desolations that are coming. Connected with the gathering of the saints, who have made a covenant with God by sacrifice, the Psalmist also says: "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." In the time of trouble,—now soon coming—the powers of heaven shall be shaken as they never yet have been.

The cyclone that passed over Port Richmond, in this city, at 3 P. M., Aug. 3, was preceded by a calm during which Joseph Forest, a member of the Hope Mission, with others, was watching the sky from the Standard Chain and Anchor Works, looking south. Mr. Forest witnessed the movement of the terrible tornado for about three miles, in about as many minutes, and describes it as follows:

"One of our members called my attention to a cloud, asking, 'Is that a cloud, or is it smoke?' I replied, 'It is a cloud charged with electricity.' Immediately, another cloud came in view, blacker and larger, with an attachment at the southern end of peculiar brightness, as though lined with silver and tinted with gold. As we were admiring its brilliancy, my attention was called to what appeared to one of our company like a little flock of birds, and then, immediately the air was filled with debris. Then came in full view, over Williams Street, near the elevator, a black mass, apparently oval in shape, some 200 x 50 feet, and about 50 feet higher than the tops of the houses. It was out of this terrible looking blackness that the destruction came, in the shape of what looked very much like a huge elephant's trunk; shooting downward with lightning speed, to within 10 or 12 feet from the earth, and then sideways, as an elephant swings his trunk, with a rotary motion. Wherever this strange object touched, roofs of houses, and timber would fly as though mere bits of paper.

It seemed to return to receive a new supply of force, and then come down again as though shot out of a cannon. This explains how buildings in its path were passed over uninjured. There were, perhaps, twenty of these ascending and then descending thrusts while I witnessed it in its path of destruction and desolation. It was lost to my view in the woods near Frankford. Mr. Forest adds, "I never saw a tornado before, and never desire to see another. It came within 300 feet of me, and I had a good view of it, and felt and trembled at its power. As I saw with what ease houses were crushed and trees uprooted and sent whirling through the air, I said. 'Oh, my God! Who can stand in the presence of thy power!'"

Thirteen houses in one row on Thompson Street were uprooted and the walls blown in, to the lower story in an instant. Three members of the Hope Mission were not only made homeless, but destitute in this row. The roof of a house belonging to another member, was carried upward into the air and hurled down on to the new Baptist chapel, smashing the timbers of the roof and doing other damage. A large factory near by was almost completely demolished. One man told me that he was picked up by the tornado and carried across the street and thrown into a mud puddle and covered almost entirely over with debris, and strange to say, came out unhurt. Trees two feet through were torn up or twisted off at the roots, as though they were but twigs. It has been a lesson to many on the instability of earthly things not soon to be forgotten.—J. F.

"THINGS NEW AND OLD."—MATT. XIII. 52.

"Every scribe instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old."

While the gospel minister holds and teaches the grand realities of the Old Testament Temple worship, with its Prophets, Priests, and Kings, he must accept their import as unfolded and applied in the New Testament, by our Lord and his apostles.

In the New Testament, while Christ is the Son of David, he is also David's Lord—"The Great King to rule the world in righteousness and the people with his truth," Psa. xxviii. 33, 110.

As our High Priest he is "The Priest forever after the order of Melchisedeck," who met Abram, received tithes of him and gave him the blessing of God. He is our Priest forever, to unfold and fulfil God's eternal purpose—purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord!

As "the Lamb of God" he consumes our altar and our passover sacrifice, to take away our sins, the sin of the world! John i. 29; 1 Cor. v. 7.

As "The Word," he is "The sun, the light of the world, to unveil Israel and the nations, and fill the whole earth with the knowledge of the glory of God!" Isa. xxv. 5, 9; Hab. ii. 14;

As "The second man—The last Adam" he is to inherit all things, and with his joint heirs in his kingdom, inaugurate new heavens—make all things new!" All this I give only in brief for an end, observe, "In the beginning was the word—logos, and the word was God, revealed so far. This word of promise (in the fulness of time) was made flesh—we behold his glory—The glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth," John i. 1-4; 1 John i. 1-3. Note. There are twenty personifications in this context and only one, a stumbling block to embarrass faith and confuse the church.

To those stumbling I suggest that you yield—and speak as the oracles of God; "and see how it will illumine your way and refresh your spirit." Amen.

"He who transgresseth (the gospel) and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God! He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ hath both the Father and the Son! 2 John ix; Matt. xi. 27.

Note. This is absolutely plain. It cuts off the speculating critic of Christ and life. See also 1 John ii. 23. "This word—logos"—forewarns in mercy. John xii. 48. It is judgment already announced.

The Jews though delivered from Egypt perished, except Caleb and Joshua! That nation dishonoring Jesus (in his humiliation) "died in their sins." John viii. 21, 24, 12. These facts "are written for our learning." 1 Cor. x. In pity and compassion.

Editor Restitution:

We have just closed another meeting which was ably conducted by Bro. John Foore. Although he was quite sick part of the time, he closed feeling better. He spoke to crowded houses, better interest being seldom seen. All seemed anxious to hear the word, and take a lesson from the chart, which seemed to assist many, to understand his description of the plan of God. We pray that it may do us good as it doth the upright in heart. May it be like bread cast upon the water, to be gathered again unto God's eternal glory. There we will receive in the new earth state eternal life, which will amply repay us for all the scoffs and jeers of a mocking world. I sigh for the time when we may sit under our own vine and figtree. May the time soon come that we may meet each other, where peace will flow like a river, when we shall all see eye to eye.

At our general meeting last May, Brothers H. W. Barnhill, J. M. Vickery, and S. C. Oliver were appointed to arrange a general Conference to be held in South West Kansas. They have arranged for the meeting to be held at Sunny Slope School House, our regular place of meeting, commencing Thursday evening, Sept. 24, and last over Sunday. We expect Bro. Foore will be with us at that time. This meeting is for you, brethren. Will you enjoy it? Will you all assist and make it a success? Let us see. As the Indian scare is over, and good order prevails, sow your wheat, get ready and assist in making this proposed meeting an enjoyable one, that will long be remembered. Come and let us take another day's march nearer home, for soon the Son of promise will arise and rule a thousand years. Another meeting may never be held of God's scattered ones. Soon the King in all his beauty may appear and release the prisoners.

Yours for the sake of truth.

Joyful Service.

If you want to know the character of a house, ask the servants—especially the old servants. If you want to know what sort of a condition the public services are in, sometimes you will hear various accounts of them. But it is different with the service of our Lord. Ask the old servants, and you will get the best account of it. There may be servants who have tried it for a little while and become froward and wilful. Those who have been at it longest have the best things to say about it. Ask such an one as Paul the aged. Observe the cheerfulness of the latest Epistles of Paul. You have a good deal about his trouble and suffering in the meantime, but when he came to be Paul the aged, when he is writing his pastoral to Timothy and Titus, he is extremely cheerful and consolatory. He has been long in the service. Ask the Apostle John, who began in earliest life and lasted longest in earthly service. You will hear how he had not found it an easy service—nobody does who goes thoroughly through with the Lord. John had, after the Master left, been arrested and threatened along with his friend at Jerusalem. Afterwards he had been exiled as we know, to Patmos, for the Word of God. He had lost his own brother James, and his dearest friend Simon Peter, by martyrdom in the service of Jesus Christ. But what does he say of it at the end? Look at his Epistles: "His commandments are not grievous." He came more and more to see, as all aged Christians do see more than they saw it in youth, how thoroughly reasonable is this service; how good it is, how right it is—nay, how blessed it is.

John heard his Master saying, and put his "Amen" to it at the end of his service—"My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." It may be a question, having regard to the context, whether, when our Lord says, "Take my yoke upon you," he just meant the yoke assigned to us, or the yoke that he had borne, and which he called us to share. Take the latter meaning. Just as when he says to the disciples, "My peace I give unto you." He intends not merely a peace that he can confer, but the very peace that possessed his own soul in the midst of his tribulation, and says: "That peace I give unto you. In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in Me you will have peace." So in regard to these obligations of duty; he calls those who come to him to follow him in the way, and to bear the yoke with the courage and the burden he endured when he was here as the Father's elect Servant. So we are not merely commanded, by the thought that God has a right to give his orders, and we cannot take a higher place than to be his servant, but we have, as has been again and again pointed out, to follow the Master, who himself has served, and knows all the difficulties of the service.

It gives a master great power over his workmen when they know quite well that he is not a mere amateur in the thing himself; not merely master because he has money enough to employ them, but is a master who has done the work himself, and knows it better than they do; has done it well, has done it thoroughly, and joins them in the work, and says, "Come and work with me; what you do not know how to do, I will show you." It is such a Master whom we serve.—Dr. Donald Fraser.

The Four Great Moseses.

Moses, the son of Abraham, he who has brought the children of Israel out of Egypt; who broke the chains of slavery: our great law-giver was our first great Moses.

Moses Ben Maimar, known as Maimonides, who lived in the twelfth century, a scientific investigator; a writer of philosophic works; a student of medicine, and rich in Talmudical learning; he was a second great Moses.

Moses Mendelssohn, born in 1729, a modern thinker and a pursuer of the philosophy of the former, who was full of Jewish piety, and yet succeeded to raise the social elevation of his Jewish brethren, he was our third great Moses.

Moses Montefiore, whose death we now mourn, who was principally known for his unbounded love for all mankind, but most particularly for his unlimited philanthropy and his unremitting exertions to put into practice the teachings of his three great predecessors, and was our fourth great Moses.—From the Israelite Journal.

Sir Moses Montefiore and the Jews.

The social rehabilitation of the Hebrew people is an event of hardly less import to the honor and welfare of mankind than any, however august and beneficent, of the nineteenth century. To the tardy payment of that debt, which had long weighed upon the conscience of enlightened Christendom, no man contributed so much as Sir Moses Montefiore, whose life, devoted to philanthropy through its patriarchal length, put to shame the lingering antipathy by which his race in England had been disabled and maligned.

Born in 1784, Sir Moses Montefiore was coeval with an epoch by far the most momentous in the history of Judaism since the second conquest of Jerusalem under Hadrain involved the ruthless expulsion of its defenders from that city and the complete dispersion of the Jews. Hebrews a century ago, no matter how admirably qualified by talent and by character to serve their fellow beings, were politically outlawed and socially proscribed in every European capital. On the Continent they were condemned to live in filthy Ghettos, while even in England they were pent by statute and by custom within a moral wall scarcely less stifling and impassible. How vast and benignant is the change wrought within the span of one man's life! Only on the eastern outskirts of Europe does the old blind hatred of the Jew still vent itself with savagery and with impunity. In Germany a mischievous attempt to revive extinct antipathies has succumbed to popular derision. In France Israelites have won respect, authority, and eminence in every channel of endeavor, and they have been welcomed to high posts in the national administration. England has not only seen a man of Israelite stock in the supreme office of Prime Minister, but it has beheld the House of Commons and the House of Lords itself open their doors to Hebrews who refuse to disavow the religion of their fathers.

Among the agencies co-operating to the happy extinction of intolerance and prejudice it would be hard to overestimate the influence exerted by the labors and example of Sir Moses Montefiore. No doubt the age was ripe for Israelite emancipation, just as in Lessing's famous drama the mind of Saladin was open to generous emotion and to profound ideas. But it was the incarnation of Hebrew nobility and piety in the figure of Nathan the Wise that awoke the rulers' consciences to active magnanimity, and who can doubt that public opinion, which might have otherwise remained irresolute and inert, was illumined and inspired by the sight of an existence consecrated for a term of life to a philanthropy as wide as human suffering and unwarped by any discrimination of race or creed?

THE CHOLERA.

Up to the close of last week the deaths reported from cholera this season numbered 57,219. It is thought likely that if the full figures could be gathered the total would be six or seven thousand more. It is estimated that 550 deaths have occurred thus far at Marseilles. The disease has broken out at Barcelona, where twenty-three cases and sixteen deaths were reported by Sunday's cable despatches. Saturday's return's were, new cases 4,706, and deaths 1,758. On Sunday there were 4,696 new cases and 1,556 deaths.

On Friday the Madrid Gazette said that during the last twenty-four hours 5,690 new cases of cholera and 1,950 deaths from the disease were reported throughout all Spain. During that period forty-seven new cases and thirty-eight deaths were reported in Madrid.

A dispatch from Madrid last Thursday said: The ravages of the cholera in Granada are horrible. Scores of the victims of the disease drop and die in the streets, where in many cases they remain for hours before they are gathered up at night for a hurried and unceremonious burial in a common trench. The people attribute the visitation to divine wrath and wear amulets to preserve them from the disease. The priests and Sisters of Charity are assiduous night and day in attending to the wants of sufferers. The Archbishop has sold his equipage in order to obtain funds for relief measures, and has offered his palace as a hospital.

Other accounts say that sixty thousand persons have fled from Spain, hoping thus to escape the deadly pestilence. A Paris despatch says that refugees fleeing from the cholera in Marseilles have introduced the disease into Sisteron and other villages in the Alpine provinces of France.

A letter from Saigon reports that six hundred French soldiers have died of cholera in Formosa and the Pescadores; that the hospitals are overflowing with sufferers, and that the epidemic is increasing.

A telegram from Odessa, Russia, says there are ten cases of cholera in the suburbs of that city.

MADRID, August 21. Throughout Spain yesterday there were 5,104 new cases of cholera and 1,644 deaths. During the twelve hours ended at midnight last night, 11 new cases and 9 deaths were reported in this city, and 117 new cases and 51 deaths in the province outside of the city.

MARSEILLES, August 21.—There were twenty-five deaths here from cholera during last night.

The St. Loup quarter is becoming the center of the cholera epidemic. The formality observed in admitting patients to the Pharo Hospital results, it is thought, in many deaths through delay.

MADRID, Aug. 23.—Today's cholera returns from all the infected districts in Spain show a total of 4,837 new cases and 1,783 deaths. Throughout Spain yesterday there were 5,673 new cases of cholera and 1,723 deaths from the disease. Since the beginning of the epidemic there have been 156,977 cases and 61,521 deaths. During the last twelve hours sixteen new cases and six deaths were reported in this city, and in the provinces outside of the city 118 new cases and thirty-eight deaths.

DIED.

HOOVER.—July 27, 1886, in Cannon Co., Ten. Mrs. Mary Hoover, aged 69 years, 11 months, and 23 days.

The subject of this notice seemed naturally of a religious turn of mind, and early in life united with the Baptists. Her attention being subsequently called to the tenets of the "Disciples," she concluded, after some research, to leave the communion of the Baptists and united with the Reformers, because they appeared to have clearer ideas of the truth. For many years she was an exemplary member of that society, and became so thoroughly imbued with its leading points of faith and doctrine that she could ably defend her positions against the "Popular."

That the germs of obedience, and real love for God's truth were in her, is proven by the fact, that when some twelve years since, the glorious gospel of the future age and eternal life as God's gift, etc., were first preached to her, she received the engrafted word with meekness. Always a diligent reader of the Scriptures, she now became an ardent searcher; and after the arduous duties of the day were over, and all the rest of the family had retired, she would devote hours to the promises of God to the fathers, and to the record God has given of his Son.

As might be expected, no one could long be in her company without discovering that she had been with Jesus, for she seemed obliged to talk about the great truths that center in him, and the various deputations from her old religious associates, to try and reclaim her, soon found they were no match for the midnight searcher, and could only listen to the quiet stream of truth that flowed from her lips.

Always delicate, and often brought very low, she had familiarized herself with the enemy so as to hate him more, and dread him less; and so, while preparing little presents for her children and grand-children on her 70th birthday, when they were expected to gather around her, she was obliged to quit it, and face him. Time only being allowed her to testify that the faith that had sustained her in life was supporting her in the hour of death; and affectionately exhorting those for whom she had daily prayed to believe God's precious truth and wait for his Son from heaven.

The writer addressed a large audience under the trees of a mountain Cemetery north of Woodbury, from the words of Jesus, John xi. 25, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," and then we sorrowfully laid her away. Yes, indeed sorrowfully, not that we doubted she would live again, but we loved her, and doubted if we could find a volunteer to fill her place in the broken rank.

That the good God and Father above would soon send his glorious Son to gather from their dusty beds all who sleep in Jesus, and change the living faithful is the fervent prayer of,

M. JOSLIN.

A Song of the Wheat.

Over the wheat the oriole flew,
A flash of flame; and he shook the dew
From his wings and sang, in the warm noontide,
Over the wheat, over the wheat.

Over the wheat the darkness flowed,
And the twilight hid and the day showed
All night long, to the low-lying heat,
Over the wheat, over the wheat.

Over the wheat the soft rain fell,
The dust and the heat and the drought to quell;
Then the harmonious pulses beat
Over the wheat, over the wheat.

Over the wheat the long hours passed
Till ripe for the harvest it stood at last;
So close, so sure, so strange, so sweet,
Grows the golden wheat.

Over the wheat the silent sky
Opened out the stars on high;
Under the wheat the silent ground
Deepened down to the dark profound.

And the birds that over the wheat did flow
Could tell of the secret as much as you
For never a wise man lived who knew
How out of the dark and the light it grew.

Only a Ribbon.

A touching act of kindness was done lately by the little Princess Irene, one of the younger daughters of the late Princess Alice of Hesse. In a hospital at Eastbourne, England, endowed by the Princess Alice, is a boy of eight, who was condemned by the surgeons to lose both legs and an arm. The child bore the operation, and the long illness that followed, with great patience. The story came to the ears of the little princess, and she carried to him a royal gift in money, and (as the most precious thing she could give) the portrait of her mother. "The little fellow, with his remaining hand," we are told, "wrote a touching letter of thanks."

In one of the London hospitals, about a year ago, an assistant-surgeon became interested in one of the patients, a poor child of ten, suffering from hip disease. She lay day after day in her little white cot, with nothing to occupy her thoughts but her pain. The young surgeon saw her one day trying to make a doll of her finger, playing with it, and at last, giving it up with a weary sigh, turning to watch the sunlight creep over her bed, as he had done for months.

[redacted] afternoon, the doctor, passing a shop, bought a long, soft ribbon, of an exquisite rose color, and gave it to little Katey. She was breathless with pleasure, smoothed it out, held it up, soft and shining, in the sun, and looked at her friend speechless with tears of ecstasy. From that time she was rich. The nurse told the doctor, a week later, that the child played with the ribbon all day, twisted it about her head, playing that she was a bride, a princess, a fairy; held it in her hand while she slept, and laid it, folded in paper, under her pillow at night.

It was found necessary after two months to perform a capital operation on the child, one which, if unsuccessful, is fatal. It was done by two of the foremost surgeons in London. When the poor little sufferer was laid upon the table, she cried for Dr. S——. "He is all the friend I have," she sobbed.

"Send for him," said the surgeon, and the young assistant, blushing furiously, was brought in. He held one of Katey's hands; the other was clenched tightly over a pink roll, which dropped from the grasp during the operation. When the effect of the ether passed, she opened her eyes and looked at Dr. S——.

"My ribbon," she whispered.

He gave it to her, while the surgeons and nurses stood gravely silent. The operation had been unsuccessful. But little Katey smiled happily into the face of her friend, and hugging the faded bit of silk, fell asleep forever. It was but a trifling gift, yet it had brightened the child's last days with thoughts of beauty and pleasure and loving kindness.

Is so much not within our power?—N. Y. Witness.

Katy Did It.

"Katy-did-it! Katy-did-it!" sang the katy-dids in the trees. Who was Katy, and what did she do, that all night long the insects sang about her?

Who was Katy? Why, a pretty little girl, six years old—such a merry little girl that every one loved her. Katy had come out to stay with Grandma Lee. Mamma's sister was very sick, and mamma had gone to nurse her. Papa sent Katy and little Tom, with their nurse, to grandma's.

Grandma Lee lived in the country, in a large house, with a beautiful garden to it. Back of the garden was the barn, where Katy liked to hunt for eggs, and play in the hay. So Katy played from morning till night at grandma's, and was very happy. One warm afternoon she thought she would go into the parlor, and get a book that had beautiful pictures in it. It was on a table that had a scarf hanging over the edge. When Katy reached to get it she pulled the table-scarf off. Down fell the book and a large vase, which was broken all to pieces.

"Oh, dear!" said Katy, "grandma will be so angry. I am afraid to tell her."

Little Tom had followed Katy in, and now stood beside her. Just then Katy heard grandma coming, and ran out on the porch. She heard grandma say, "You naughty boy, to break grandma's pretty vase!"

Then Katy thought, "Grandma will never know it was I who did it; for Tom cannot talk, and he is always breaking things. I won't tell her I did it." So she ran away, and did not come in till grandma called. Then grandma told her that Tom had gone into the parlor, and had broken the vase by pulling the scarf off the table.

Katy did not say a word, but she could hardly eat her supper. When little Tom came up to kiss her "Good-night," before nurse put him to bed, she almost cried. But she thought it would not do to tell then. She was glad when bed-time came, she felt so unhappy.

Katy slept in a little room that opened into grandma's. The moon was shining into the room, and it was almost as light as day. She heard something which sounded like "Katy-did-it! Katy-did-it! Katy-did-it!"

She pulled the sheet over her head to shut out the noise; but still she heard the singing, "Katy-did-it!"

"They mean me," said Katy. "I wish they would stop." But they only sang the louder.

Katy could stand it no longer. She jumped out of bed and ran into grandma's room, crying, "Oh, grandma, grandma. Katy did it!"

Grandma jumped up, saying, "Why, child! what's the matter?"

"Oh, grandma," sobbed Katy. "Tom did not do it; Katy did it."

"Did what?" asked grandma.

"I broke the vase," replied Katy, "and then let you think Tom did it."

Then Katy told grandma how the Katy-dids would not let her sleep till she had told her all about it. Grandma said she hoped Katy would never be again afraid to say, "Katy did it" when she had [redacted] think, after that, she [redacted]—Our Little Ones.

Three Crowns and all for Servants.

Have you ever remarked that the three crowns spoken of are all for servants? First, there is a crown of righteousness: "I have fought the good fight, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown which the righteous judge will give me in that day." There is a crown of life: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Then the climax—may we all claim it—you that feed the flock, you that go breking the bread of life and telling of the Savior's love and trying to win others to life: "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." It is the business of a good master to supply his servants. You do not expect your servants to serve you out of their means, but out of your means. I have known the servants in a house—I wish there were more of them, but they are a generation that is fast dying out—that were so incorporated into the family, felt so identified with the property of the family, that I have heard them speak of "our horses," "our coaches," "our children." Brethren, your privilege as a servant of God is to claim all he is and all he has to strengthen you for your service. Is not this a great privilege—the privilege of service?—Marcus Rainsford.

THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD. PSALM XXIII.

The Lord is my Shepherd, oh, words full of peace!
How sweetly they cause all desponding to cease!
My soul as it hears them, is hushed into rest,
With calmness, and gladness, and glory possessed.

The Lord is my Shepherd, the God of all might,
The Thought of my weakness no more can affright;
He bears me, and carries me all the way long:
I have to be helpless, while he is so strong.

The Lord is my shepherd, my footsteps to guide,
From harm to protect me, for want to provide;
He is mine just as truly as though I alone
Were tended and cherished, and loved for his own.

He "maketh me to lie down" with a tender constraint,
Which thoughts cannot picture, and words cannot paint:
He gently compels me to cease from all strife,
To rest on His love, and to live in His life.

He goeth before who "restoreth my soul;"
Beside me, "the waters of quietness" roll;
Rich pastures and mercy are following me,
And all round about me the green pastures lie.

He "leadeth me" on where the calm waters flow,
He keeps me "beside" them wherever I go:
O glorious paradox, wondrous and blest!
He leads me along, yet I'm lying at rest.

I fear not "the shadows of death" and the grave,
For he who is "with" me is mighty to save;
The terrible substance, O Lord, was for Thee.
Now only the "shadow" can fall upon me.

I have not within the dark vale to abide,
'Tis but a walk through to the opposite side;
And even the shadow the darkness can wear,
Since Thou, blessed Jesus, will shine on me there.

Thou spreadest my table in sight of my foes,
They stand and look on but they cannot oppose:
My cup runneth over with joy and with praise,
Thy goodness and mercy shall crown all my days.

A king and a priest I am made now by Thee,
Thy house, O my Lord, shall my dwelling-place be;
There, under Thy Shadow, my soul finds her rest;
Also dwelling in Jesus, I know I am blest.

THE LOCALITY OF EDEN.—NO. II.

Many have been the sites claimed for Eden, and it has been assigned to regions far remote from where it was at all likely to have been. Some travellers have gone out, and though acquainted with what the Bible says as to the country where it was, seem to have preferred to give more credence to more dim native traditions rather than [illegible] of accounting for these traditions in a philosophical and common sense way, as we have done, they were more inclined to fall in with and endorse the vague and unlikely guesses of the heathen. Hence, one listening to the Cingalese places it in Ceylon, another in Cashmere, one in Mexico, and so on—thus increasing the confusion, instead of going to seek for it at once in the quarter where Scripture indicates. Colonel Chesney (and, I think, some others) place it in Armenia, at a part where four great rivers have their source—namely, the Euphrates, the Tigris, the Araxes, and the Halys; and takes the expression, 'was parted into four heads,' as signifying four different streams rising in the same neighborhood, and running in various directions, some north and some south. Other, again, have placed it in Georgia, or Colchis; and a recent writer has labored very ingeniously to prove that Eden was in Arabia Felix, or 'Araby the blest.' But there lies the strong objection against either of these views, that they are not east at all, in the strict sense of the word, for the first is but a few points east of north, and the latter but a little east of south of a line drawn through Canaan, or that wilderness to the south of it in which Moses is supposed to have lived when he wrote the Pentateuch. Granted that the term 'Kedem'—'the East'—may have been used in a general sort of way by the Egyptians and Hebrews, as indicating both north-east and south-east, yet it will scarcely do to place under this head regions that really are north and south to the country in which the sacred historian lived. For if Moses wrote this whilst in Midian—which is most likely—or during the time of the sojourn in the wilderness of Sinai, at the Exodus, these countries would be almost due north and south of where he dwelt. For this reason, then, faithful exactness requires us to seek a middle region lying intermediate betwixt Armenia and Arabia Felix, and more truly east from Midian, Sinai, and Egypt. This would point to the country lying round the head of the Persian Gulf, or not very far from it. Here, then, have we the best evidence to look for it, and may safely venture to discard all other theories of its locality, however plausibly and ingeniously presented, because none others will tally with the requirements of the sacred record. So we have brushed them away from us, both on the right hand and on the left, and made straight for the mark in the quarter where faithful exactitude requires it to be. We shall only quote more fully those authorities who place it in this quarter, because we believe this is the only correct view.

The Euphrates, is a land-mark of itself, and so is the Tigris; but as the first is a great river, some 1700 miles long, it will not do to place Paradise anywhere in the northern part of its course, both because, as we have shown, that would be making it north, instead of east, from Moses' standpoint; and also because Armenia, and all the highlands through which the river flows, are much too cold (in winter especially), to be the abode of two pure persons, even if they lived in a sheltered valley.

One thing should be borne in mind at the outset—namely, to keep the distinction between the country and the garden of Eden, for they are not the same thing. So the land should be sought first, if possible, and then Paradise. Eden may have been, and probably was, a country of considerable extent (though whether it was so large as some would fain make it, is by no means provable); but the garden was a much smaller portion of it, situated towards its eastern side. It bore a similar relation to the land of Eden, as what a nobleman's park or estate bears to the country in which it is situated—namely, as forming a very small part of the country, even though as a park or an estate it should be considered to be quite large, and might cover many square miles. Thus it was with Adam's Paradise. Planted and enclosed by the Lord and his co-operating Elohim or angels, it was designed as a pleasure garden and home for the new rational being whom he had lately created outside its precincts. Into this home of delights did he lead the creature he had made, and install him in full possession, where everything was calculated to regale the senses, to feast the eyes, and to gratify the taste with the most delectable enjoyments.

NO ALLEGORY.

Others, seeing the contradictions and futile efforts which certain have made, seek to throw discredit on the whole account as being a true narrative of literal facts, and forthwith begin to write or talk nonsense about its being only 'a beautiful allegory,' as they are pleased to call it, and then proceed to guess out its [illegible] according to their own fancy, in the silly vaporings of their own 'sinful flesh,' for their talk is not any the less nonsense because they employ great ingenuity in trying to reduce Bible truth to moonshine; that is, to just nothing at all but a mere fiction which has no reality in it. But we denounce all such attempts to falsify God's Word, come from what source it may, and however cleverly, ingeniously, and prettily it may be done, and call it by its right name—pseudo-sophistical. For see where such mischievous work lands us! If the narrative of paradise be only an allegory, then it was no fact at all, but a mere fiction. If so, then the account of the temptation and the fall may be mere allegorical fictions also, and the curse, the penalty, and the promised Redeemer likewise—for the one involves the other by logical sequence through all the chain. So we would soon have to deny the facts of the creation, the fall, and the redemption altogether! When men begin this course of taking such liberties with God's Word, and trifling with its plain statements, there is no telling where they may stop; for they are like a person commencing to slide down a greased plank to destruction. No, not the account of the trial of our first parents in the garden is a true and solemn narrative of facts, which we, their posterity, are tasting the effects of to this day.

Rightly discarding the attempts of those who explain it all away, or those who, heedless of Bible finger-posts, are looking for it too far off; we join in the company of those who seek it in the vicinity of the great central land in the region towards which the Bible points—that is, somewhere near the two great rivers named—namely, the Hiddekel, or Tigris, and the Phrat, or Euphrates. For it seems so strange why men should ever think of looking for it so far off the mark, when these two rivers are so well known, and are given to serve as a guide to the region. But one cause of it has been due to these parties translating these proper names and taking their meaning instead. Thus, as the Hebrew name Phrat means, by way of pre-eminence or distinction, 'the river,' 'the great river,' so by not taking it as a proper name, it is an easy matter to apply it to any large stream we choose at our fancy, such as the Nile, Ganges, or Mississippi. Now, as all proper names originally had a meaning of some kind, we can, if so disposed, play fast and loose with them at pleasure, and apply them to anything but the right subject that will bear the least resemblance to their meaning, and so might get rid of proper names altogether! See where that would land us! But this is not the fair and honest way. The true course is not to ask what is the meaning of the proper name, but what particular stream was indicated by it? to what river were the thoughts of the speakers directed when the term was used? Beyond all doubt, it was to that celebrated river on whose banks stood Babylon, and which ran along to the east of Syria. To the original Hebrew name, Phrat, the Greek put the prefix eu, which signifies 'good,' in the sense of bountiful, noble, or excellent; therefore 'the bountiful Phrat,' 'the noble or excellent river,' is the import of the Greek name, and was no doubt given both on account of its fame and celebrity, as the largest river in all western Asia, and also because of the wondrous fertility which it caused to all the regions through which it passed. Here, we have a land-mark at once which all the subsequent calamity of the deluge has not been able to efface. Somewhere, then, on its shores may we reasonably look for what we want; not that we can hope to fix the definite spot where stood 'The Garden of the Lord,' but only make an approximation of its probable site. So now for some of our promised quotations and authorities.

RAWLINSON'S VIEW.

The following appeared in the Philadelphia Ledger, respecting Sir H. Rawlinson, a few years ago:—
